It appears that the pleader was charged with aiding and abetting another pleader, C in committing breach of trust of a sum of Rs. 1,002 withdrawn on 14th November 1925, by the said C from the Court, the sum being due to one Bholaram Kundulal. He was convicted under Ss. 406 and 109, I. P. C., by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six weeks. He was also charged under S. 409, I. P. C., with criminal breach of trust for misappropriation of a sum of Rs. 1,350 drawn on behalf of his client, one Sudarsan-chandra Mallik, and he was sentenced to another six weeks' imprisonment on this charge. The pleader moved the High Court and C. C. Ghose and Gregory, JJ. reduced the sentences, observing in their judgment that he has tried to make amends after his conviction. Mr. H. D. Bose has appeared on behalf of the pleader and has argued that the money misappropriated had been paid up and that, as the pleader was a junior pleader of only six years' standing and that as regards the first offence, the Presidency Magistrate observed in his judgment that he was to some extent the victim of the co-accused C a merely nominal punishment should be given.

When a pleader does an act, which involves dishonesty, it is for the interest of the suitors that the Court should interpose and prevent a man, guilty of such misconduct, from acting as a pleader of the Court. In this case, the pleader had been proceeded against criminally and has been convicted of breach of trust and abetment of the same and, upon those convictions being brought to our notice, it is the bounden duty of the Court to act. It is not permissible to us to go behind the conviction, nor has learned counsel for the pleader asked us to do so. In our opinion, the convictions followed by the sentences were sufficient, without further enquiry, to justify the High Court in taking proceedings under S. 12 of the Act, for it is now firmly established that the pleader cannot be allowed to have indirect appeals against the judgment of the Chief Presidency Magistrate confirmed by the High Court: In the matter of Rajendra Nath Mukerji (1). Where a pleader has been convicted of criminal offences, for misconduct committed strictly in his professional character, that prima facie, at all events, renders him unfit to be a member of the honourable profession. I do not, however, mean to say that wherever a pleader has been convicted of a criminal offence the Court is bound to strike him off the roll. The use of the word 'may' in S. 12 after the words "the High Court" shows that the discretion of the Court in each particular case is absolute. In this connexion, the following observations of Lord Esher, Master of the Rolls, are instructive and may be usefully referred to :

"Where a man has been convicted of a criminal offence, that prima facie, at all events, does make him a person unfit to be a member of the honourable profession. That must not be carried to the length of saying that, wherever a solicitor has been convicted of a criminal offence, the Court is bound to strike him off the roll. That was argued on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society in the case of Re a Solicitor, Ex parte Incorporated Law Society (2). It was there contended that, where a solicitor had been convicted of a crime, it followed, as a matter of course, that he must be struck off; but Baron Pollock and Manisty, J., held that, although his being convicted of a crime prima facie made him liable to be struck off the roll, the Court had a discretion and must inquire into what kind of a crime it is of which he has been convicted, and the Court may punish him to a less extent than if he had not been punished in the criminal proceeding. As to striking off the roll, I have no doubt that the Court might, in some cases, say 'under these circumstances we shall do no more than admonish him', or the Court might say 'we shall do no more than admonish him and make him pay the costs of the application'; or the Court might suspend him or the Court might strike him off the roll. The discretion of the Court in each particular case is absolute. I think the law as to the power of the Court is quite clear: see In re, Weare (3)".

Bearing these observations in mind, let us consider what are the circumstances of mitigation in this case. There is the fact that he has paid the sums withdrawn by him. On the other hand, it is to be noticed that the repayment was after the discovery of the fraud. If he had spontaneously come forward and acknowledged the truth and of his own accord had made good the loss his clients had sustained through the embezzlement in question, I think that would have entitled him to much more favourable consideration than the mere fact of his payment on the discovery of the fraud. He paid the money more for the purpose of protecting himself from the consequences of his misconduct rather than from any contrition on his part and desire to make good the mischief he had done. But still, taking into consideration the facts that he has paid the money, that he was, to some extent, the victim of circumstances, in that he associated himself with his senior pleader, whose conduct was known not to be above board, that he has conducted himself well and had done nothing wrong since his last offence, that he, through his counsel, has expressed his repentance and has given us the assurance that he would lead an honourable life henceforth, we think we are not called upon to go to the extent of striking him off the roll; but we cannot pass the case over without marking our sense of the misconduct of the pleader in the two instances of misappropriation which are found to have taken place. The least that we can do is to say that he must be suspended from practising as a pleader for the period of one year from date. For these reasons I agree with my learned brother in the order which he proposes to make.

S.N./R.K.

Order accordingly.

1930 Cr. Cases 859

(Calcutta)

SUHRAWARDY AND COSTELLO, JJ.

Fazlar Rahaman and others—Appellants.

Emperor

Criminal Appeals Nos. 984 and 985 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. No. 29 of 1930, Decided on 5th May 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 253—Magistrate can discharge accused at any time before recording evidence and in course of recording evidence if charge is groundless—Though as a general rule when a Magistrate proceeds to take evidence he must take the whole of the evidence.

A Magistrate can discharge an accused at any stage before recording any evidence or in the course of recording evidence if he is of opinion that the charge is groundless: 34 I. C. 305 and 10 Cal. 67, Ref.: A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 129, Dist. [P 861 C 2, P 862 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 253 and 476—Cases held groundless and Magistrate's view supported by police report—Complainant need not be asked to prove his case.

Where the Magistrate has held that the case against the accused is groundless and has before him the report of the police in support of his view it is not necessary that he should again ask the complainant to prove his case which the Magistrate has disbelieved even before he examines the complainant and his witnesses: 5 C. W. N. 106, Ref. [P 862 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 476—"Preliminary enquiry"—Meaning and scope explained.

Section 476 gives the discretion to the Court to hold or not to hold a preliminary enquiry. If the Court is of opinion that no preliminary enquiry is necessary it may at once make the complaint. If, on the other hand, it thinks that it is desirable to have a preliminary enquiry, it may adopt any course for the purpose of such an enquiry. The words "preliminary enquiry" under S. 476 may be co-extensive with if not wider than the words "enquire into the case" in S. 202, Criminal P. C. A. I. R. 1928 All. 21, Ref.: A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 310; 43 Bom. 300 and 49 I. C. 917 Dist. [P 862 C 2, P 863 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 476—Any person who appears to have committed an offence under S. 195 (1) (b) and not only parties to proceedings is contemplated by S. 476.

Section 476 is not restricted to the party making the complaint or actually before the Court, but is wide enough to include any person who appears to have committed an offence mentioned in S. 195 (1) (b) which is not restricted to parties to the proceedings like Cl. (c) of that section. The Court has therefore jurisdiction to prosecute a person who causes a false complaint to be lodged. All that S. 476 requires is that the Court should be satisfied that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an enquiry should be made into an offence.

which appears to it to have been committed in or in relation to a judicial proceeding. It does not speak of a party to the proceeding.

Mahendra Kumar Ghose and Sures Chandra Talukdar—for Appellants.

Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Suhrawardy, J.—These two appeals and the revision case are connected and arise out of the same matter. Aziz Mia, the appellant in appeal No. 935 and the petitioner in revision case No. 29 of 1930, filed a complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate against one Afaq Ali on the allegation that he had given him Rs. 50 to be made over to Fazlar Rahaman, the appellant in appeal No. 934 of 1929, and the money was misappropriated by Afaq Ali. The learned Magistrate ordered the issue of a warrant on a charge under S. 406, I. P. C. The case was adjourned from time to time as the warrant was not returned. On 1st October 1929 the warrant came back executed, but as the accused did not appear a proclamation was ordered to be issued. The order was thus recorded:

"Proclamation dates: date of publication 21st October 1929 put up 28th October 1929. Date of appearance 21st November 1929."

On 21st October the accused appeared in Court, surrendered and was released on bail. The order passed was:

"Recall proclamation. Inform complainant fixing date 28th October 1929."

It was the date originally fixed for the matter to be put up before the Magistrate after the publication of the proclamation. On 28th October the following order was passed:

"Complainant absent said to have gone to his native country. Accused says that the complainant was seen in Court. Pleader for complainant now asks for a month's time. This is absurd. The accused is discharged under S. 253, Criminal P. C."

The certified copy of the order which has been placed before us shows that the accused was discharged under S. 203, but it appears from the Magistrate's explanation that the order was passed under S. 253; and as the original record is not before us we must take it that the order passed by the Magistrate on 28th October 1929 was under S. 253; and it is conceded that if it was passed under that section it must have been passed under Cl. (2) of that section. Thereafter Afaq Ali applied to the Magistrate to prosecute the complainant Aziz Mia for having brought a false case against him. The Magistrate examined Afaq Ali and sent the matter to the C. I. D. for enquiry and report. On receipt of the report the learned Magistrate lodged a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C., in the Court of the Third Presidency Magistrate for prosecuting Aziz Mia and Fazlar Rahaman under S. 211, I. P. C. The two appeals are by Aziz Mia and Fazlar Rahaman against this order passed by the Magistrate under S. 476, Criminal P. C. The revision case is directed against the order of the Magistrate dated 28th October 1929. It will be convenient to deal with the revision case first.

It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that the Magistrate was not justified in passing the order discharging the accused under S. 253 (2) in this case. The charge against the accused was cognizable and non-compoundable and hence the Magistrate could not pass an order under S. 259. It is contended that in a cognizable and non-compoundable case the Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case even if the complainant is absent and to carry on the prosecution on behalf of the State; and in support of this case reliance is placed on the case of Maung Thu Daw v. U. Po Nyun (1). There it was held, and rightly held, that where there is reasonable ground for believing that an offence has been committed, the Magistrate should not, because the complainant is absent, dismiss the case and discharge the accused but the final responsibility for the conduct of such case rests with the State, and once the machinery of the law has been set in motion the right of arresting its progress rests with the State alone. This brings us to the consideration of the question as to whether there was reasonable ground for believing that an offence had been committed. The case brought by the complainant against the accused is of a class of cases which are fairly common in Calcutta and such cases by their recurrence have won the name of "Noakhali cases." It is to be noted that both parties hail from Noakhali. In such cases the usual complaint is that the complainant had entrusted some money to the accused who was going home to make it over to someone in the native village of the complainant but the accused instead of so doing appropriated the money to himself. Some of these cases may be true, but the learned Magistrate who has wide experience of these matters observes that many of them are brought for the purpose of satisfying private grudge. In the present case the defence of the accused was that he had never come to Calcutta and had never been entrusted with money by the complainant, that he was the maternal uncle-in-law of Fazlar Rahaman and had some disputes with him regarding some land and that this case was brought against him by Fazlar Rahaman through the complainant for the purpose of harassing him and putting him in trouble. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate is of opinion that the case against the accused is not true considering the conduct of the complainant and the other circumstances in the case. It has further been broadly argued that the Magistrate had no power under S. 253 (2) to discharge the accused, without hearing the evidence for the prosecution merely because the complainant was absent on the date of hearing.

If the Magistrate is satisfied that prima facie there is a case against the accused or has reason to suspect that an offence has been committed he has power to proceed under S. 252, Criminal P. C., but if on the date of hearing he has reason to suspect that the case is a false one and that there is no reasonable ground for suspecting that an offence has been committed, he has the right to proceed under S. 253 which is couched in wide terms. That section makes it clear that if a Magistrate after taking evidence under S. 252 finds that no case has been made out he may discharge the accused, and it further says that nothing in that section (that is taking of the evidence under S. 252 and making such examination of the accused and finding that no case has been made out against the accused), shall be deemed to prevent the Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case if for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate he considers the charge to be groundless.

Under Cl. 1 the Magistrate may discharge the accused if after recording the evidence for the prosecution he finds that no case has been made out against him. Under Cl. 2 he may discharge the accused at any stage even before recording any evidence if he considers the charge to be groundless. The wording of the section is so plain that it is hardly necessary to cite any authority for the view thus expressed. But it has been so held in Gobinda Das v. Dulall Das (2), where the learned Judges say :

"Having regard to the terms of S. 259 we are of opinion that in warrant cases not coming within that section except under the last clause of S. 253, which is not applicable, a Magistrate is not competent to pass an order of dismissal or discharge in consequence of the absence of the complainant."

It is further remarked that a Magistrate can pass an order of dismissal or discharge an accused in consequence of the absence of the complainant under Cl. 1, S. 253. Our attention was also drawn to a recent decision of the Madras High Court in Mahomed Sheriff Sahib v. Abdul Karim Sahib (3). In that case the Magistrate had discharged the accused and refused to examine all the witnesses cited by the complainant holding that no case had been made out against him. It was held that the Magistrate could not hold that no case had been made out against the accused without examining all the witnesses for the prosecution; and that if he purported to discharge the accused under the last clause of S. 253 he did not in his order say that the charge was groundless which was a different thing from saying that a case had not been made out. It is further observed there that where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence a Magistrate cannot hold the charge to be groundless unless he knows what is the sort of evidence that is going to be adduced to prove it. The rule that can be deduced from this case is that where the Magistrate proceeds to take evidence he must take the whole of the evidence before holding that no case has been made out against the accused. I do not quarrel with this view, but I hold that he can discharge the accused at any stage before recording any evidence or if in the course of recording evidence he is of opinion that the charge is groundless: see the case of V. R. Alexander v. P. W. Connors (4). The order of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate does not contain the word "groundless" but reading it as a whole and considering it with the explanation submitted by the Magistrate which we are bound to do under S. 441, Criminal P. C., it seems that he believed that the charge was groundless in view of the absence of the complainant, the statement made by the accused and the further fact that no steps were taken by the complainant to have the sale proclamation issued. The learned Magistrate further disbelieved the story that the complainant had gone to his native country; and he found at the time when he passed the order that the case was one of the class which he characterizes as Noakhali cases was brought for the purpose of settling private disputes. This ground accordingly must fail.

(3) A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 129=28 Cr. L. J. 995=105 I. C. 819=51 Mld. 185.

The next ground taken in the revision case by Mr. Ghose is that full opportunity should have been given to the complainant before ordering his prosecution for an offence under S. 211. It appears that on 6th December the complainant applied to the learned Magistrate to revive his complaint which the Magistrate declined to do. It is not necessary for us to consider that order. The present rule is directed against the order discharging the accused. Mr. Ghose has relied on certain cases of which it is enough to cite one, namely the case of Lalji Gope v. Giridhari Chowdhury (5), where it was held that the Magistrate does not exercise a proper discretion, who on receipt of a police report that the complaint is false forthwith orders the complainant to be prosecuted under S. 211, I. P. C., and rejects the prayer of the complainant for hearing the complaint. But if the Magistrate examines the complainant and his witnesses and comes to the conclusion that the charge is false he can then proceed under S. 476, Criminal P. C. This case and other cases similar to it proceed on the assumption that the complaint of the complainant has not been finally and judicially disposed of. But where the Magistrate has held that the case against the accused is groundless and has before him the report of the police in support of his view it is not necessary that he should again ask the complainant to prove his case which the Magistrate has disbelieved even before he examines the complainant and his witnesses. The procedure recommended in cases ordering prosecution under S. 211 is that the complainant if his complaint is pending should be given an opportunity of proving his case before he is directed to be prosecuted. In the present case the complaint had been finally disposed of by the Magistrate under S. 253 and therefore there was nothing before him into which he should make any further enquiry. This ground also fails, and in this view the rule is discharged.

With regard to the appeal by the complainant Aziz Mia the real ground is that no complaint should have been made under S. 476 before the complainant had been given opportunity of proving his complaint. This point has already been disposed of. The other point raised is that before making a complaint under S. 476 the learned Magistrate had asked the C. I. D. to report on the complaint. This inquiry was a preliminary enquiry as contemplated by S. 476. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the preliminary enquiry under S. 476 should be conducted by the Court and not by any other agency as is provided for by S. 202, Criminal P. C. The wording of S. 476 is so plain that it can hardly be argued that the words "such preliminary enquiry" in the section should be qualified by reading into it "by the Court itself" words which the legislature has not thought fit to use. The section simply says that if the Court is of opinion that an offence has been committed in respect of a judicial proceeding before it such Court may after such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary record a finding etc. This section gives the discretion to the Court to hold or not to hold a preliminary enquiry. If the Court is of opinion that no preliminary enquiry is necessary it may at once make the complaint. If, on the other hand, it thinks that it is desirable to have a preliminary enquiry, he may adopt any course for the purpose of such an enquiry. The words "preliminary enquiry" under S. 476 may be co-extensive with if not wider than the words "enquire into the case" in S. 202, Criminal P. C. There is no direct authority on this point but the question did come up for observations in some cases. In Chamari Singh v. Public Prosecutor of Patna (6), the Sessions Judge made a complaint under S. 476 and sent the case to the Magistrate to enquire if any offence was committed by the accused and, if so, to prosecute him under certain sections of the Criminal Procedure Code. This procedure the learned Judges condemned and observed:

"It is for the Court acting under S. 476 to make any enquiry that is necessary and then to make a complaint against the person or persons who, he is satisfied, have committed an offence."

They do not mean to lay down that it is the Court acting under S. 476 which must hold the enquiry. What they mean is that the Court acting under that section should make an enquiry and make a complaint as the result of such enquiry and not delegate the function to another Court for they observe that this section does not contemplate that the Court should send the case to a Magistrate for enquiry as to whether an offence has been really committed and for prosecution if the Magistrate is so satisfied. This decision does not help the appellant as it only lays down that an enquiry preliminary to a complaint should be made by the Court which does not necessarily mean by the Court itself examining witnesses. The case of Emperor v. Waman Dinkar (7), is not also in point. It does not support the appellant but it may be turned against him on some of the observations made in that case. There the Assistant Collector who had sanctioned the prosecution made a complaint by holding a preliminary enquiry in the shape of a part by himself and the rest of it by the C. I. D. It was held that the Assistant Collector was bound to hold the whole enquiry himself as he had started it. In Raja Rao v. Emperor (8), the point on behalf of the accused was that they were not allowed at the preliminary enquiry to cross-examine the witnesses produced against them. Waller, J., observed:

"What a Court has to decide under S. 476 is: (a) whether an offence of the kind contemplated appears to have been committed, and (b) whether it is expedient in the interest of justice that it should be further enquired into. In order to arrive at a decision, the Court may, if it thinks fit, hold such preliminary enquiry as it considers necessary. The nature, method and extent of the preliminary enquiry are, it seems to me, entirely at its discretion."

This observation of the learned Judge is against the appellant in so far as it holds that "the nature, method and extent" of the enquiry are in the discretion of the Judge. The method adopted in the present case by the learned Magistrate was to have an enquiry made by the C. I. D. The only case which lends some support to the appellant's contention is the case of Sakhi Rai v. Emperor (9) a decision of a single Judge. The facts shortly stated were that a person lodged a complaint before a Sub-Divisional Officer who without examining him on oath ordered the complaint to be put up with the police report. He subsequently passed an order calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S. 211. In showing cause the complainant produced several witnesses who were examined under the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer by different Subordinate Magistrates. On a perusal of the police report and the evidence recorded by the Magistrates the Sub-Divisional Officer made a complaint against a witness for the complainant under S. 476 on a charge under S. 193, Criminal P. C. The learned Judge held that the complainant could be called upon to show cause why he should not be prosecuted only under S. 476 and that the preliminary enquiry to be held under S. 476 could not be directly held by any other Magistrate except the Sub-Divisional Officer himself who on the police report thought that the complaint was a false one. In that point of view the learned Judge was of opinion that the evidence recorded by the subordinate Magistrates was recorded without jurisdiction and could not form the basis of prosecution. On the facts of that case the decision is right as the Sub-Divisional Officer could not without entrusting the holding of the preliminary enquiry to a subordinate Magistrate, merely delegate the work of recording evidence to such Magistrate while himself assuming to hold the preliminary enquiry. But if the learned Judge meant to lay down the law generally that the preliminary enquiry could not be made except by the Court acting under S. 476, I beg to express my respectful dissent. The question now before us was not directly raised in that case and the observation made by the learned Judge must be taken in connexion with the particular facts of that case. On the other hand, a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Shabbir Hasan v. Emperor (10) supports the view I have expressed. Dalal, J. is reported to have there said :

"If the civil Court so desires an enquiry may be ordered by the police but in that case when the police papers arrive the civil Court has to determine whether it is necessary to take action against particular persons under S. 476."

The result of an examination of these cases and of the consideration of the words of S. 476 itself is that the preliminary enquiry mentioned in that section may be conducted by the Court either by itself or by any other method available. This appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed.

The next appeal (No. 934 of 1929) is by Fazlar Rahaman who was not the complainant nor does it appear from the record that he was in any way connected with the complainant. Afaq Ali's case is that this man was the wire-puller behind the screen. His case is that he had a long standing dispute with the appellant Fazlar Rahaman for possession of a plot of land in their native country and that the complainant Aziz Mia was set up by this appellant to lodge a false complaint against him. The Criminal Investigation Department held an enquiry into this matter and reported against both. On receipt of the report the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate said that it was expedient for the ends of justice that an enquiry should be made into an offence under S. 211, I. P. C., against both. Under that section a person who institutes a criminal proceeding as also a person who causes such proceeding to be instituted may both be guilty of an offence under that section. The question before us is whether this Fazlar Rahaman can be said to have committed an offence in or in relation to a proceeding in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate within the meaning of S. 476, Criminal P. C. That section is not restricted to the party making the complaint or actually before the Court but is wide enough to include any person who appears to have committed an offence mentioned in S. 195 (1) (b), which is not restricted to parties to the proceeding like Cl. (c) of that section. The Court has therefore jurisdiction to prosecute a person who causes a false complaint to be lodged. All that S. 476 requires is that the Court should be satisfied that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an enquiry should be made into an offence which appears to it to have been committed in or in relation to a judicial proceeding. It does not speak of a party to the proceeding. An offence enumerated in S. 195 (1) (b) may be committed by a person who is not a party to the proceeding but if the Court is satisfied that such an offence in relation to a judicial proceeding has been committed, it can lodge a complaint under S. 476 against any person committing the offence : see Shabbir Hasan's case (10). We agree with the view taken by the Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court in Emperor v. Syadkhan (11). We think therefore that the order passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate sanctioning the prosecution of Fazlar Rahaman is not illegal. This appeal also is accordingly dismissed.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 189 and 191 of 1929, Decided on 10th December 1929, from judgment of Sess. Judge, Sukkur.

(a) Penal Code, S. 302—Mere fact that conviction is based on circumstantial evidence is no reason why lesser sentence should be passed—Criminal trial—Circumstantial evidence

In a case of murder the mere fact that the conviction is based on circumstantial evidence is no reason why a lesser sentence should be passed. If the case though depending on circumstantial evidence, is perfectly clear and conclusive and excludes all other reasonable hypotheses except the guilt of the accused, death sentence can be passed : 76 *I. (b) Criminal Trial—(Per Percival, J. C., and Wild, A. J. C.) Accused committing criminal offence—It is no palliation of his guilt that to absolve himself from punishment he commits another more grievous offence, namely murder—(Per Rupchand A. J. C.) It is not improper to inflict lesser sentence where there are circumstances demanding exercise of discretion, e. g., absence of strong motive coupled with possibility of murder having been committed, without premeditation and under temporary derangement of mind due to fear of being prosecuted and convicted of criminal offence—Penal Code, S. 302.

Per Percival, J. C. and Wild, A. J. C.—Where an accused commits one criminal offence, it is no palliation of his guilt that to absolve himself from punishment he commits another and more grievous offence, namely murder.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—It is not improper to inflict a lesser sentence where there are circumstances demanding the exercise of such discretion as for instance the absence of strong motive coupled with the possibility of the murder having been committed without premeditation and under temporary derangement of the mind due to the fear of being prosecuted and convicted for a criminal offence. But the exercise of such discretionary powers under S. 302, Penal Code, in any particular case must depend on its own facts considered in the light of various circumstances such as the magnitude of the mischief which the crime has a tendency to produce, the effect of the punishment in preventing similar crimes the motive or inducement to the crime, aggravating or instigating circumstances and the like. When murder is committed for lust or for rage perhaps it is necessary to take the life of the murderer not so much as to prevent him from committing similar offences but to serve as a deterrent to others for committing similar offences. Again when a crime of a particular character is rampant in any locality, extreme penalty of law is necessary to serve as a deterrent, [P 880 C 1, 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 302—Delay.

Per Wild, A. J. C.—In the case of an ordinary murder the delay in confirming sentence of death may be taken into consideration but not so when the murder is not ordinary : 21 I. C. 882, Dist. [P 884 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act, Ss. 159 and 161—(Per Rupchand, A. J. C.) It is extremely undesirable that notes of post-mortem examination be put in evidence through Medical Officer en bloc—(Per Percival, J. C.) Pleader for accused not objecting to notes going on record—No discrepancy between evidence of Medical Officer and notes—Placing of notes on record does not do any harm to accused.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—Ss. 159 to 161 permit a limited use being made of post-mortem notes of Medical Officer, namely that they be used by the witness who made them for refreshing his memory or by a party for the purpose of contradicting the witness. It is extremely undesirable that such notes of post-mortem examination be put in evidence through the Medical Officer en bloc as it is prejudicial to both parties. [P 876 C 1, 2]

Per Percival, J. C.—When pleader for accused takes no objection to the post-mortem notes going on the record and when there is no discrepancy between the post-mortem notes and the evidence of the Medical Officer, the placing of the post mortem notes does not do the accused any harm : 9 Cal. 455 and 27 Cal. 295, Ref. [P 868 C 2]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 342—S. 342 is intended for getting explanation if any which accused wishes to offer against case which Crown has proved by evidence on record—Questions in the nature of cross-examination or filling gaps in prosecution case should be avoided.

Per Percival, J. C.—The Court is bound to put to the accused the salient facts and circumstances of the case in a succinct form and to ask him if he has any explanation to offer but incriminating questions and questions in the nature of cross-examination must be avoided. [P 869 C 1]

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—The examination of the accused under S. 342 is intended for no other purpose than to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. The Court ought not to put questions which are intended to elicit answers calculated to supplement the case of the prosecution or to obtain admissions of fact which might incriminate the accused or to obtain information from him for the purpose of filling the gaps in the evidence of the prosecution : A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 361 ; 10 Mad. 295 ; 2 C. W. N. 709, 14 I. C. 667, 27 Mad. 238, 86 Mad. 457, 42 All. 522 and A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 225, Rel. on. [P 875 C 1]

(f) Evidence Act, S. 27—Scope.

Only so much of the information given by the accused as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered can be proved : A.I.R. 1929 Law, 344, Rel. on. [P 884 C 1]

(g) Criminal Trial, P. C., S. 162—Useful test of admissibility of statement made by accused to police is to ascertain purpose for which it is being put to by prosecution—Statement cannot be used for corroborating prosecution witnesses.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—The fact that an accused person has made a statement with the object of exculpating him or that his statement if believed would exculpate him does not by itself render it admissible in evidence. If notwithstanding the form in which it has been made the statement is nevertheless an admission of incriminating circumstances and is used by the prosecution as such, it is not admissible in evidence. A useful test as to the admissibility of a statement made by an accused person to the police is to ascertain the purpose for which it is being put to by the prosecution. Where the prosecution rely upon the statement as corroborative proof of certain facts deposed to by the prosecution witnesses and not with the object of proving their falsity, the statement is not admissible in evidence : A. I. R. 1925 Sind 237 ; 6 Bom. 34, 14 Bom. 260 (P.B.) ; 19 Bom. 362 and A.I.R. 1926 Sind 151, Rel. on. [P 874 C 2 ; P 875 C 1]

(h) Criminal Trial—As a general rule it is reasonable to expect that innocent person can explain suspicious circumstances connected with his person, dress or conduct—If he attempts to account for them, by false representation force of suspicious circumstances is thereby augmented.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—As a general rule to which however exceptions undoubtedly genuine from time to time occur, it is reasonable to expect that an innocent party can explain suspicious or circumstantial appearances connected with his person, dress or conduct that the desire of self-preservation if not a regard for truth will prompt him to do so and that whenever a party attempts no explanation of facts which he may reasonably be presumed to be able and interested to explain or attempt to account for them by false representation, the force of suspicious circumstances proved against him is thereby augmented. [P 877 C 1, 2]

(i) Criminal Trial—Crime proved to have been committed by other evidence, then motive is immaterial—Weak case cannot, however, be strengthened by motive.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—It is well settled that on the one hand absence of ascertainable motive comes to nothing if the crime is proved to have been committed by other evidence, and on the other to make out a weak case by way of motive apparently tending towards possible crime is a very unsatisfactory and dangerous process. [P 878 C 2]

(j) Sind Courts Acts, S. 9(c)—Third Judge is not restricted to matters in difference.

Per Wild, A. J. C.—S. 9 (c) does not restrict the 3rd Judge to giving his opinion on the points or points of difference only, but makes it obligatory on him to give his opinion on the appeal or confirmation as the case may be : 38 Cal. 203, Rel. on. [P 881 C 2]

(k) Criminal Trial—Case referred to third Judge on difference—He should not differ from other two unless there are strong reasons for so doing.

Per Wild, A. J. C.—Where a case is referred to a third Judge on difference, he should not differ from the other two unless there is a mistake of law, or some fact which tells in favour of the accused has escaped notice, or in short unless there are strong grounds for so doing : 46 I. C. 593, Rel. on. [P 881 C 2]

(l) Criminal Trial—It is not necessary for prosecution to prove motive.

Per Wild, A. J. C.—It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove the motive though it is more satisfactory when the motive for the crime can be inferred. [P 883 C 1]

T. G. Elphinstone and Partabrai D. Punwani—for Appellants.

O. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Percival, J. C.—The two appellants, Mahomed Yusif and Zaibulnissa, have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Sukkur, Mr. P. N. Moos, of murder, under S. 302, I. P. C., of the two step-brothers of accused 1, Bashir Ahmed and Rafique Ahmed, aged 6 and 3 respectively; and the former has been sentenced to death and the latter to transportation for life. The case also comes before this Court for confirmation of the death sentence passed on accused 1. The case has been dealt with by the learned Sessions Judge in an able and exhaustive judgment; and it is necessary therefore to refer only to its salient features, especially as the case, although depending on circumstantial evidence, appears to me to be perfectly clear and conclusive in respect of accused 1, and to exclude all other reasonable hypotheses except the guilt of this accused.

The evidence shows that Chiragdin, the father of accused 1 who was a wealthy hide merchant of Sukkur, was on bad terms with his son, accused 1, whom he regarded as a wastrel and a thief, as the notice published by him in the "Alhak" newspaper on 24th November 1927, shows. Accused 1 had one wife, but he married a second wife, accused 2, who was a Parsi but became a Mahomedan. Chiragdin disinherited accused 1 in May 1928.

On the day in question, namely 17th November 1928, the two deceased boys went to the house of accused 1 at about 3 p. m. The prosecution story is that they were taken into the part of the house occupied by accused 2. When they did not return, Chiragdin went to inquire about them. Accused 1 then said that they had left the house. Much search was made for them and the police were informed, but nothing was found, and the Inspector put men at night to watch the house. He thought that the accused would perhaps secretly remove the boys at night, and therefore put the watchmen there. At about 3-30 a. m. one of the watchmen, Khuda Bux, heard a subdued thud, and on going near found outside the house of accused 1 the dead bodies of the two boys, who had been strangled.

In the early morning inquiry was made by the police, and they found in the room of accused 2: (i) a blood-stained Khes (bed cover), (ii) a suthan (pair of trousers) soaked in a bucket of water, but still showing some blood-stains on them; and (iii) a silk agath (a tape for trousers) wet from recent immersion in water lying concealed in a cupboard which accused 2 unlocked.

Later on in an inner room downstairs the police discovered what the learned Sessions Judge rightly describes as "the most damning piece of evidence against the two accused," namely a newly dug grave 3 ft. x 2½ ft. x 2½ ft. large enough for the interment of both the corpses. Two spades were found near the grave. The key of the room was with accused 1. The inference suggested by the Crown is that the accused, or at least accused 1, either buried or intended to bury the boys in the grave, but changed his mind and tried to take them out, when intentionally or by accident the bodies were dropped outside the house. The medical evidence is to the effect that the murder took place about 1-45 a. m. This statement may be accepted as correct; the Medical Officer was not cross-examined on the point. Certain doubt has been thrown on some facts of the prosecution story on behalf of the appellants; but it is sufficient to say that I see no reason to doubt it at all. To my mind it is sufficiently proved, among other things, that the boys were taken not merely into the house but into the room of accused 2, and were last seen there. The grave in the inner room was undoubtedly dug by the two accused or by one of the two accused, not by the police or anyone else. The dead bodies were dropped outside the house by persons from inside the house and not by any outside person. The suggestion that they were dropped by any outside person has been described by the learned Judge as "far-fetched and puerile."

Taking then first the case of accused 1 we have the following facts: (1) there was a motive for the murder. The exact intention of the accused is a matter of surmise, but probably he intended first to hold the boys to ransom, but later decided to murder them; (2) the boys were taken by accused 1 to his house; (3) they were taken into the room of accused 2; (4) on search being made accused 1 said that the boys had gone out. This, as the subsequent evidence shows, was a false statement; (5) the boys were never seen alive again after going into the apartment of No. 2; (6) the boys were murdered about 1-45 a. m.; (7) Chiragdin so strongly suspected accused 1 at the time that he placed men to watch the house at night; (8) the dead bodies of the strangled boys were thrown out of the house in the middle of the night; (9) the blood-stained and newly washed articles were found in the room of No. 2; (10) the freshly dug grave was found in the inner room, of which the key was with No 1.

These reasons are much the same as those given by the learned Sessions Judge at lines 342 to 366 of his judgment, though I have worded them slightly differently. The above evidence shows to my mind beyond any manner of doubt that the two boys were deliberately murdered by accused two or by one of the two accused. The point remaining only against accused 1 is whether it can be held that the murder could have been committed by accused 2 only and that accused 1 is guilty, if at all, only under S. 201, I. P. C.

To my mind this is an impossible hypothesis, having regard to all the facts of the case as mentioned above. The evidence of Chiragdin, who has deposed against his own son, accused 1, is to the effect that he had no enmity with anyone in the locality "save of course Yusif himself." On the face of it it is very improbable that the wife should kill the children without the assistance of the husband. Accused 1 was in the house when the murder was committed. The grave was in the inner room down below specially in the occupation of ac-used 1, of which the key was with accused 1. The blood-stained trousers of accused 1 were found in a bucket of water evidently being washed.

On the whole evidence there is a bare possibility of the murder having been committed by accused 1 without the help of accused 2, but there is not the bare possibility of the murder having been committed by accused 2 without the help of accused 1. The time of the murders, the motive, the blood-stained trousers, the digging of the grave and the throwing out of the bodies, are among the matters which make it clear that accused 1 had a share in the actual murders.

In regard to the sentence the learned Sessions Judge has observed that : "the double murder of two innocent boys was diabolical in conception and brutal in execution. So far as Mahomed Yusuf is concerned there are absolutely no redeeming features to warrant the infliction of the lesser sentence."

I quite agree with this view. The mere fact that the conviction is based on circumstantial evidence is no reason why a lesser sentence should be passed. As has been often stated, witnesses may lie but facts cannot lie. Nor in my opinion is it any excuse that accused 1 may have originally intended to hold the boys for ransom and later decided to kill them. It merely comes to this: that accused 1 intended to commit one very serious offence; but, finding some difficulty in carrying out this offence, he changed his mind and committed a far more serious offence, namely that of murdering the two boys. That to my mind cannot be regarded as an extenuating circumstance. I would therefore confirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal in the case of accused 1.

In the case of accused 2 the evidence is also very black and the case is somewhat similar to that of Reg. v. F. G. Manning and F. Manning, where the husband and wife were both convicted and sentenced to death on circumstantial evidence regarding a murder committed in their house. However, I am willing to accept the view that there is a bare possibility that the murder was committed by accused 1 alone and that accused 2 only assisted in the concealment thereof. The case, however, in any event, in view of the age and the rest of the evidence, obviously falls at least under S. 201, I. P. C. Also the maximum sentence under that section should in my opinion certainly be passed. I would therefore change the conviction in the case of accused 2, Zaibulnissa, to one under S. 201, I. P. C., and change the sentence to one of seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

The police in my opinion deserve credit for having brought home the offence to the accused. Since writing the above I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother. I regret, however, that I do not find sufficient reason, according to my view, to alter the sentences on the appellants which I have proposed. On this question I would add only the following remarks :

The Public Prosecutor in addressing the Sessions Judge observed :

"I press for capital sentence so far as Yusuf is concerned. No redeeming features. Murders brutal."

The learned pleader for accused 1 observed : "I concede murder was atrocious." He did not ask for a sentence other than a capital sentence, but only for an acquittal.

In the grounds of appeal to this Court there was no appeal that the sentence was excessive.

A lesser sentence was asked for by the learned counsel for accused 1, as far as I remember, only on the ground that the evidence was circumstantial, not direct. This, however, in my opinion is not sufficient reason for a lesser sentence.

I also regret that I do not entirely agree with the criticism of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner of the procedure adopted by the Sessions Judge.

In regard to post-mortem notes my experience is that they are usually put in with the consent of the pleaders for the accused, merely to save the Court from having to rewrite the remarks contained therein, in the evidence of the Medical Officer. It appears to me that, when this is done, and when there is no discrepancy between the post-mortem notes and the evidence of the Medical Officer, the placing of the post-mortem notes on the record does not do the accused any harm. In this case accused 1 was represented by a very experienced criminal lawyer, Diwan Bahadur Murlidhar ; but it appears that he took no objection to the post-mortem notes going on the record.

In regard to the questions put by the learned Sessions Judge under S. 342, Criminal P. C., I agree that the Judge should not cross-examine an accused person. But on the other hand it has been laid down that the object of S. 342 is:

to enable the accused to explain each and every circumstance appearing against him."

The position therefore, I take is briefly, as laid down in Emperor v. Ali-muddin Naskar (1) that :

"The Court is bound to put to the accused the salient facts and circumstances of the case in a succinct form, and to ask him if he has any explanation thereof to offer, but incriminating questions and questions in the nature of a cross-examination must be avoided."

Rupchand, A. J. C.—Accused 1 and 2 Muhammad Yusuf and Zaibunissa are husband and wife. They have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of the double murder of two innocent infants Bashir and Rafique, aged six and two and half years respectively, both of them being consanguine brothers of accused 1. Accused 1 has been sentenced to death, subject to the confirmation of his sentence by this Court, and accused 2 to transportation for life.

The evidence on which their conviction is based is purely circumstantial and consists of the following facts or links in the chain of such evidence which are said to have been proved by the Crown:

That at about 3 p. m. of the day of their murder both boys were in the living apartments of accused 1 and 2 and were not seen alive after that time.

That shortly thereafter accused 1 when questioned, said that they had left his house;

That a vigorous search was made for them in the town of Sukkur and Rohri between 4 p. m. and midnight but with no result;

That after that search had failed, Chiragdin, father of accused 1 and the murdered boys, suspected that accused 1 might have hidden them and might remove them from Sukkur with the object of ransom and kept a watch of three persons, Khudabux, Ex. 16, Muhammad Hayat Ex. 23, and Nur Mahammad Ex. 30, round about the house of the accused;

That at about 3-30 a. m. Khudabux heard a subdued thud on the road to the north of the house of the accused, and on going up found the dead bodies of the boys lying on the road in front of the house: the dead body of Bashir was in a gunny bag and the other outside the bag;

That the medical evidence showed; (a) that both boys had been strangled to death; (b) that Bashir had a mark which might have been caused by a soft cord or a silk tape like the one found at the search in the cupboard of accused 2; (c) that the boys had bled through their nostrils; (d) that there were no other marks of violence on them except that Rafique had his right femur fractured and had three small bruises all of which were in the opinion of the doctor caused after death, and (e) that both boys had been murdered probably after midnight;

That at the search held on the day when the dead bodies were found, the police discovered three incriminating pieces of evidence in the living apartments of the accused: (a) a khes or bed-spread lying crumpled on a bed stained with blood which was proved on chemical analysis to be human blood, (b) a pair of trousers of accused 2 lying in a bucket of water having stains which on chemical analysis were found to be of blood, and being in a disintegrated condition, it could not be ascertained if they were stains of human blood, (c) an agath or trouser-tape which was wet and was kept on a piece of cloth inside a locked cupboard in the main living room;

That on a subsequent search held one day later in one of the inner rooms of the business premises of accused 1 which were on the ground floor of that building, a freshly dug pit 3' x 2½' x 2½' was found with the earth dug out of it lying on its edge and with two spades lying over it;

That the explanations offered by the accused of the incriminating pieces of evidence did not carry conviction of their truth;

That the accused were on inimical terms with Chiragdin and that accused was financially weak at that time;

That no other persons in that locality had any possible motive in murdering the boys;

And lastly, that no person had any motive in foisting the guilt on the accused by throwing the bodies at that place. (Here his Lordship went into the history of the family prior to date of murder and found that accused and his father were carrying on business for a number of years and accused 1 had married another Parsi wife accused 2, and concluded as follows). I have no hesitation in holding that relations between accused 1 and Chiragdin remained estranged up to the day of the murder and at that time accused 1 was financially weak. How far these two factors form an adequate motive by themselves or in conjunction with any other circumstance which had subsequently transpired, shall be dealt with in its proper place.

The evidence of what transpired on the day of the murders and thereafter requires a more careful scrutiny. In weighing it I have experienced considerable difficulty, partly on account of certain additions made in it in the Sessions Court by the relatives of accused 1, and partly on account of certain defects in the procedure adopted there, inter alia the admission of certain inculpatory statements made by accused 1 and submitting him in his examination by the Court to a much severer test than is in my opinion permissible under S. 342. I shall presently refer to these defects.

According to the prosecution, on the day of the murders, accused 1 invited his full sister Khadijanbibi to the apartments of his first wife Subhanbibi on the allegation that he and accused 2 were leaving that night for Hyderabad, and that Khadijanbibi should keep company with Subhanbibi who would be alone. He hired a tonga for her and left for his place on foot. At about 3 p. m. Khadijanbibi, her two children, Bashir and the two murdered boys went in the tonga to the southern staircase of the building and went up to Subhanbibi's apartment; from there Bashir and the two murdered boys went to the apartments of accused 1 and 2 which have been referred to by Bashir in his evidence as the house of accused 1. At 3-30 p. m. Bashir went back to his own house by the northern staircase, leaving the two murdered boys and accused 1 and 2 together in those apartments. On his return he was questioned by Chiragdin about the boys and was at once sent off to fetch them. As he was going up by the same staircase, he was met by accused 1 who told him that the boys had left his house. He reported that fact to Chiragdin and a search for them was commenced in that locality at once by Chiragdin, Khudabux and Muhammad Hayat. At 5 p. m. both Khadijanbibi and Subhanbibi came to the house of Chiragdin and stayed there for the night. At 6 p. m. accused 1 met Chiragdin and both went to the police station to make a report, and the report was actually made in the name of accused 1. At 8 p. m. accused 1 again met Chiragdin and suggested a search at Rohri which was accordingly made by Khudabux and Muhammad Hayat. They returned back to Sukkur at midnight and then Chiragdin suspected that accused 1 might have hidden the boys with the object of ransom. He therefore plated Khudabux and Nur Muhammad to watch the northern road and Muhammad Hayat the southern street lest the boys might be removed from there to another place. At 3-30 a. m. there was a soft thud on the northern road in front of the building which attracted the attention of Khudabux. On going up he found the two dead bodies lying in front of the house. Bashir's body was in a gunny bag and Rafique's near the mouth of the bag.

Accused 1 has admitted that he invited Khadijanbibi to the apartments of Subhanbibi and had hired a tonga for her but has stated that he subsequently learnt that she went there with her children and the two boys. He has also admitted that at about 4 a. m. he heard weeping on the road and on going down found the corpses of his brothers there. But his case is that the boys never went to the apartments of accused 2, that he never told Gulzar that they had left his house, that like others he went in search of the boys at the request of Gulzar and Chiragdin, and reported the matter to the police, in the evening, that he was out searching them late that night, and that at night when he came down he found that Khudabux and Muhammad Hayat or Nur Muhammad had the corpses of his brothers on their shoulders, suggesting thereby that the corpses had been brought there.

Now the fact that the murdered boys went into the apartments of the Parsi wife at 3-30 p. m. depends upon the evidence of Gulzar, and it has been adversely criticized on several grounds. It is argued that the tonga man does not support his version that he and Rafique were not asked by defendant 1 to go to his house nor did Gulzar say at the time when his statement under S. 164 was recorded that accused promised to play the gramophone for them. It is further urged that no gramophone was noticed at the search and that therefore the story of the gramophone is a myth.

I am not prepared to attach much weight to any of these points. The tonga man had no occasion to observe the details or reason to remember them; the statement under S. 164 was not intended to be exhaustive and the search by the police does not appear to be so very careful as it might have been as will presently appear.

On the other hand, there are other circumstances which strongly support Gulzar. In his statement under S. 164 he said:

"On Saturday last, I took my brothers Bashir Ahmed and Rafique Ahmad to Yusuf's house before his Parsi wife. My father asked me where I left the boys. I told him that I had left them in Yusuf's house before the Parsi girl. My father then detailed me to fetch them. I went to Yusuf's house after ten minutes and asked Yusuf where my brothers were. Yusuf said that they were not there. I also asked whether they were upstairs. Yusuf said they were not there . . ."

It is abundantly clear from this statement that he told Chiragdin that he had left the boys in the living apartments of the Parsi woman, and not those of Subhanbibi, and that was evidently the reason why Chiragdin sent him off at once to fetch the boys. The fact that Gulzar went to the northern part or front part of the building to fetch them amply corroborates him that he had left the boys there and had come out from there through the northern staircase.

Chiragdin would not have shown the same anxiety if he had been told that the boys were with Khadijanbibi and Subhanbibi in the apartments occupied by them. Chiragdin had no objection to go into the apartments of Subhanbibi and unless he was satisfied with the truth of the story of Gulzar would in the ordinary course of events have gone to Subhanbibi's rooms to find out if the boys were there before making a search for them.

With regard to the inquiry made from him by Gulzar and Chiragdin accused 1 said before the committing Magistrate:

"Then leaving the carriage driver there (i. e. at the house of Chiragdin), for the purpose of fetching Khadijanbibi and her children and paying him his fare, I went away. Then I went and sat down in my shop on the ground floor. I was there till 4-30 p. m. and had not gone up, when Gulzar came there inside the shop and said: 'Bashir Ahmed and Rafique Ahmed have disappeared. They took a pice each and went down to buy something. I don't know where they have gone to.' I got out with him to search for them. On the way I met Chiragdin near the carriage stand, and said that the boys had disappeared."

This explanation is hardly believable. If accused 1 had not been upstairs the first thing he would have done would be to make a search for the boys there. So far as his allegation that he accompanied Gulzar to make a search and that during that search he met Chiragdin and informed him that the boys were missing, is concerned, it is contrary to the evidence of Gulzar and Chiragdin and is belied by their conduct.

In this connexion it was argued that there was an obligation on the Crown to examine Khadijanbibi and Subhanbibi as witnesses and an application has been filed before us asking us to examine them. Their evidence was material for the purpose of proving that the boys had passed from the apartments of Subhanbibi to those of accused 2 on that day. Prima facie, therefore, their evidence was of some importance to the Crown, at any rate, for the purpose of supporting Gulzar.

In the case of Empress v. Dhumo Kazi (2) at 124, Sir Arthur Wilson stated the law on this subject as follows:

"The only legitimate object of a prosecution is to secure not a conviction but that justice be done. The prosecutor is not therefore free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court. He is bound to produce all evidence in his power directly bearing upon the charge. It is prima facie his duty according to call those witnesses who prove their connexion with the transaction in question and also must be able to give important information. The only thing that can relieve the prosecution from calling such witnesses is the reasonable belief, that if called they would not speak the truth. If such witnesses are not called without sufficient reason being shown (and the mere fact of their being summoned for the defence seems to us by no means necessarily a sufficient reason), the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution."

It will be noticed that I have substituted the word "power" which I have underlined for the word "favour" as appearing in the report. I have done this in view of the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Ram Rajan Roy v. Emperor (3), at p. 427 that "favour" is a misprint for "power."

The exemption from the obligation to call all available material witnesses, namely the bona fide belief that if called they would not speak the truth is universally recognized: see Queen-Empress v. Durga (4) and Ranjit Ahir v. Emperor (5).

The prosecution have explained that their failure to call those witnesses comes within the exemption. Their case is that as these women were in purda Chiragdin objected to their being examined by the police or by the Magistrate under S. 164, Criminal P. C. After the proceedings had started in the committing Magistrate's Court, there was a desire on the part of the relatives of accused 1 to save them, and, therefore, not only that they had a bona fide belief that these witnesses would, if called, not speak the truth, but they were as a matter of fact examined as defence witnesses in the committing Magistrate's Court and did not support the prosecution.

Though I am of the opinion that the investigating officer would have been well advised if he had insisted on the statements of these witnesses being recorded at the earliest opportunity, I am not prepared to hold that under the circumstances which had subsequently transpired, any adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for failure to examine them as witnesses. I am also not prepared to hold that it is a fit case in which we should order that they be examined at this stage. If the accused took the chance of relying upon the alleged weaknesses in the prosecution case knowing full well that these two witnesses were not being examined, it is now too late for them to have the case reopened for their benefit.

In this connexion the counsel for the accused has drawn our attention to the evidence of Chiragdin at line 440 where he has said that Khadijanbibi and Subhanbibi had told him (when they came to his house that evening) that the boys had left the house of the accused after taking money and had not returned again. He has also drawn our attention to another answer of his which is as follows:

"He (referring to one Ishak, a boy 12 or 13 years old) had met me in the course of the search..... He told me that he had seen them (the two boys) purchasing sugar-cane near Mir Hussan's shop. He did not say when he saw them. All that he said is that he had seen them shortly before."

With regard to the first set of answers it is to be observed that they were contrary to what Chiragdin had said before the committing Magistrate, and when confronted with his previous answers he had to go back upon them. With regard to the conversation with Ishak, it would appear that he had made no mention of it in the previous proceedings.

We have been asked to examine Ishak, but we must decline to do so. His name was not disclosed at the investigation and it is beyond doubt that there is no obligation on the Crown to examine each and every person as a witness whose name has been disclosed in the course of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses. We are told by the Public Prosecutor of Sukkur that the answers about Ishak were recorded by the Court on the undertaking given on behalf of the accused that Ishak would be called as a defence witness, of which undertaking there is no note on the record. If any such undertaking was given, that is an additional reason for discarding these answers from consideration. I have no hesitation in holding that these like several other answers were not true and were given with the object of saving accused 1. I am of opinion that the Crown has substantially proved the first and second links in the chain of circumstances referred to above.

Links three to eight in the chain : Each of these links has also been amply proved by evidence. The main part of the evidence admits of very little criticism. The implied suggestion in the statement of accused 1 that the corpses had been brought there by Khudabux, Muhammad Hayat and Nur Muhammad hardly requires comment. The first two were employed under Chiragdin and the third under Nur Hassan, a close relative of Chiragdin. It is too absurd to suggest that they had all conspired to foist the guilt on the accused by removing the corpses on their shoulders from somewhere else to the place where they were found. The only argument which requires notice is that it appears from the notes of inspection by the learned Judge of the site that it was not possible for the accused to have dropped the dead bodies from the second floor and that, therefore, the story of Khudabux that his attention was attracted to the spot in consequence of a soft thud is not true. But it was a wintry night and everything was quiet at 3.30 a. m. ; and there is nothing inherently probable in the sound, described as a soft thud, caused by the corpses falling on the road from a height of three or four feet while they were being carried, travelling to the place where Khudabux was. I shall deal with the question whether the boys were done to death after midnight or not later.

A good deal has been said as to the finding of the freshly dug pit on the second day of the search. As previously observed by me, the search on the first day after the murder was not so careful as it might have been. It appears that a suit-case was lying in the apartments of accused 2 which was not searched. One of the rooms on the ground floor in which the police subsequently discovered a freshly dug pit was likewise not searched, as it is said that it was looked at the time the police party was passing through the ground floor premises and the key of the lock was said not to be available at that time. On the following night, the police found that the apartments of accused 2 had been burgled and the contents of the suit case removed.

The prosecution case as deposed to by the Inspector and the Sub-Inspector of Police was that in connexion with the inquiries into the burglary accused 1 represented to them that the suit case contained ornaments and other articles of the value of about Rs. 7,000 and had been made ready to be taken by the accused with them on their intended visit to Hyderabad, and said that he used to deposit the ornaments in a tin box " which he had buried in the inner room on the ground floor " and that this led to the search of this room on the following day and to the discovery of the freshly dug and unused intended grave of the boys.

These questions were objected to but the Court allowed them observing :

" Accused's statement leading to the discovery would be admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act. Objection overruled."

In his examination by the Court, accused 1 denied having made any such statement to the police and averred that this room had been searched on the first day and that the evidence of the pit was fabricated. In dealing with this point, the learned Judge, after pointing out that the search was carried on by responsible officers and that there was no scope for fabrication of the evidence of the pit, has said :

" Their failure to search the room on the first day was admittedly a serious lapse on their part and indicates that the investigation was not altogether efficiently carried out. All the same it was a bona fide error and I cannot impute any wilful intention to fabricate evidence. The District Superintendent of Police's word is a sufficient guarantee that the investigation was fair and proper. Since the room was never searched on the first day, the accused's explanation is obviously false. It lends support to the allegation of Inspector Brotherton and Sub-Inspector Beansting that it was accused Muhammad Yusuf himself who had hinted at the existence of the pit in the inner room by making an exculpatory statement that he had dug it for the safe deposit of his valuables. He had evidently offered this explanation because he knew that sooner or later the pit would be discovered and would implicate him further. I am certain that the pit was intended as a grave for the reception of the bodies of the murdered boys."

There has been a good deal of criticism on this part of the finding of the learned Judge below. The learned Public Prosecutor has frankly admitted that the statement of accused 1 that he used to bury his jewellery on the ground floor was not admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act. In the first place accused 1 was not accused of the offence of murder and the information given by him did not pertain to that offence, and in the next place, only "so much" of the information given by him "as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered" could be proved: Emperor v. Ilahibux (5a) and Sukhan v. Emperor (6). The existence of the inner room was known to the police and was not discovered in consequence of the information supplied by accused 1 and the existence of the pit inside was not discovered in consequence of the information but of the search. In this connexion it is to be noted that there is no allegation in the evidence to show that the accused said that he used to bury the ornaments underground in a pit or that that pit was in the room or that he would show the pit.

A further question which arises is whether a statement made by an accused person not in the course of the investigation of the offence for which he is being tried, but in the course of an investigation of another offence altogether in which the accused makes a statement to the police in his capacity as the complainant but which is of an incriminating nature so far as the offence for which he is being tried goes, falls within the purview of Ss. 26 to 27, Evidence Act.

This point has not been argued before us properly, and I do not consider myself called upon to go into it, as I find that the evidence of the District Superintendent of Police is to the effect that he knew of the existence of the pit from an informer, and that the mashir who was present when the alleged statement is said to have been made to the subordinate police officers, denied that any such statement was made. On the very face of it the alleged statement is not true. Accused 1 possessed a safe on the ground floor. His living apartments were on the second floor where accused 2 lived. There was no occasion for him to bury the jewellery in this room or to make an untrue statement to the police that he used to bury it there. I am also of the opinion that the search took place after the District Superintendent of Police got information about the existence of the pit from his informer. I am not prepared to attach much weight to the subsequent statement of the Sub-Inspector that the search took place earlier than what he had deposed to at first, as the diary which he relied upon in support of his subsequent statement does not show the different periods of the day when each information was noted.

I, however, agree with the view taken by the learned Judge that the pit was discovered by the police inside this room at the search made on the following day, that the room was not searched on the first day owing "to a serious lapse" on the part of the police, and that there is no justification for holding that that room had been tampered with during the time of the first and the second search or that it was tampered with by the police.

The other defects in the proceedings to which our attention has been drawn might be conveniently dealt with here. The first refers to the admission in evidence of the following statement made by accused 1 to the police:

"Yusif stated to me he had not committed the offence. He had told me that he had taken Bashir Ahmed and Rafique Ahmed to his senior wife's apartment along with his sister, that he had paid three annas to the tongawalla and that he had gone on foot, that Gulzar had gone and brought his senior wife who was then not in her apartment, that after some time he went to his Parsi wife's apartment through the communicating door, that Gulzar Ahmed had come up later and inquired about the two boys whereupon he told Gulzar they were not with him, that at 4 or 4/30 a.m. he saw on hearing a noise that the corpses of two boys were lying in front of his house, that while searching for the boys he had stained his trousers with mud and that the stains on the trousers were not blood-stains, that the green tape belonged to his Parsi wife."

This was objected to and the learned Judge passed the following order:

"I have read accused Yusif's statement recorded by the police. From beginning to end it is self-exculpatory and if believed would go in his favour.

"Section 164, Criminal P. C., does not apply to statements made by accused persons but merely relates to statements of witnesses.

Self-exculpatory statements made by accused persons to police officers, which do not in any way incriminate them are not confessions but mere admissions and accordingly admissible in evidence."

The fact that an accused person has made a statement with the object of exculpating himself or that his statement if believed would exculpate him does not by itself render it admissible in evidence. If notwithstanding the form in which it has been made, the statement is nevertheless an admission of incriminating circumstances and is used by the prosecution as such, it is not admissible in evidence; a useful test as to the admissibility of a statement made by an accused person to the police is to ascertain the purpose for which it is being put to by the prosecution: Umer Durz v. Emperor (7). Imperatrix v. Pandharinath (8), Queen-Empress v. Nana (9), In re, Jivan Ambaidas (10), as pointed out in the case of Hussainbibi v. Emperor (11).

(6) A. I. B. 1929 Pat. 344=115 I. C. 6=30 Cr. L. J. 414=10 Lah. 289 (F. B.).

In the present case the prosecution were relying upon the first part of the statement as corroborative proof of certain facts deposed to by the prosecution witnesses and not with the object of proving their falsity. With regard to the last part of the statement referred to above, the prosecution had no occasion to put it in as that was the explanation which the accused had offered before the committing Magistrate. I think that the learned Judge was in error in allowing the statement to go in.

The second defect refers to the nature of the questions put to accused 1 in the Sessions Court under S. 342, Criminal P. C.. Now it has been repeatedly laid down that the examination of the accused under that section is intended for no other purpose than to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him; attempts to put questions which are intended to elicit answers calculated to supplement the case of the prosecution or to obtain admissions of fact which might incriminate the accused or to obtain information from him for the purpose of filling up gaps in the evidence of the prosecution have been repeatedly deprecated: Queen-Empress v. Rangji (12), Queen-Empress v. Bhairab Chunder (13), Tufina v. Emperor (14), Mohidin Abdul Kadir v. Emperor (15), Jeremiah v. Vas (16), Mohansing v. Emperor (17) and Devi Dayal v. Emperor (18).

The object with which some of the questions have been put to accused 1 and the form in which they have been put appear to me to be contrary to the intention of the legislature as declared by this section. It will be sufficient to refer to some of the questions and answers which are follows:

Q. Can you assign any reason why you and your wife wanted to go to Hyderabad?

A. To visit my wife's sister, brother and mother.

Q. By which train did you intend to leave?

A. By 10-30 p. m. train. We dropped the idea of going on account of disappearance of my brothers.

Q. Were you aware that your father had cut you off from his will?

A. No.

Q. Will you state your movements from the time you went to your father's house till the time you were arrested?

A. It was 2-30 or 3 p. m. that I went to fetch my sister from Charagdin's house. I brought a tonga, informed my sister, paid the driver and asked him to drive to the back lane of my house. I went walking. I went before the tonga left.

Q. Why did you not accompany your sister in the tonga?

A. I thought she would be accompanied by maidservant or children as usual. I have never before accompanied her. I learnt afterwards that Gulzar Ahmed had accompanied my sister.

Q. Where did you go?

A. I first went to the bazar and then to my shop. I remained downstairs and did not know whether my sister had arrived or not. About 20 or 25 minutes later Gulzar Ahmed came to me and asked me to go to search for Bashir Ahmed and Rafique Ahmed who had disappeared.

Q. Did he tell you or did you ask him from where they had disappeared?

A. Gulzar did not tell me from where they had disappeared nor did I ask him.

Q. Did anyone else tell you that they had disappeared from your house?

A. Yes, my sister told me they had come to my house and gone away again.

Q. Were you aware before you went to bed that Chiragdin had posted men to watch your house?

A. No. He never suspected me.

Q. What happened at night.

A. At 4 or 4-30 a. m. I heard people weeping outside. I went outside and saw Khudabux and Mahomed Hayat or Nur Mahomed holding the corpses of my two brothers on their shoulders. They were on the road in front of my house and Fasal Illahi's house.

Q. Did you see a gunny bag there?

A. No.

Q. What did you do?

A. I wept and kissed my brothers.

Q. Was Chiragdin present?

A. Yes.

Q. Since you had taken your sister to stay the night with your first wife can you tell me whether she had taken any change of clothes with her?

A. I do not know.

Q. Where did your wife (accused 2) keep her ornaments?

A. In a leather box. She had ornaments of value of about Rs. 8,000. They used to be kept in the suit case. The police had searched all the trunks and suit cases.

Q. What was the safe on the ground floor meant for?

A. For hundis and account books and cash.

Q. Did you keep the ornaments in the safe below?

A. No. They used to remain with my wife.

In my opinion most of these questions were indubitably intended to fill up the gaps in the prosecution story and the form in which they were put was that of cross-examination.

I wish, however, to safeguard myself from being misunderstood that the trial Court should put either few questions or only general questions. The number of questions put to an accused person must necessarily depend upon the circumstances which are brought out against him in the evidence for which an explanation is needed, and the questions must be so framed as to enable him to know what he is required to explain. But every care should be taken to see that the questions aim at getting an explanation if any which the accused wishes to offer against the case which the Crown has proved by the evidence on the record.

The last defect in the procedure to which our attention has been invited is the admission en bloc of the post-mortem notes of the Medical Officer as part of his evidence. Our attention has not been invited to any section of the Evidence Act under which such procedure is permissible. Ss. 159 to 161 only permit a limited use being made of such documents namely that they be used by the witness who made them for the purpose of refreshing his memory or by a party for the purpose of contradicting the witness. In Roghuni Singh v. Empress (19) Field, J., said:

"Then Dr. Shaw refers to the 'report' that is the report of the post-mortem written in the form usually filled up by Civil Surgeons at the time of making the post-mortem examination. Now this report was not evidence and, therefore, no facts could have been taken therefrom. The Assistant Surgeon might have used this report to refresh his memory when giving evidence, but the report itself was not admissible in evidence."

In Empress v. Jadab Das (20), at p. 143, likewise said:

"Now that report (notes of post-mortem examination) is not admissible as evidence except to contradict the officer who made it. It may, however, be used by that officer when under examination for the purpose of refreshing his memory."

It appears to me that it is extremely undesirable that such notes should be put in evidence through the medical officer en bloc as it is prejudicial to both sides. The attention of neither side is drawn to each and every circumstance detailed therein and it is open to the accused to take advantage of reticence therein in the course of argument which the Crown could easily have explained if its attention was drawn to such reticence. It is equally clear that several facts noted therein are likely to escape the attention of the counsel of the accused if the notes are exhibited en bloc and there would be no cross-examination on them. We have been told that it is the usual practice in the Courts in Upper Sind to exhibit such notes. If that is so I think it should be discontinued.

It is rather unfortunate that these defects in the procedure adopted by the lower Court should have clouded the issues in the case. After carefully excluding from my consideration every piece of evidence which I have considered to have been improperly admitted I cannot but hold that there is no getting out of the conclusion referred to that links 1 to 8 have been proved and that under the circumstances the presumption of innocence of the accused was sufficiently displaced by the Crown.

Links 11 and 12 in the chain: It is sufficient to say that these have also been amply proved. Not only Chiragdin had no other enemy in the locality but the two boys were so scantily dressed that the question of their being done to death with the object of robbing them is out of the question.

water. The only explanation offered by accused 1 is that they had got dirty in his wanderings in search of his missing brothers. But that does not account for the stains of blood on them or his anxiety to wash them at night. It was suggested that as accused 1 dealt in skins and hides the stains of blood might have been caused by the handling of fresh skins. In the first place that is not his explanation and in the next place we have inspected the trousers and I find that the portions cut out by the Chemical Analyser for the purposes of analysis are small specks in different parts of the trousers some of them being in the upper portion which are not likely to have been caused by the handling of a fresh skin for purposes of inspection by a merchant.

The explanation by accused 2 that she had dropped the wet agath in the cupboard in the hurry of the moment when she was taking out her burka to cover her face from the police is belied by the stains left on the sheet over which it was lying. The further explanation that it was washed as it had been used by her during the period of menstruation in no way accounts for its being washed in the early hours of the morning probably after the corpses were noticed by Khudabux and shortly before the arrival of the police so that it had not got dry at about 7-30 a.m. when the search took place. Her explanation that she washed the agath as it was used by her during her menstruation period is again inconsistent with her failure to wash the khes which was blood-stained and therefore it was more necessary for her to wash that than the silk agath which, assuming that it was used as a substitute for an ordinary cape for keeping in position pieces of cloth used as a substitute for sanitary towels, would be worn near the waist where there was no likelihood of its being stained with blood.

Lastly the suggestion that the freshly dug pit was the work of the police or the enemies of accused, that is to say the father of accused and his helpmates was false on its very face. It has been pointed out in Wills on Circumstantial Evidence at p. 97 that as a general rule to which, however, exceptions undoubtedly genuine from time to time occur, it is reasonable to expect that an innocent party can explain suspicious or circumstantial appearances connected with his person, dress or conduct, that the desire of self preservation, if not a regard for truth will prompt him to do so and that whenever the party attempts no explanation of facts which he may reasonably be presumed to be able and interested to explain or attempts to account for them by false representations the force of suspicious circumstances proved against him is thereby augmented.

These observations apply with full force in the present case and it may fairly be presumed that both the accused or either of them were concerned in the murder of the boys or in suppressing the evidence of their murder.

This brings us to the question as to the offence or offences if any which the accused or either of them have committed.

It has been argued on behalf of accused 1 that it was possible for either of the accused to have murdered the boys without the knowledge of the other in the long interval which elapsed between 3-30 p.m. and 3-30 a.m. and that therefore the only charge which could be substantiated against any of them is under S. 201, and not S. 302, I. P. C. Our attention has been invited to R. 4, of the Rules pertaining to circumstantial evidence enunciated by Wills in his valuable book at p. 31 which reads as follows:

"In order to justify the inference of guilt the inculcating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation on any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt."

Considerable stress has been laid on the observations of Baron Alderson in Rex v. Patch referred to at p. 314 of that book that it is not only necessary that the conviction as to the guilt of the accused should be a rational conviction but it should be the only rational conviction which the circumstances would enable the Court or the jury as the case may be to draw.

It has been argued that too much reliance cannot be placed on the medical evidence that the boys were strangled at about midnight and reference has been made to Taylor, Edn. 10, at pp. 337 and 338. But there are other circumstances which also show that the murders were committed about that time and in the presence of accused 1.

Blood had oozed out only from the noses of the murdered boys. They had no other injury and unless accused 1 was present or had come in close proximity of either of the murdered boys almost at once his trousers could not have got blood-stained. According to accused 1 he returned home at about midnight and the blood stains on his trousers were therefore more likely than not caused after his return. If the boys had not been done to death before midnight both the accused would have had sufficient time to wash and dry the pair of trousers, the agath and the khes before the search.

I am therefore not prepared to hold that accused 1 was not present when the murders were committed. Nor am I prepared to hold that accused 2 would or could commit murders in the presence of accused 1 without his concurrence. The case of accused 2, however, stands on a different footing. If accused 1 was the murderer accused 2 who is his wife might have been a helpless observer and there is not only a possibility of her not having taken any part in the murders, but of her having dissuaded accused 1 from committing it though subsequently she might have helped in the disappearance of the evidence of the murders. I would therefore uphold the conviction against accused 1 under S. 302, I. P. C. and acquit accused 2 of that charge.

With regard to the question whether accused 2 should be convicted for an offence under S. 201, I. P. C., or not, I am not prepared to differ from the learned Judicial Commissioner on that point because I find that accused 2 has not satisfactorily explained the finding of the wet agath in her cupboard or the blood-stains on the khes both of which she claims to be her property and there is evidence to show that the death of one of the boys might have been caused by the agath.

Reliance was placed on the finding of two spades near the freshly dug pit as evidence that both accused had taken part in digging the pit; but assuming that both the spades were there, it is not sufficient to warrant the inference that both spades were used or that accused 2 used one of the spades for that purpose. I would therefore exclude this piece of evidence from consideration.

I am also not prepared to take the same serious view of her offence as has been taken by the learned Judicial Commissioner or to hold that "the evidence was against her is also very black and the case is somewhat similar to that of Reg. v F. G. Manning and F. Manning where the husband and wife were both convicted and sentenced to death regarding a murder committed at their house" especially as the only record of that case I have been able to see is a note in Kenny's Cases of Criminal Law, p. 446, edition of 1903, which is of a very scrappy nature and only gives such facts as are material for understanding that part of the charge of Pollak, L. C.B., to the jury which is reproduced there.

It may be observed that in the present case except the fact that accused 2 was an eyesore to Chiragdin's family as she was a Parsi woman and had supplanted a relation of theirs who was the first wife of accused 1 there is nothing to show that she herself had any enmity against the family of Chiragdin, more so against the two infants so as to justify the suggestion that she was a party to the commission of this double murder.

In arriving at my conclusion as to the guilt of the accused, I have refrained from referring to the motive of the alleged murders for fear of constructing my structure on so slippery a foundation. It is well settled that on the one hand absence of ascertainable motive comes to nothing if the crime is proved to have been committed by other evidence; on the other to eke out a weak case by way of motive apparently tending towards possible crime is a very unsatisfactory and dangerous process. I, however, propose to refer to the motive in considering the question of sentence.

As said above it has been established that the relations between accused 1 and Chiragdin remained strained up to the day of the murders and that at that time accused 1 was financially weak. But this alleged motive has its weak points. The burglary of Rs. 20,000 two years before was not as satanic as it might at first appear to be. Accused 1 had been an active partner of his father in the business for nearly twenty years. He was not a waif as alleged. The account books produced by Ghiragdin showed that he used to keep accounts at that time and no less than Rs. 60,000 were credited to him for purchases made through him. However improper or ill advised and criminal a step he might have taken to misappropriate Rs. 20,000 during his father's absence he got nothing more as his share in the property earned by his father with his active help. If he married a stranger as his wife he was not absolutely dead to all public opinion and allowed his first wife to remain under the same roof and admittedly paid rent for her portion as well, and when he was going to Hyderabad he thought of bringing his sister to live with his first wife during his absence. If Gulzar is to be believed accused 1 did not go with the intention of luring the boys to death or of decoying them. He casually saw Gulzar and Rafique in the street and asked them to accompany his sister to his house. He did not even know then that Bashir would also accompany them. If he has speculated in forward contracts after he left his father there was nothing new in it. His father used to do the same and lost though not to the same extent. If he had suffered losses there was no immediate pressure on him and nothing to suggest that he could not meet them except by extracting money from his father. The causa causans of the murders will in my opinion remain in oblivion.

I do not therefore consider these factors as a sufficient incentive for the murder of two innocent boys either by their consanguine brother or by his wife although she was a convert. It has been suggested that once the boys had come to the apartments of accused 1, the primary motive why they were not permitted to go back to their house was to retain them for the purpose of ransom and that when accused 1 found that the matters had gone too far and the discovery of the boys from his possession might lead to his conviction for the offence of wrongful confinement he put them to death. This may or may not be true; but assuming it is true it is a circumstance which cannot be lost sight of in determining whether the punishment of death or of transportation should be inflicted on him.

Our attention has been invited to several conflicts in rulings on the question of adequate sentence in a case based purely on circumstantial evidence. Of the rulings quoted on behalf of accused 1 perhaps the strongest is the case of Abdul Wahab v. Emperor (21) where the Judicial Commissioner of Peshawar Court held that purely circumstantial evidence, however overwhelming and convincing it may be, has the character which must leave some loophole for the contingency however remote or infinitesimal of possible error and although it is wholly illogical in case of a trial for murder to accept as proved for the purpose of conviction and to throw any doubt on such proof in considering the question of sentence, yet this is an illogicality which has been duly and consistently recognized by the Courts and that the Court should be reluctant to launch a person into eternity except in a case of exceptional strength.

On the other hand reference might be made to the case of the Public Prosecutor v. Paranadi (22), where it was held that where the Court was satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the accused was guilty of murder and the circumstances required the imposition of the death penalty the fact that the conviction was based on circumstantial evidence was not a reason for passing a lesser sentence allowed by law.

Reference might also be made to two rulings of this Court in one of which Bahadur v. Emperor (23) the sentence of death was reduced to that of transportation for life by a Bench consisting of Kincaid, J. C., and Aston, A. J. C. In that case the accused had a quarrel with the woman whom he loved three days prior to the death and both had set out together and at a distance of three miles from their house the woman was found to have been murdered. All that was said in support of the reduction of sentence was that the peculiar circumstances of that case justified the infliction of the lesser sentence.

The other case is that of Karim Baksh v. Emperor (24) where, on an appeal filed by Government, a Bench consisting of B. Lee, Ag. J. C., and Aston, A. J. C., enhanced the sentence of transportation for life to that of death in a case which depended merely on circumstantial evidence.

It may be observed that in the cases of Paranadi and of Karimbux the motive for murder was sordid, namely the theft of property on the person of or in possession of the deceased, and that was proved to the hilt. In the Madras case the accused was said to have removed jewels from the person of the murdered boy and had disposed them off. In the Sind case the accused was a guest of the deceased on the night of the murder and had disappeared and was found in possession of the stolen property which was with the deceased on the night of the murder.

Now, though I do hold that the fact that a conviction is solely based on circumstantial evidence is by itself no ground for not inflicting the sentence of death, I do think that it is not improper to inflict a lesser sentence where there are other circumstances demanding the exercise of such discretion, as for instance the absence of a strong motive coupled with the possibility of the murder having been committed without premeditation and under a temporary derangement of the mind due to the fear of being prosecuted and convicted for a criminal offence. Unlike the English law where the Court is bound to pronounce judgment of death on a person above the age of 16 years who is convicted of murder, S 302, I. P. C., confers a jurisdiction on the Court to inflict the lesser sentence in befitting cases. The reason why no discretion is vested in the Judges in England is that down to the end of the reign of William IV such discretion was exercised by the King in Council, the King being always personally present. The list of persons capitally convicted was carefully gone through and the question who was and who was not to be executed considered and decided. That practice was discontinued at the beginning of the reign of Queen Victoria and was substituted by the Secretary of State for the Home Department being vested with jurisdiction to advise His Majesty in such matters: Vol. 3, Stephen's Criminal Laws of England, p. 89.

It is no doubt true that the discretion vested in the Courts should be judiciously exercised. But the exercise of such discretionary powers in any particular case must depend on its own facts considered in the light of various circumstances such as the magnitude of the mischief which the crime has a tendency to produce, the effect of the punishment in preventing similar crimes, the motive or inducement to the crime, disposition of the criminal, aggravating or mitigating circumstances and the like and not on the long-cherished now exploded theory of a tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye.

When murder is committed for lust or for rape perhaps it is necessary to take the life of the murderer not so much as to prevent him from committing similar offences, but to serve as a deterrent to others for committing similar offences. Again when a crime of a particular character is rampant in any locality as for instance wife murder in Sind the extreme penalty of the law is necessary to serve as a deterrent: Kadirbux v. Emperor (25). On the other hand the reasons which have induced the Courts to lean towards the secondary sentence of transportation for life are too numerous to mention and it is neither easy nor proper to crystallize the circumstances under which such discretion should be exercised in favour of the secondary sentence. Without therefore making any such attempt it is sufficient for me to hold that this is a fit case in which it will not be unwise for this Court to exercise its discretion in favour of accused 1. Not only the motive is deficient but there is possibility of the facts having been done in a moment of temporary madness and lastly so far as I am aware the murder of an infant brother is so rare that it does not necessarily call for the extreme penalty of the law so as to prevent others from committing similar offences. I also feel that the sentence of transportation will so far as accused 1 himself is concerned

With all deference therefore to the learned Judicial Commissioner, I am not prepared to confirm the sentence of death upon accused 1, but I would alter it to one of transportation for life.

With regard to the sentence of accused 2, I am also not prepared to take the same serious view as that taken by the learned Judicial Commissioner. If accused 1 was the murderer and if accused 2 helped him in washing the agath or the pair of trousers or offered a false explanation in respect of the inculpatory circumstances which would have exposed her husband to a charge of murder, it cannot be said that she deserves the maximum punishment provided under S. 201, I. P. C. Taking into consideration her subordinate position in the house I think that the sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment should meet the ends of justice. I would accordingly confirm the conviction of accused 1 and sentence him to transportation for life under S. 302, I. P. C., and would alter the conviction of accused 2 to one under S. 201, I. P. C. and sentence her to four years rigorous imprisonment. (On a difference of opinion the case was referred to a third Judge).

Wild, A. J. C.—This is a reference under S. 9 (c), Sind Courts Act, 1866. The two accused in this case being respectively husband and wife were convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Sukkur of the murders of two little boys who were the step-brothers of accused 1. Accused 1 was sentenced to death and the second accused to transportation for life. The accused appealed and the appeal and the confirmation case were heard by the learned Judicial Commissioner and the learned Mr. Rupchand, A. J. C. They agreed that the first accused was guilty of murder and that the second accused was guilty of an offence under S. 201, I. P. C. They, however, differed as to the sentences which should be passed on the two appellants. The case was therefore referred to me as the third Judge under S. 9 (c), Sind Courts Act.

The matter on which I am particularly asked to give my opinion is the sentence which should be passed on the two accused but I am seized of the whole case. It is no doubt illogical in a case like this, where the learned Judges who have decided the appeals are agreed as to the guilt of the accused and differ only as to the sentences which should be passed, that the opinion of the third Judge should be allowed to prevail if he differs from them on points on which they agree. S. 9 (c), however, does not restrict the third Judge to giving his opinion on the point or points of difference only, but makes it obligatory on him to give his opinion on the appeal or confirmation case as the case may be. This was so held in Sarat Chandra Mitra v. Emperor (26), which was in respect of a reference to a third Judge under S. 429, Criminal P. C. The case has therefore been argued on merits.

Mr. Elphinston for accused 1 has laid stress on the improbabilities of the conduct attributed to his client in first concealing the children and then murdering them; and in first digging a grave for the corpses and then throwing them on the open road. He has pointed out the various weak points in the prosecution case including the want of an adequate motive for accused 1 to commit two such atrocious murders. All these difficulties, however, had been brought to the notice of and considered by the Judicial Commissioner and the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner and in spite of them they have held that the evidence is to be believed and that the murders were committed by accused 1. A third Judge should not in my opinion differ from the other two in such a case unless there is a mistake of law or some fact which tells in favour of the accused which has escaped notice; or in short unless there are strong grounds for so doing. In this connexion the case of Corporation of Calcutta v. Grande Venkata Ratnam (27) may be referred to. Now, there is ample evidence to connect accused 1 with the murders. The boys were last seen alive with him in his house and their corpses were found a few hours later on the road outside the house, which shows that when accused 1 said that they had left his house he told a falsehood. A freshly dug grave was found in a room of the house of which accused 1 had the key and newly washed and blood-stained articles were discovered in a part of the house occupied by accused 1 and his wife, accused 2. A possible motive for the murders was the ill feeling which existed between accused 1 and his father.

It was contended that most of the above facts fit in with the theory that the murders were committed by accused 2 who bore her father-in-law ill will as he had not approved of his son's marriage with her and had not received her into the family, and that accused 1 merely helped her to conceal traces of the crime and committed an offence under S. 201, I. P. C. As, however, the learned Judicial Commissioner points out, it is very improbable that the wife should kill the children without the assistance of the husband, and one piece of evidence particularly connects accused 1 with the actual commission of the murders. This is that blood stains were found on his trousers which shows that he touched the children before their blood dried.

A point was taken which apparently has not been taken in appeals and this is that the murders were actually committed about 9 p. m. and not as the medical witness states at 1.45 a. m. and that accused 1 was outside the house when the murders were committed and till 1.30 a. m. or even later. The ground for the theory that the murders were committed several hours before the time given by the Medical Officer is that some half digested food was found in the stomach of one of the murdered children. It is argued that the last meal which the children had was at 2 p. m. when they ate their tiffin, and as undigested food was found in the stomach of one of them the murders could not have been committed more than seven hours after the meal. If however accused 1 and 2 kept the children in their house, there is no reason why they should have omitted to feed them, and if they had had a meal at 7 or 8.0 p. m. the opinion of the Medical Officer that the murders were committed at 1.45 a. m. would not be wrong. If, however, the murders were committed at an earlier hour, it does not help accused 1, because, though there is evidence that he was outside his house and pretending to look for the children at various times up to 1.30 a. m. the witnesses certainly do not show that he was continuously absent from his house during the whole time that the murders may have been committed. I see then no reason to differ from the learned Judicial Commissioner and the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner as to the guilt of accused 1, and in my opinion, he is proved to have committed the murders and to be guilty of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C.

As regards accused 2, the Police Inspector (Ex. 58) proves that when the house was searched a newly washed "agath" was found in the cupboard. Accused 2 was questioned about this and said that she had washed it because she had used it during her menstruation. She took the Police Inspector to the cupboard in the dressing room and pointed out rags and pads which she said she had used for menstruation, but they were found to be dry and not soiled. It is clear then that the explanation of accused 2 was false and as it is in evidence that one of the children might have been strangled with this agath it is a fair inference from the conduct of accused 2 that the agath was used for the commission of the crime and was blood-stained and that accused 2 washed it to remove traces of the crime. I agree then with the learned Judicial Commissioner and the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner that accused 2 knowing that the murders were committed caused evidence of the commission of the murders to disappear with the intention of screening accused 1 from legal punishment and with that intention gave false information to the police. My opinion therefore is that she is guilty of an offence under S. 201, I. P. C.

Coming now to the question of the sentences which is the question particularly referred to me for decision, it is to be noted that the learned Judicial Commissioner quoted with approval the remarks of the learned Sessions Judge that the double murder of two innocent boys was diabolical in conception and brutal in execution, and that there was absolutely no redeeming feature to warrant the infliction of the lesser sentence. He was therefore for confirming the death sentence and I agree with him. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was for passing a sentence of transportation for life on three grounds.

He remarks that the motive is deficient and that there is a possibility that the murders were committed without premeditation, and under a temporary derangement of mind due to a fear of prosecution for a criminal offence, and lastly he points out that the murder of an infant brother is so rare an offence that it does not necessarily call for the extreme penalty of the law. It is, however, settled law that it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove the motive though it is more satisfactory when the motive for a crime can be inferred. Nor is there any evidence that accused 1 was under any temporary derangement of mind when he committed the murders. The fact that he did so owing to a fear of being prosecuted for the confining of the two boys does not to my mind make his case any better. He had already committed one criminal offence and it is no palliation of his guilt that to absolve himself from punishment he committed another and more grievous offence. The case is much the same as that of man who commits an offence when in a state of drunkenness. He has wrongly put himself into a position in which he may be more likely to commit an offence. But drunkenness is no excuse if an offence is committed. Lastly, it is no doubt true that the murder of an infant brother is not a common offence and that a murder as atrocious as that committed by accused 1 is a rare occurrence. It does not, however, follow that because an offence is so atrocious as to be unusual, it should be punished with anything else than the extreme penalty provided by the law. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner held that the fact that the conviction is solely based on circumstantial evidence is by itself no ground for not inflicting the sentence of death. Mr. Elphinstone, however, for accused 1 has quoted certain cases in which the lesser sentence has apparently been passed on the ground that the evidence was circumstantial. He has relied on the case of Abdul Wahab v. Emperor (21), where it was said that although it is wholly illogical in a case of a trial for murder to accept facts as proved for the purpose of conviction and to throw any doubt on such proof in considering the question of sentence, yet this is an illogicality which has been fully and consistently recognized by the Courts. I am not prepared to follow this ruling as there is no settled practice of this or any other Court that in a case of murder where the evidence is circumstantial the lesser sentence should be passed. For instance in the Public Prosecutor v. Paramandi (22), it was said that if the Court is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty of murder and the circumstances require the imposition of the death penalty, the fact that the conviction is based on circumstantial evidence is not a reason for passing the lesser sentence allowed by law. Cases have been cited in which, in this province the lesser sentence has been passed in murder cases where the evidence has been circumstantial. The first of these is Isarsing Swansingh v. Emperor (28), where the sentence of transportation for life was apparently passed by the Sessions Judge of Hyderabad in a murder case where the evidence was circumstantial. In Emperor v. Mahomed Bux (29), where the case was referred to the High Court under S. 307, Criminal P. C., a sentence of transportation for life was passed in a murder case in view of the circumstantial nature of the evidence and the unanimous verdict of the jury for acquittal. In a similar case, however, which is unreported a reference was made by the Sessions Judge of Poona to the High Court of Bombay where the evidence of the murder was entirely circumstantial and there was a unanimous verdict of the jury for acquittal. The High Court in that case agreed with the Sessions Judge that the accused was guilty of murder and sentenced him to death. In Bahadur v. Emperor (23), which was a confirmation case, the appeal Court did not confirm the death sentence passed by the Sessions Judge of Hyderabad in the peculiar circumstances of the case. Lastly, in Bhag Shaikh v. Emperor (30) the appeal Court said:

"We cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that the evidence is purely circumstantial and that we are by no means altogether satisfied as to what the motive was," and while confirming the conviction for an offence under S. 302 reduced the sentence to one of transportation for life. On the other hand in the recent case of Karimbukhsh v. Emperor (24), a Bench of this Court on an appeal filed by Government enhanced the sentence of transportation for life to one of death in a case which depended merely on circumstantial evidence. From the above cases it is clear that there is no practice of this Court that the lesser sentence should invariably be passed in a murder case where the evidence is merely circumstantial. It is not the practice of the Madras or Bombay High Courts and in England most of the murderers are hanged on circumstantial evidence. In this case the circumstantial evidence is to my mind very clear and the murders were particularly atrocious as the murdered boys were so young and were the stepbrothers of accused 1. I see therefore no reason why the death sentence should not be confirmed.

It was urged that though the learned Sessions Judge might have been right in passing a sentence of death, in the first instance, it would not be right to confirm that sentence now owing to the delay which has occurred since the sentence was first passed. In this connexion the case of Autar Singh v. Emperor (31) has been referred to. That was a case where the Judges forming a Bench which heard the appeal and the confirmation case differed and the matter was referred to a third Judge. The third Judge was oppressed by the feeling that the appellants had, through no fault of theirs, capital sentences suspended over their heads for nearly six months and apparently also took into consideration the circumstance that one of the learned Judges of the Court expressed himself as dissatisfied with the evidence. The date on which the sentence of death was passed was 24th August 1929 which is a little more than six months ago but the case can be distinguished, if necessary on the ground that there was a difference of opinion between the two Judges as to the guilt of the appellants while that is not so here. In the case of an ordinary murder the delay in confirming a sentence of death may perhaps be taken into consideration, but this is not an ordinary murder. I see then no ground for passing the lesser sentence on account of the delay which has unfortunately occurred in confirming the death sentence.

As regards the sentence to be imposed on accused 2, the learned pleader for accused 2 has referred to two cases, Adho v. Emperor (32) and Kudaon v. Emperor (33). In the former case a sentence of nine months was passed for an offence under S. 201 and in the second case a sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment. The learned Judicial Commissioner presumably thinks that as the offences sought to be concealed was the offence of murder, the maximum penalty for an offence under S. 201 should be passed, that is the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner takes into consideration that the person to be shielded from prosecution was the husband of accused 2. Taking into consideration the subordinate position of accused 2 in the house, he thinks that a sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment would meet the ends of justice. I am impressed by the reasoning of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner and think that as accused 2 is not proved to have committed the murder and acted with the intention of screening her husband from punishment, the sentence suggested by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner is sufficient and appropriate. I would therefore confirm the sentence of death passed on accused 1 and would dismiss his appeal. I would alter the conviction of accused 2 from one under S. 302 to one under S. 201 and would sentence her to four years rigorous imprisonment under the latter section.

Benjamin Knowles—Appellant.

v.

Privy Council Appeal No. 54 of 1929.

(a) Privy Council—Board is not a Court of criminal appeal unless grave injustice is done—Criminal Trial.

The Privy Council does not sit as a Court of criminal appeal. To allow criminal proceedings to be reviewed by it there must have been substantial and grave injustice done: Dillet's case (1887) 12 A. C. 459, Foll.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 287—Distinction between manslaughter and murder not considered—Conviction for murder not sustainable—Conviction was quashed—Criminal Trial.

In the judgment of the lower Court which convicted the accused of murder without the aid of a jury there was not the slightest enquiry into whether, assuming that the shot which resulted in the death of the deceased was fired by the accused, the act amounted to manslaughter and not murder. There was no attempt to face the question of whether the standard of proof required to prove murder as against manslaughter had in the case been reached.

Held: that if the case had been before a jury and the Judge had not explained to them the possibility of a verdict of manslaughter but had said if not accident the only alternative is murder, that would have been an erroneous summing up. The question as between manslaughter and murder being entirely undealt with and in the absence of evidence sufficient to reach the standard of proof necessary to involve a conviction for murder the conviction must be quashed. [P 888 C 1, 2]

D. L. Pritt and Horace Douglas—for Appellant.

Attorney General C. H. Pearson—for the Crown.

Viscount Dunedin.—This appeal, for which special leave was granted by His Majesty in Council is against a conviction of the appellant for the murder of his wife, Mrs. Knowles, by the Acting Circuit Judge of Ashanti on 23rd November 1928. The case was tried by the Judge without a jury and the appellant was not allowed the assistance of either solicitor or counsel. The grounds of appeal are first, no jurisdiction, and second, that there was no evidence on which a conviction of murder could be maintained. The Court of Ashanti by which the appellant was tried was established by the Ashanti Administration Ordinance No. 1 of 1903. The sections of the Ordinance, as amended by subsequent ordinances which bear on the method of trial in criminal cases are the following:

Section 8: "Where not otherwise provided by some other statute, ordinance, or other law for the time being in force in Ashanti, the Court shall in causes and matters brought or arising before it, be guided by the law in force in the Gold Coast Colony as set forth in

Ss. 14 and 19, of the Supreme Court Ordinance of the said Colony."

Section 9: "So far as it is practicable and local circumstances permit, the procedure in the Court, civil and criminal, shall be the same as the procedure in the Supreme Court of the Gold Coast Colony."

Section 10: "In no cause or matter, civil or criminal, shall the employment of a barrister or solicitor be allowed."

It is unnecessary to quote the various sections of the Acts which regulate procedure in the Gold Coast, as it is clear that if the trial had been in the Gold Coast it would have been imperative to have a jury for a capital case and the prisoner would, if he chose, have had the assistance of counsel and solicitor. The appellant therefore contends that a jury for a capital case was a sine qua non, and that a conviction by a Judge sitting alone cannot stand. The Attorney-General stated, and it was not denied by the appellant, that as a matter of fact there never has been hitherto trial by jury in Ashanti.

Now the direction that in Ashanti the criminal procedure of the Gold Coast shall be the guide is not absolute, but is qualified by the provisions of S. 9. If jury trial is not practicable, or not permitted by local circumstances, then the direction does not apply. Practicability and the state of local circumstances are questions which can only be determined in Ashanti on the spot. It is impossible for their Lordships of this Board to form a conclusion on such matters, and it is not for them to turn themselves into a local tribunal. They are of opinion that this is a matter to which the maxim Omnia praesumuntur rite et solemniter acta clearly applies, and they are therefore unable to sanction this ground of appeal.

Before dealing with the question of the evidence their Lordships think it necessary emphatically to repeat what has been said on many occasions, that they do not sit as a Court of criminal appeal. To allow criminal proceedings to be reviewed, to use the words of Lord Watson in Dillet's case (1) at p. 467, there must have been "substantial and grave injustice done." In the present case if it had turned out that it was against the law for a Judge to try a capital case without a jury, that would have been substantial injustice, for it would have been conviction without jurisdiction, and it was on that ground that leave of appeal was manifestly granted. But the case once brought up it is incumbent on their Lordships to examine the judgment as given. Even in this somewhat exceptional case, however, their Lordships are still not sitting as an ordinary criminal Court of appeal in which case they would be entitled to consider what would have been their own verdict. Though the criterion is hardly as strict as it would have been on an application for leave based on the simple ground that the evidence did not support the verdict, yet they must be satisfied to use the words of Lord Sumner in Ibrahim v. The King (2) at p. 615, "there is something which in the particular case deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial."

Now the facts of the case as proved are simple enough. The appellant and his wife were alone in their bedroom after luncheon. There had been guests at luncheon, and they had gone away shortly after 2 p. m. without anything noticeable having happened. Their native servants heard loud voices suggestive of quarrelling. The appellant and his wife, it was proved, lived generally on good and, indeed, affectionate terms but had occasional quarrels which were greatly induced by the fact that both the appellant and his wife were addicted to the taking of too much liquor, and the appellant drugs (sic), and were often in a drunken or semi-drunken and dazed condition.

The evidence as to the time is confused and contradictory, but somewhere between 4 and 5 the native servants heard a shot and a cry. They were frightened and one of them ran off to the District Commissioner, who had been one of the guests at the luncheon and said what he had heard. The District Commissioner took his car and went off to the house of the accused, whom he saw, and asked if there had been an accident. The accused said it was all right. The District Commissioner then went away. The native servant went back again later and two hours later the District Commissioner wrote saying the native servants were very excited, and asking if he could be of any service. To this letter he got no reply. About the same time the native servant was called into the room and told to clean up a pool of blood. The accused said to his wife he would like to send her to the hospital. He then said he would go himself, and went. When he was gone, the cook, by desire of Mrs. Knowles, lifted a revolver which was by the bed put it into a box, locked it, and gave her the key. While clearing up the blood he picked up something which he did not recognise, but which was a revolver bullet.

That evening the accused got a sleeping draught containing morphia from the dispensary of the hospital. Next evening he got a repetition of the medicine and a hypodermic syringe with two ampoules of morphia. About 3 o'clock that day Dr. Gush, who lived at Kumasi, heard that something had happened and in consequence drove down to Bekwai, where the accused lived. He found the accused in a somewhat dazed condition and bearing signs of the results of alcohol and the drugs above referred to. The accused volunteered the information that there had been "a domestic fracas," and showed him his left leg covered with bruises which he said had been inflicted by his wife with an Indian club. He also said that she had been nagging him and he had said if she didn't stop he would put a bullet in her. Dr. Gush asked to see Mrs. Knowles, and heard her say she would like to see him. He then went into the bedroom with the accused and examined the wounds, which he found had been treated with iodine by the accused, a proper, though in the circumstances scarcely a sufficient, treatment. The wound was such a wound as would be inflicted by a revolver bullet. It was in a peculiar direction. The bullet had entered the left buttock and proceeded in an upward direction, and making its exit at the lower side of the abdomen on the right side, having, as was afterwards disclosed at a post-mortem, pierced the intestine, the bladder and the uterus. It was not bleeding directly when Dr. Gush saw it, but there was some blood coming from the vagina.

He asked Mrs. Knowles how the accident happened and she said she had been examining her husband's revolver which had been recently cleaned by the police, that she had put the revolver down on a chair, and shortly after sat upon it, that she tried to remove it from underneath her, but the open-work sleeve of her dress caught in the trigger and the revolver went off.

Dr. Gush said she must go to the hospital but had better have a bath first. He found the accused at the fire quite dazed. He went to fetch his car, and on coming back got the revolver from Mrs. Knowles, and found in it five cartridges and one empty shell. He noticed a hole in the mosquito net which covered the two beds. Mrs. Knowles died the next day, but before she died she made a dying declaration. This was to the same effect as to what she had said to Dr. Gush with two small differences. She mentioned that the revolver had been cleaned, but did not say "by the police," and she said that before it happened the boy had come in with afternoon tea. Other matters to be mentioned are that the mosquito net had several holes in it: that the accused said that on one occasion his wife had put a bullet past him while he was in bed; that another bullet was found by the police and certain marks on the furniture. Further, on 22nd October the Acting and Assistant Commissioner of Police went to Bekwai and found the accused in bed lying in blood-stained sheets and having on blood-stained pyjamas. He was weak and ill, but they considered him rational. They told him that they were going to detain him on a charge of causing grievous bodily harm and that a dying declaration was to be taken from his wife. He then made several remarks, viz.: "I think she will roll up" (i. e., die), "This is a bad business, I may go to prison." "If she rolls up I am afraid I am for it." He went with them to Kumasi, and in the Assistant Commissioner's bungalow, while the Acting Commissioner went for a warrant, he said: "I don't care what happens to me, I am worried about my wife," and then, "If my wife rolls up it means a murder case," and again, "If my wife rolls up I will be hung by the neck until I am dead."

Their Lordships must now examine the judgment. In the judgment of the Circuit Judge is to be found what to a jury would have been the summing up, and then the verdict. Now the Judge examines at great length the possibilities as to which bullet of the two bullets found, one of which had made dents in the furniture was the bullet which caused the wound. Upon this question he comes to no certain conclusion, being oppressed by the difficulties as to either theory. In their Lordships' view this enquiry is quite by the mark. It is quite certain that the deceased was killed by a revolver bullet, and there being no certain evidence as to the position of the parties at the time, no conclusion can be drawn from the possible indicia as to the flight of the bullet. The Judge next takes up the story of the deceased as given in the evidence of Dr. Gush, and as given in the wife's dying declaration, and along with it the story as given by the prisoner himself when he gave evidence at the time. That story, abbreviated, is as follows: That he had had a quarrel with his wife about nothing, which ended, that he then went to bed to sleep, that he saw his wife come in and start to undress and afterwards went to sleep, that there was a shot fired which woke him, and he heard his wife say she had been shot, that he jumped up and said: "show me, show me" (this was a remark heard by one of the servants behind the door), that he plugged the wound and put her to bed, and she said: "People will think I have done this purposely," to which he replied she had only to lie quiet and he would take the blame. That he did not trouble about the District Commissioner's note, as being a medical man himself he had done what was needful and that he did not want her disturbed. That afternoon he took drink and drugs, and to use his own words:

"I had the fixed idea of protecting my wife, and didn't realize until later that my statements were dangerous. I had an idea fixed that I would take any punishment if I could save my wife."

As regards the revolver he said that he usually kept it under his pillow fitted in a holster; that on this occasion he took it out of the holster, cocked it and laid it on the book case. The Judge then examines these accounts and finds them unsatisfactory. He is particularly pressed by the statement of Mrs. Knowles as to the servant bringing tea, which was not true, and he saw no reason for the appellant taking out the revolver and cocking it, and points out the discrepancy as to its place, the appellant saying it was on the book case, while Mrs. Knowles said it was on the chair. He lays stress on the various remarks made by the appellant after the event, which he considers were not made, except as to those on the 22nd when in a dazed condition. He thinks it proved that there was a domestic fracas, and considers the remark that he would put a bullet through his wife if she did not stop, very significant. He, therefore, comes to the conclusion that the wife's story was not true, and then he says: "Taken as above the evidence against the prisoner is overwhelming."

Now the learned Judge was entitled to draw his own conclusions as to whether Mrs. Knowles's account was true, and their Lordships, not being as above stated, an ordinary Court of criminal appeal, would not consider themselves entitled to set that aside upon the ground that they would come to a different conclusion on the facts as found. Having come to the conclusion that the story of an accident could not be substantiated, and the position and direction of the wound excluding all idea of deliberate self-infliction, he was driven to the conclusion that the shot was fired by the appellant. That there was criminality in what happened is a necessary result of that conclusion. In a fit of drunken recklessness to fire a shot to silence a nagging woman, which shot the woman, even though the shot was not intended to hit her, is a crime.

But the fatal flaw in the judgment is that having set aside Mrs. Knowles's account of the occurrence as accident he at once assumed that the only alternative to accident is murder. There is not the slightest inquiry into whether assuming that the shot was fired by the accused, the act amounted to manslaughter and not murder. There is no attempt to face the question of whether the standard of proof required to prove murder as against manslaughter, has in this case been reached. If the case had been before a jury and the Judge had not explained to them the possibility of a verdict of manslaughter, but had said, if not accident the only alternative is murder, that would have been an erroneous summing up. That is what is to be found in the judgment. The question as between manslaughter and murder is entirely undealt with, and their Lordships are, therefore, as the learned Judge failed to consider the question, bound to consider whether the evidence here reached the standard of proof necessary to involve a conviction for murder. They are clearly of opinion that it did not. A conviction for manslaughter might have been a different matter, but that is not before their Lordships. They have, therefore, humbly advised His Majesty to quash the conviction.

BOYS, J.

Chhotay and others—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal App. No. 977 of 1929, Decided on 14th April 1930, from an order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Etah, D/- 7th September 1929.

Penal Code, S. 99 — Right of private defence.

An amin assisted by a karinda, the karinda's master and accompanied by the police and some servants who were probably employed as lathials of the zamindar went to attach a crop. The party went in some force because they had information that the attachment would be resisted with violence and was in fact resisted with violence. The zamindar was struck to the ground and received several injuries. Thereupon and practically instantly, the zamindar's men rushed on his assailants and severely beat two, with some minor injuries to one or more. The two men severely beaten were the man whose crop was to be attached and his father, they being also the two who are said to have commenced the attack on the attaching party. Both these two severely injured men died.

Held: that the fact that the assailants did not actually succeed in assaulting anyone but the zamindar did not show anything by way of intention of assailants in the light of the fact that the counter-attack by the zamindar's men in defence of the zamindar was probably instantaneous and zamindar's men were entitled to plea of right of private defence. Judgment.—Six men appeal from a conviction under S. 304, I. P. C., and a sentence thereunder of three years' rigorous imprisonment. The facts briefly are that an amin assisted by a karinda, the karinda's master and accompanied by the police and some servants who were probably employed as lathials of the zamindar went to attach a crop. The party went in some force because they had information that the attachment would be resisted with violence. The circumstances are of course peculiar to this particular case, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to detail them in view of the fact that while I have been asked to read the whole judgment carefully I have not had any of the evidence laid before me. The findings are quite clear. The party intending to effect the attachment was resisted with violence. The zamindar was struck to the ground and received several injuries. Thereupon, and I have no doubt practically instantly, the zamindar's men rushed on his assailants and severely beat two, with some minor injuries to one or more. The two men severely beaten were the man whose crop was to be attached and his father, they being also the two who are said to have commenced the attack on the attaching party. Both these two severely injured men have died, and the question is what is the right view to take of the responsibility of the present appellants. The Judge has held that they committed their acts on grave and sudden provocation. He has refused them the benefit of a plea of the right of self defence because he says that there is nothing to show that the attacking party were going on to do anything further. With that view I do not think that I should agree. The whole of the circumstances would indicate that the fact that the assailants did not actually succeed in assaulting anyone but Azhar Husain, the zamindar, does not show anything in the light of the fact that the counter-attack by the zamindar's men in defence of the zamindar was probably instantaneous. I should, therefore, have been inclined to give the accused the full benefit of their plea but for the fact that they have undoubtedly exceeded their right in view of the number of injuries inflicted on Ohhattar. But taking all the facts into consideration I do not think that a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment was called for. It is in my view always desirable to make every effort to discover who was responsible for the initiation of violence and to punish such person heavily while dealing more leniently with the man whose violence was provoked, even if he exceeded the limits of his rights. In this case I would have given a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment. The accused have already suffered that and a little more. I, therefore, while maintaining the conviction, reduce the sentence to the period already undergone. The six appellants will be forthwith released.

v.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 30 of 1930, Decided on 20th March 1930, from decision of Mag., First Class, Dohad.

Petroleum Act, S. 15 (c)—Accused granted licence headed as "licence for possession of dangerous petroleum" — Licence providing, that accused was entitled to store 1,000 gallons of petroleum in his shed—Licensee possessing excess quantity but storing it in another's shed—As heading of licence was merely descriptive and accused never stored more than prescribed quantity, he was not liable to be convicted.

The licence granted to the accused was headed as "licence to possess dangerous petroleum". The licence then proceeded, "Licence is hereby granted to.....for the storage in the storage shed described below of 1,000 gallons of dangerous petroleum." The accused on several occasions got possession of more than 1,000 gallons, but he never stored in his shed more than 1,000 gallons, the excess quantity being stored on his behalf by another who had proper licence.

Held: that the heading of the licence was merely descriptive and so, as the accused never stored more than the permitted quantity in his shed, he was not liable to be convicted.

*G. G. Mahadevia and M. K. Mehta—*for Applicant.

*W. B. Pradhan—*for the Crown.

Broomfield, J. — The applicant in this case has a licence for the possession and storage of dangerous petroleum in Form B issued in accordance with R. 3, Chap. 4, Part 2, of the rules under the Petroleum Act. He has been convicted and fined Rs. 50 under S. 15 (c) of the Act which renders penal the breach of any condition contained in a licence granted under the Act. The licence granted to the applicant is in this form. It is headed :

"Licence to possess dangerous petroleum, otherwise than in bulk, in quantity exceeding 40 gallons."

It then proceeds as follows :

"Licence is hereby granted to Mr. D.T. Parmar of Surat for the storage, in the storage shed at Dohad described below, of 1,000 one thousand gallons of dangerous petroleum subject to the rules for the storage of petroleum published in Notification No. 2572 dated 18th May 1909, and to the further conditions on the back of the licence up to 31st December 1928."

Then there follows a description of the storage shed. We are not concerned with the further conditions on the back of the licence as it has not been suggested that there has been any breach of those. The facts of the case are that on three occasions, viz., 16th March 1929, 20th June 1929 and 10th August 1929, 660 cans of dangerous petroleum which had been consigned to the accused's firm were delivered to the manager of the firm at the Dohad Railway Station. 660 cans contain 1,320 gallons, but the whole quantity was not on any of these three occasions stored in the shed belonging to the accused in respect of which the licence has been granted to him. On the first two occasions the excess quantity was stored on the accused's behalf in a properly licenced storage shed belonging to one T. K. Singaporewala. On the third occasion the excess quantity beyond the 1,000 gallons which the accused was entitled to store in his shed was consigned by rail to M. C. Parikh, a partner of the firm, at Suth Road Station.

The contention of the prosecution is that the licence granted to the accused prohibits his being in possession of more than 1,000 gallons of dangerous petroleum, whether the petroleum is stored in his own licenced shed or in any other place. The trial Magistrate has referred to the definition of the word "possession" given by Sir James Stephen in his Digest of Criminal Law (p. 243) :

"A moveable thing is said to be in the possession of a person when he is so situated with respect to it that he has the power to deal with it as owner to the exclusion of all other persons, and when the circumstances are such that he may be presumed to intend to do so in case of need."

The learned Magistrate has taken the licence granted to the accused to be a licence for the possession of 1,000 gallons of dangerous petroleum in the above sense of the word "possession" and considers therefore that there has been a breach of the conditions of the licence. The learned Government Pleader has supported this view. He relies upon the heading to the licence and contends that this ought to be regarded as one of the terms. In our opinion this is not a reasonable view to take. The words at the beginning :

are clearly no more than a descriptive heading. It would be quite unreasonable to regard it as one of the terms of the licence, particularly as no definite quantity of petroleum is specified therein. The operative part of the licence is contained in the clause which I have already given and which merely provides for the storage of 1,000 gallons of dangerous petroleum in the accused's storage shed at Dohad. As the accused has not been shown to have stored more than 1,000 gallons in his shed it does not appear to us that there has been any breach of the conditions of the licence. It was suggested to us by the learned Government Pleader that if a person to whom licence has been granted in respect of 1,000 gallons may store 1,000 gallons in his own shed and may also store further quantity in a shed or sheds belonging to other persons there may perhaps be an avoidance of the payment of fees to Government. There is no evidence on the record on the question of fees, but anyhow it is obvious that if Government desires that the possession of dangerous petroleum in the sense of the word "possession" which has been suggested to us should be restricted, nothing could be easier than for Government to prescribe a licence in a form which would cover it. The licence in the present case obviously does not cover it or cover anything else than the storage of 1,000 gallons in the storage shed described in the licence. In our opinion, the accused has been wrongly convicted. We set aside the conviction.

and sentence and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 16 of 1930, Decided on 1st April 1930, from order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Third Division, Dharwar.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 155 (2)—Complaint.

Application requiring sanction of the Court for making an investigation under S. 155 (2) is not a complaint. [P 891 C 2]

H. C. Coyajee, B. J. Desai and S. B. Jathar—for Applicant.

W. B. Pradhan—for the Crown.

Mirza, J.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Third Division, Dharwar, refusing to take action on an application made by the petitioner to that Court that the proceedings against him now pending in the Court of the same Magistrate may be terminated and he may be discharged. The petitioner is being tried for offences under Ss. 164 to 165 and 109, I. P. C. They are cognizable offences. Proceedings against the petitioner were started by Ex. 1-A which was an application made to the District Magistrate asking that an investigation may be directed against the petitioner under the provisions of S. 155 (2), Criminal P. C. The District Magistrate having made an order for investigation under that section the police officer, N. S. Gurtu, made an investigation and thereafter filed a charge sheet before the Court. The case has proceeded on the basis of this application, Ex. 1-A, and the charge sheet.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner, firstly, that no report has been made to the Court as required by S. 173, Criminal P. C., and, secondly, that if the charge sheet in the case is to be regarded as a report, it is not a valid report under S. 190 (1) (b) because it fails to set out the statement of facts which would constitute the offences with which the petitioner is being charged. It is also contended on behalf of the petitioner that the procedure followed in the case contravenes the provisions of S. 190, Criminal P. C., which are that the Magistrate may take cognizance of any offence: (a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence; (b) upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer.

It is clear from the facts stated that the application first made to the District Magistrate cannot be regarded as a complaint. It was not put forward as a complaint but as an application requiring sanction of the Court for making an investigation under S. 155 (2), Criminal P. C. The charge sheet subsequently filed before the Court, however, can in my opinion, be regarded as coming under the description of a report. The District Magistrate has evidently treated this charge sheet as a report and has taken cognizance of the offence under S. 190 (1) (b) on the strength of this report. S. 173 (1) (a) provides that the police report on which the Magistrate is to take cognizance of the offence should be a report in the form prescribed by the Local Government. The report has to set forth the names of the parties, the nature of the information and the names of the persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case. The form used in this case appears to be the form sanctioned by the Local Government. In column 7 of the charge sheet the offences with which the petitioner is charged are set out as follows:

"In connexion with Hubli town C.R. Nos. 36 and 37 of 1927 the accused noted in the charge sheet and others conspired with each other and abetted one another in committing offences under Ss. 161, 162, 163, 164, 165 and 109, I. P. C."

From this description it is clear that the charge sheet, treating it as a report within the meaning of S. 190 (1) (b), fails to comply with the requisites of that section in important particulars. S. 190 (1) (a) states "upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence" and S. 190 (1) (b) states "upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer." The facts to be stated in the report clearly are facts which would constitute the offences charged. The case before us seems to be covered by the authority of the rulings in Lee v. Adhikary (1) and Nagendra Nath Chakravarti, In re (2). The order here will be similar to the order which was made in Lee v. Adhikary (1). The rule should be made absolute and the proceedings set aside. If the prosecution intend to proceed against the present applicant then the procedure of the Code as indicated in S. 190 and also in S. 173, if it be requisite to rely on that section, must be followed.

Broomfield, J.—I agree. It appears to me that there is no doubt that what happened in this case was that the District Magistrate took cognizance of the offence under S. 190 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., that is to say, upon a report in writing made by the police officer, N. S. Gurtu. The report was made in the form which appears to have been prescribed by Government for the purpose and if the form had been correctly filled in there would have been no difficulty about the case. The heading of column 7 of this form is :

"Charge or information, name of offence and circumstances connected with it in concise detail and under what section of the Penal Code charged."

In filling in the column, however, the sections of the Indian Penal Code have been mentioned but no details or circumstances of any description have been set out. Plainly, therefore, the provisions of S. 173 of the Code, which require that the nature of the information should be stated, and those of S. 190 (1) (b), which require that the facts constituting the offences should be stated, have been disregarded.

A suggestion was made by the learned Government Pleader that the charge-sheet might, if necessary, be treated as a complaint and that it was, therefore, open to the District Magistrate to take cognizance under S. 190 (1) (a). The case to which we were referred, Emperor v. Shivaswami (3), is an authority for that proposition. But we do not understand how the prosecution case would be benefited thereby, inasmuch as the complaint, equally with the report of the police officer, must contain the facts which constitute the offence. As my learned brother has pointed out there is no reason whatever why the previous application Ex. 1-A, asking the District Magistrate to direct an investigation, should be treated as a complaint, and even if it could be so treated that also does not, in our opinion, contain sufficient details of the offences charged. I agree with my learned brother that the case is covered by the two Calcutta authorities to which we have been referred and that a similar order ought to be made.

Judgment.—This Rule was issued under S. 115, Civil P. C., against an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Hooghly under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., on appeal from an order under S. 476 by the Munsif of Amta. The petitioners are two in number, Nagendra Nath Chakravarty and Giribala Devi. Petitioner 2 brought a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Amta and in support of her claim got a document produced through petitioner 1 which was found by the Munsif to be a forged one. He accordingly made a complaint under S. 476 against the plaintiff Giribala Devi as well as against her witness Nagendra Nath Chakravarty who is the son of Giribala. The learned Judge on appeal has upheld the order of the Munsif. As regards Giribala Devi, in our judgment, no case has been made out for our interference with the order of the Courts below. She was the plaintiff in the suit, the document was produced on her behalf and she may be presumed to know the nature of the document. Any point that may be urged in defence will undoubtedly be dealt with by the trial Magistrate. It is further urged on her behalf that she has filed an appeal against the judgment of the Munsif and therefore proceedings under S. 476, Criminal P. C., should be postponed till the disposal of the appeal. That is not a matter which comes exactly under the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C. The learned Judge says that when the Court has found a forged document used by a party before it, he is entitled to make a complaint and there is no reason why the complaint should be stayed till the final disposal of the appeal which may pass through more Courts than one. The result is that the Rule obtained by Giribala Devi is discharged.

As regards the petitioner Nagendra Nath Chakravarty the point is raised that he not being a party to the suit the Court has no jurisdiction to lodge a complaint against him under S. 476 read with S. 195, Criminal P. C., in view of the alteration in the law made by the Amending Act of 1923. We think that the question is of some importance and we should like to have the help of the Crown in this matter. We accordingly direct that the papers be sent to the Legal Remembrancer with a request to make it possible for him to appear before us by an advocate to show cause in this case on the ground stated above. Let this matter be placed before us as soon as the Legal Remembrancer has entered appearance. The order staying further proceedings in this matter will continue to be in force until the disposal of this Rule.

(a) Criminal Trial—Stay of—Rule of staying criminal trial when civil litigation pending is rule of prudence and its application must depend on merits of each particular case.

Amar Nath Chona—for Petitioner.M. Sleem—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner instituted a suit for the recovery of a fairly large amount against the Secretary of State for India in Council in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Rawalpindi. This suit was defended by the Secretary of State whom Mr. Ram Lal, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, represented in the Court.

In support of the defendant's case a large number of documents were filed in Court and during the progress of the case, Mr. Ram Lal apparently noticed that some documents filed by him had been tampered with by making erasures and additions. He communicated his impression to the Senior Subordinate Judge and stated that when he filed the documents he had read them carefully and made notes thereof and could say from personal knowledge that they had been tampered with. Apparently the alterations in the documents are such as would benefit the plaintiff to a large extent, and it seems that an enquiry, which the Senior Subordinate Judge has described as a confidential enquiry, was held with a view to find out if any official of the Court was implicated in the matter. The evidence recorded in that enquiry and the conclusion of the Senior Subordinate Judge have not been made available to this Court.

Subsequently, Mr. Ram Lal presented an application to the Senior Subordinate Judge asking him to make a complaint against the plaintiff Lorind Singh the petitioner before me, under various sections of the Indian Penal Code, for having made the alterations in the documents. The Senior Subordinate Judge granted this application and made a complaint accordingly.

In the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge it is distinctly stated that the enquiry made by him was confidential and had not been made use of in making the order complained against. He, however, based his order on certain presumptions which it is not necessary for me to consider at the present stage.

The petitioner presented an appeal to the District Judge of Rawalpindi which was transferred to the District Judge of Jhelum who has upheld the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge though not on the grounds mentioned by him but on some of the statements recorded by the Senior Subordinate Judge in the course of the confidential enquiry which statements, according to the District Judge, were recorded in the presence of the petitioner. The petitioner has presented an application for revision in this Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondent that an application under S. 439, Criminal P.C., does not lie as that section is confined to interference by this Court with orders passed by the subordinate criminal Courts. Reliance is placed in support of this objection on 40 Cal. 477 and 26 Cal. 229. At the same time the learned counsel for the respondent very properly referred to a judgment of a Full Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab reported as 5 P. R. 1908 in which a contrary view was taken. This last case is open to some criticism, and if it had been necessary for me to decide the question in the present case I would have felt constrained to refer it for more authoritative decision, but the petitioner's counsel contends that his case falls under S. 115, Civil P.C. Whether it falls under that section or under S. 107, Government of India Act, I need not decide as I am of opinion that this is a fit case in which I must interfere under either of the two sections mentioned above and for this reason also I do not decide whether this application is competent under S. 439, Criminal P. C.

The District Judge, as I have stated above, has based his conclusion on the statements made in the course of the confidential enquiry, but, it does not appear that the entire evidence recorded on that occasion was made available for criticism to the petitioner. It is obvious that it was unfair to the petitioner to make use against him of a portion of that record, concealing the rest from him. It was his right under the circumstances either to claim that the entire record of the confidential enquiry should be ruled out as inadmissible or the whole evidence be considered by the District Judge after being subject to criticism on behalf of the petitioner.

In my opinion, therefore, the petitioner has been seriously prejudiced by the procedure adopted by the Courts below and I propose to send the case back to the Senior Subordinate Judge for a preliminary enquiry such as is mentioned in S. 476, Criminal P. C. But the petitioner's counsel contends that this Court should not send the case back for further enquiry, but should stay the criminal proceedings altogether till the decision of the civil case, and in support of this prayer he made a passing reference to a number of cases in which it has been held that ordinarily criminal proceedings should not be started when the same question is also involved in a pending civil litigation. That however, is not a rule of law but a rule dictated by prudence, and its application must depend on the merits of each case. In the present case it is alleged that the documents were tampered with after they had been filed in Court. It is not a case where the allegation is that at the time when they were filed by a party they had been forged and in my opinion this circumstance makes a substantial difference in considering whether the criminal proceedings should or should not be stayed. On the present record, therefore, I am unable to accede to the petitioner's prayer that the original proceedings should be altogether stayed till the decision of the civil suit. At the same time, after the preliminary enquiry that I am directing the Senior Subordinate Judge, to hold, if it transpires that criminal proceedings should be stayed it will be open to the Courts below to take this action and for the petitioner, if he is dissatisfied, to move this Court, but, at the present stage, I see no reason to stay the criminal proceedings.

I, therefore, accept this petition and, setting aside the orders of the Courts below, direct the Senior Subordinate Judge to hold a preliminary enquiry under S. 476, Criminal P. C., in the presence of the parties and also to allow the petitioner to produce such evidence in rebuttal as he may desire to produce. I consider that this latter course is necessary in the present case because in order to enable the trial Court to determine whether a prima facie case has been made out against the petitioner, his point of view must be properly presented before him, specially because this is not a case in which after recording the evidence of the parties the Court has come to the conclusion that an offence has been committed. This petition is accepted and the case sent back to the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi. The complaint made against the petitioner is hereby withdrawn.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 159 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 138 of 1929, Decided on 18th July 1929, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Tanjore, in Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 71 of 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 520—Additional District Magistrate being invested with powers of Court of revision, is competent when disposing of case to make consequential order as to disposal of property.

Where an Additional District Magistrate is invested by the Local Government by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by S. 10 (2), Criminal P. Order.—The Sub-Magistrate of Tiruvadamardur in C. C. No. 202 of 1928 on his file discharged three persons of the offence of theft and subsequently passed an order that the property involved, namely three calves, should be returned to them. A petition praying for the revision of the order of discharge was presented by the complainant to the Additional District Magistrate of Tanjore and shortly afterwards he presented a supplementary petition praying that the property should be handed over to him. The Additional District Magistrate passed an order declining to interfere either with the order of discharge or with the directions of the lower Court regarding the property. The complainant then applied to the High Court to revise both portions of the order. The order of discharge has been disposed of in Cr. R. C. 158 of 1929, the petition having been dismissed and I have now to deal with the order with regard to the property.

The contention raised is that the Additional District Magistrate was not a Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision, such as is contemplated in S. 520, Criminal P. C., and accordingly that he was not competent to deal with the order which the Sub-Magistrate had passed under S. 517, disposing of the property whether by confirming it or by reversing it. I have been referred to the Full Bench case reported in Maria Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1), where the construction of S. 520, has been considered. An examination of that case will however show that the learned Judges divided the cases which might arise for consideration into two classes: firstly those in which an order with regard to property comes before a Court which has at the same time under its consideration an appeal, a reference or an application for revision as regards the main case itself, and secondly those in which an application to that Court to modify or reverse the order relating to property is made independently of any such appeal, reference or revision; and the judgments are concerned with the question how the latter class of cases may be dealt with, the view being clearly expressed that no difficulty arises in cases of the first class. The order subsequently passed by Reilly, J. in the case reported in Maria Pillai v. Gopala-krishna Iyer (2) was upon an application with regard to property filed independently of any appeal or revisional application. These cases accordingly do not support the petitioner's contention, but in fact run contrary to it; and I think there can be no question that, since an Additional District Magistrate is invested by the Local Government by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by S. 10 (2), Criminal P. C., with the powers of a Court of revision, he is competent when disposing of a case by virtue of those powers to make any consequential order as to the disposal of the property. That is to follow the plain terms of S. 520, Criminal P. C., and no authority has been shown me for taking a different view. I can find no reason therefore to interfere with the order of the Additional District Magistrate as contrary to law and I dismiss this criminal revision petition.

Criminal Revn. No. 72 of 1929 and Criminal Rev. Petn. No. 58 of 1929, Decided on 17th October 1929, against order of Town Sub-Magistrate, Trichinopoly in Criminal Case No. 585 of 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 403—Judgment-debtor escaping from Amin who had arrested him—Decree-holder complaining but accused acquitted—This acquittal is an effective bar against subsequent complaint by Amin.

A judgment-debtor escaped from the Amin who had arrested him. The decree-holder then lodged a complaint against him but he was acquitted. Thereupon the Amin lodged another complaint.

Held: that the judgment-debtor's acquittal in the decree-holder's complaint is an effective bar against the subsequent complaint by the Amin under S. 403. A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 148 and 86 Mad. 808, Ref. [P 896 Q 2]

Order.—The order of the Town Sub-Magistrate has no merits. A judgment-debtor escaped in the night from the Amin who had arrested him and the Subordinate Judge ordered the Amin to prosecute. There is no question here of sanction; the Amin could have prosecuted without reference to the Subordinate Judge and the Subordinate Judge simply passed the order departmentally to give the Amin a chance of rehabilitating his character. Meanwhile the decree-holder complained. When his case came up for trial the Court held that his complaint was incompetent and acquitted the accused. He was no doubt acquitted owing to the Sub-Magistrate's total misunderstanding of an Allahabad case which is not in Indian Law Reports. That case merely laid down that if a civil Court wishes to complain, the Munsif must lodge a complaint or get one lodged and cannot merely send a report. The case adds nothing to S. 190, Criminal P. C. But none the less he was acquitted.

Then the Amin lodged his complaint and the accused pleaded autre fois acquit under S. 403, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate refused to entertain the plea because in Emperor v. Amboji Dhakya (1) it has been held that a Court confronted with a complaint which requires sanction under law and is not sanctioned is a Court not competent to try the case as contemplated in S. 403, Criminal P. C. This ruling differs in terms from In re Ganapathi Bhattu (2), and it is amazing that the Sub-Magistrate should have gone for his law to Bombay. It is not necessary to discuss here which is the more correct ruling, because neither has any bearing upon the present case, and anyhow the Magistrate was bound by the Madras ruling which he will be well advised to take as a safe guide. In the present case the decree-holder or any other person residing in India was competent to complain, the Court was competent to try, and the acquittal is an effective bar under S. 403, Criminal P. C. The petition is allowed and the order is cancelled.

Des Raj—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Decided on 16th July 1930.

* (a) Government of India Act (1919), S. 72—Ordinance, whether is intra vires or ultra vires can be examined by High Court —Jurisdiction.

High Court can examine an Act of the legislature whether enacted by the legislature itself or by the Governor-General in Council or by the Governor-General, in order to see whether the said Act or Ordinance has been made and promulgated within the scope of the powers conferred on the legislature, the Governor-General in Council and the Governor-General respectively, by the Government of India Act 1919: A. I. R. 1920 P. C. 23 and 4 Cal. 172
(P.C.) Rel. on. [P 898 C 2; P 899 C 1]

 (b) Government of India Act (1919),
S. 72—(Per Broadway, J.) Whether emergency exists should be decided by Governor-General—His decision is final—Courts can, however, decide whether terms of Ordinance are within the provisions of the Act (Bhide, J. Contra).

. Per Broadway, J.—According to S. 72 of the Act it is the Governor-General, and Governor-General alone, who is concerned and the intention of the framers of the Act is to leave it to the Governor-General to decide, as a pure act of administration, whether a state of emergency exists which calls for an Ordinance and that his decision on that point is final and not liable to consideration by the Courts although it is open to the Courts to decide whether, in making the Ordinance he has kept his terms within the provisions of the Act: De Verteuil
v. Knaggs, (1918) A.C. 657, Rel. on. [P 899 C 1, 2]

Per Bhide, J.—The existence of an emergency and the purpose of an Ordinance can be looked into by a Court of law. If, however, there are circumstances which are reasonably capable of being looked upon as giving rise to an "emergency" the Court will not be justified in interfering even if it is inclined to take a different view on the facts, because legislature has invested the Governor-General with a discretion in very wide terms to exercise his powers under S. 72 and hence his decision is entitled to great weight. [P 903 C 2; P 904 C 1]

 (c) Government of India Act (1919),
S. 72—Ordinance 3 of 1930 though deprives a person of the right of appeal as given by the Criminal Procedure Code is, not ultra vires.

Although the provisions of the Ordinance have the effect of depriving the accused person of a right to be tried by a Sessions Judge aided by assessors and a right of appeal to the High Court, still as these rights are given by the Criminal Procedure Code which is only an Act of the Indian legislature, it can be overridden by the Indian legislature, the Governor-General-in-Council and the Governor-General acting by himself. The terms of the Ordinance, therefore, do not vitiate the provisions of the Government of India Act and hence the Ordinance is not ultra vires. [P 899 C 2, P 900 C 1]

(d) Interpretation of Statutes—Act must be construed according to its plain wording—Intention of legislature cannot be specu-lated.

Per Bhide, J.—It is an elementary rule of the construction of a statute that the provisions of an enactment must be construed according to its plain wording and nothing can be imported into it merely on the basis of any speculation as to the intention of the legislature. [P 901 C 2]

(e) Interpretation of Statutes—Language ambiguous—Two constructions possible—Construction beneficial to subject is preferred.

Per Bhide, J.—Where the language of an enactment is somewhat ambiguous and two constructions are possible, the construction most beneficial to the subject will have to be preferred according to the canon of interpretation. [P 901 C 2]

(f) Interpretation of Statutes—Discretion allowed to authority—It must be exercised in proper manner—If given in wide terms scope of interference is narrowed—Jurisdiction.

Per Bhide, J.—When the law vests discretion in a certain authority, the Courts are entitled to see that the discretion is exercised in a proper manner but when the discretion is conferred in wide terms the scope for interference of the discretion is narrowed to a considerable extent. [P 903 C 1]

(g) Words—"Emergency" meaning explained.

Per Bhide, J.—An "emergency" may result from an unforeseen combination of circumstances. This combination may not take place all at once but gradually. An immediate action may be rendered necessary when the culminating point is reached. [P 904 C 2]

rang, M. Saleem, Barkat Ali and M. C.

Broadway, J.—This is an application made on behalf of Des Raj son of Ram Kishen who is one of several persons being tried under S. 302 and other sections of the Indian Penal Code before a tribunal constituted under the Lahore Conspiracy Case Ordinance 1930, which Ordinance was made and promulgated by the Governor-General on 1st May 1930 under the powers conferred on him by S. 72, Government of India Act, 1919.

The application purports to be made under Ss. 491 and 561-A, Criminal P. C., and sets out that the petitioner and eighteen others were placed before a Magistrate of the First Class at Lahore charged with having committed, and having been concerned in the commission of various offences under the Penal Code; that the Magistrate commenced the committal proceedings on 11th July 1929 which continued, with occasional adjournments, up to 8th February 1930 on which date some of the persons, described as accused, went on hunger strike which necessitated an adjournment till 8th March 1930. From that date it was averred that the committal proceedings went on harmoniously up to the end of April after which, as a result of the promulgation of the Lahore Conspiracy Case Ordinance, 1930, the petitioner and his companions were placed before a tribunal constituted under the said Ordinance for trial. It was also averred that the custody in which the petitioner was kept was unlawful, as was also the trial inasmuch as the Ordinance in question was invalid and ultra vires.

The validity of the Ordinance is attacked on various grounds. It is contended: (1) that no emergency such as is contemplated by S. 72, Government of India Act, 1919, had been shown to exist; (2) that the statement issued by the Governor-General did not show a state of emergency; (3) that the provisions of the Ordinance "are not calculated to promote the peace and good government of British India or any part thereof"; (4) that the Ordinance goes beyond the letter and spirit of S. 72 in that it deprives a person under trial of a right to appeal to the High Court; and (5) that it is against the fundamental principles of the constitution and transgresses the unwritten law or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland whereon depends in a large degree the allegiance of His Majesty's subjects to the Crown.

The application is signed by a number of learned counsel and the case was argued before us by Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal. What we are asked to do is to hold that the Ordinance is not covered by the terms of S. 72, Government of India Act, and that the custody, in which the petitioner is, is unlawful, as also are the proceedings now being taken by the tribunal which is an illegal body.

From the arguments advanced by Mr. Jagan Nath four broad questions arise:

Firstly, has this Court jurisdiction to examine the Ordinance in order to decide whether it was lawfully made and promulgated?

Secondly, has this Court jurisdiction to consider the question of emergency or is it bound by the Governor-General's declaration of its existence?

Thirdly, whether the Governor-General has the power under the Government of India Act, 1919, to deprive the petitioner and his companions of the right of appeal to this Court as given by the laws in force in India.

Fourthly, whether there was in fact a state of emergency.

I have very carefully examined the authorities cited at the Bar, namely Empress v. Burah (1); Secy. of State v. Moment (2); (1867) L. R. 2 H. L. 175; Henrietta Muir Edwards v. Attorney-General, Canada; A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 120; Puran Mal v. Emperor (3); Sudodh Chandra Roy v. Emperor (4); Emperor v. Bhola Bhagat (5); Chandra Nath v. E. I. Ry. Co. (6); Vedappan Servai v. Perianan Servai (7); De Verteuil v. Knaggs (8); (1920) 1 K. B. 829; 86 L. J. R. 1119 and Bugga v. Emperor (9). It is not, however, necessary to discuss these authorities inasmuch as they were mainly cited in support of the contention that this Court had jurisdiction to examine the Ordinance in order to decide whether it had been lawfully promulgated. Mr. Sircar, Advocate-General, Bengal, conceded that this Court had jurisdiction to do so and this clearly emanated from the authorities themselves. In my judgment it is clear that this High Court can examine an Act of the Legislature whether enacted by the Legislature itself or by the Governor-General in Council or by the Governor-General, in order to see whether the said Act or Ordinance has been made and promulgated within the scope of the powers conferred on the Legislature, the Governor-General in Council and the Governor-General respectively by the Government of India Act, 1919.

The second question, however, is more difficult. If this Court has power to go behind the Governor-General's definite assertion that a state of emergency exists, it should be within its power to call for and examine the evidence or other material on which the Governor-General based his conclusion. It is, however, abundantly clear that S. 110, Government of India Act, 1919, places the Governor-General beyond the jurisdiction of this Court. It follows, therefore, that this Court could neither compel nor invite him to lay before us the evidence or other material upon which he came to his conclusion that a state of emergency existed. It has been urged by the counsel for the petitioner that this circumstance did not affect the situation inasmuch as it was open to the Governor-General to lay before the Court the material on which he acted, and that if he did not choose to do so this Court should proceed on the material placed before it. On the other hand it was urged by Mr. Sircar that the act of the Governor-General in coming to the conclusion that a state of emergency existed was purely an administrative act and as such was beyond the cognizance of this Court although the result, namely, the Ordinance, might be open to our examination with a view to ascertaining whether the Ordinance itself was in excess of the powers given to the Governor-General in that behalf by the Government of India Act, 1919. It seems to me that there is considerable force in the learned Advocate-General's contention, and as pointed out in De Verteuil v. Knaggs (8) :

"It is no part of the duty of a Court to review the discretion exercised by the Acting Governor."

It seems to me that it would be impossible for this Court to say that the Governor-General had arrived at an erroneous opinion or that his opinion was incorrect or unwarranted without our being possessed of the information, evidence or other material on which he based his conclusions.

Now S. 72, Government of India Act runs as follows :

"The Governor-General may in cases of emergency make and promulgate Ordinances

and it has been urged by Mr. Jagan Nath that these words do not imply that the Governor-General's declaration to the effect that a state of emergency exists is to be treated as conclusive.

In support of this contention our attention was drawn to Ss. 41 (2), 45-A (3), 50(2), 52-B (2), 67-A (4), 67-B (2) proviso and S. 72-E (2) proviso in order to show that where it was intended to give finality to the Governor-General's opinion or view the fact was clearly stated. A reference to these sections shows, however, that in each case they provide for the contingency of a difference of opinion arising between the Governor-General and other authority.

Section 41 (2) deals with a difference of opinion between the Governor-General and members of his council, while S. 50 (2) lays down a similar rule for Governors and their councils. Ss. 45-A (3), 52-B (2), 67-A (4), 67-B (2) proviso and S. 72-E (2) proviso make provision for differences of opinion between the Governor-General and the legislative bodies, etc.

In these circumstances I am unable to accept the contention, for in S. 72 it is the Governor-General and the Governor-General alone, who is concerned, and it seems to me that it was the intention of the framers of the Act to leave it to the Governor-General to decide, as a pure act of administration, whether a state of emergency existed which called for an Ordinance and that his decision on that point is, and was intended to be, final and not liable to consideration by the Courts, although it was still open to the Courts to decide whether, in making the Ordinance, he had kept its terms within the provisions of the Government of India Act.

Turning now to the provisions of the Ordinance, it was urged that the petitioner had been deprived of : (1) a right to be tried by a Sessions Judge aided by assessors ; and (2) a right of appeal to this Court. These are rights given to the subjects of this country by the Criminal Procedure Code and, as emphasized by Mr. Jagan Nath himself, the Criminal Procedure Code is an Act of the Indian Legislature enacted in accordance with the powers conferred on that body by the Government of India Act. There is nothing, therefore, to prevent the legislature from amending the Code so as to lay down a different procedure. That the Indian Legislature, the Governor-General in Council and the Governor-General acting by himself can even override on occasions the Letters Patent of this Court is apparent from Ol. 37 and I am, therefore, of opinion that there is no force in this contention and hold that the terms of the Ordinance in question do not violate the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1919.

The question as to whether this Ordinance goes beyond the letter and spirit of S. 72 is concluded by Bugga v. Emperor (9) and Parmeshwar Ahir v. Emperor (10) and needs no further discussion.

Finally, assuming that it is open to us to decide whether there was or was not a state of emergency it seems to me that the application itself, and the facts stated before us by Mr. Jagan Nath, sufficiently establish the existence of an emergency. We have been told that the magisterial enquiry commenced on 11th July 1929 and that before 26th July 1929 the prosecution had found it necessary to move this Court for assistance owing to the obstructive attitude adopted by some of the petitioner's companions. When it was found that it was not possible to obtain the required assistance (whatever the reasons may have been) it was said that steps were taken to introduce a Bill before the Assembly in order to meet the situation. What happened to this Bill was not stated, but again in January 1930 the prosecution attempted to expedite matters by moving this Court. On 31st January 1930 it was found that this Court could not render the assistance asked for, and on 8th February 1930 a hunger strike was commenced which held up the proceedings up to 8th March 1930. It is evident that the attitude adopted by the defence in this case was calculated to render the administration of criminal justice in the Courts not only ridiculous but impossible. This attitude was also a menace and a danger for it, by the adoption of such methods, a person accused of an offence could defy the authorities and prevent his being brought to trial under the ordinary rules of procedure, it is manifest the Courts would practically cease to function. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the situation created by the action of the accused persons themselves brought about a state of emergency which enabled the Governor-General to exercise the powers vested in him by S. 72.

I would, therefore, dismiss the petition.

Bhide, J. — The petitioner Des Raj and other persons were prosecuted last year on serious charges of criminal conspiracy and murder. The commitment proceedings commenced in July 1929 but owing to unprecedented delay and obstruction caused by the conduct of the accused persons the proceedings had made but little progress by 1st May 1930. On the latter date an Ordinance (No. 3 of 1930) was promulgated by the Governor-General constituting a special tribunal for the trial of these persons, so as to expedite the proceedings and bring the trial to a speedy conclusion. The case is being accordingly tried by a tribunal constituted under the Ordinance.

The petitioner has applied for his release under S. 491, Criminal P. C., on the ground that the Ordinance under which the tribunal referred to above has been constituted is ultra vires and that the custody in which he is being detained at present is, therefore, illegal.

The two main points which arise for decision in this case are :

(1) Whether the validity of an Ordinance promulgated by the Governor-General under S. 72, Government of India Act, 1919 can be questioned in a Court of law in this country.

(2) If so whether the Ordinance in question is ultra vires.

A considerable portion of the argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner was devoted to the first point, but it is unnecessary to dilate on it as it was practically conceded by the learned Advocate-General of Bengal who appeared for the Crown, that the Courts in India have power to adjudicate upon the validity of an enactment of the Indian Legislature, when the point is raised before them in a proper proceeding, was decided by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Empress v. Burah (11) as long ago as the year 1877. The case went up to the Privy

Council, and although the decision of the Full Bench was reversed on merits the power of the Indian Courts to adjudicate on the validity of a legislative enactment was not questioned: Empress v. Burah (11). An Ordinance promulgated by the Governor-General under S. 72, Government of India Act, stands on no higher footing than an enactment of the Indian Legislature and the same rule would naturally apply to it. In fact there is a reported case from this very province in which the question of the validity of an Ordinance was raised. This case also went up to the Privy Council and although their Lordships held the Ordinance in question in that case to be valid, it shows clearly that the validity of an Ordinance can be challenged in a Court of law.

The second question is, however, much more difficult. It would appear from S. 72, Government of India Act, that the power of legislation by Ordinance conferred by that section on the Governor-General is subject to threefold restriction. In the first place there must be an "emergency" to justify the exercise of the power. Secondly, the power can be exercised only for the peace and good government of British India or any part thereof. Lastly, the Ordinance must not go beyond the power of the Indian Legislature to make laws. In the present instance it was not seriously contended that the Ordinance in question goes beyond the powers of the Indian Legislature. It was, indeed, urged in Cl. (e) of para. 10 of the petition that the Ordinance was invalid inasmuch as it transgresses :

"the unwritten law or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland whereon depends in a large degree the allegiance of His Majesty's subjects to the Crown." of S. 65, Government of India Act.

But in view of the interpretation placed upon these words by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bugga v. Emperor (9) the point was not pressed. The main points on which the learned counsel for the petitioner laid stress were that there was no "emergency" justifying the promulgation of the Ordinance and it was not required for the :

"peace and good government of British India or any part thereof."

On behalf of the Crown, it was contended that this Court has no jurisdiction at all to go into the above questions as it was for the Governor-General to decide whether there was any emergency and whether the Ordinance in question was required for the peace and good government of British India or any part thereof. Now, it is an elementary rule of the construction of statutes that the provisions of an enactment must be construed according to its plain wording and nothing can be imported into it merely on the basis of any speculation as to the intention of the Legislature. There is nothing in the language of S. 72 to indicate that the Governor-General's opinion on the points referred to above is to be taken as final. There are other sections in the Government of India Act where finality is expressly conferred upon the acts of executive authorities and in some cases it is specifically laid down that their acts are not liable to be challenged in a Court of law : see e.g. S. 52-B, Cl. 2 ; S. 72 D-(3). In the absence of any such provision the initial presumption is that a Court of law will have jurisdiction to go into these matters if it becomes necessary to do so in order to determine any question properly coming before it for decision. Even if it be supposed for the sake of argument that the language is somewhat ambiguous and both constructions are possible, the construction most beneficial to the subject will have to be preferred, according to another well-known canon of interpretation : of Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 6th Edn, p. 501 and the construction giving jurisdiction to Courts is obviously the one beneficial to the subject.

It was next urged that the decision as to the existence of an emergency and the necessity of the Ordinance is of an "administrative" character but even if this be so, that by itself would not, I think, necessarily bar the jurisdiction of Courts if the matter comes before them for decision in a proper proceeding. For the administrative act assumes a quasi-judicial character when it is a condition precedent to the exercise of certain powers under the law. The case De Verteuil v. Knaggs (8), which was cited on behalf of the petitioner deserves notice in this connexion. In that case the owner of an estate in Trinidad sued the Governor of Trinidad and the Protector of Immigrants for a declaration that an order under S. 203 of the Immigration Ordinance for the transfer of the immigrants' indentures on the estate was ultra vires. S. 203 of the Immigration Ordinance empowered the Governor to transfer the indentures of the immigrants :

"on sufficient grounds shown to his satisfaction that all or many of the immigrants' indentured should be removed therefrom."

This power was essentially of an executive character and all that the section required was that "sufficient grounds should have been shown to the satisfaction of the Governor." Yet the Judicial Committee went into the question and held that the Governor could not exercise power without an enquiry and without giving a fair opportunity to the person concerned to be heard. Another contention raised on behalf of the Crown was that the Governor-General was not subject to the jurisdiction of this Court and hence he could not be compelled to disclose the facts on which his decision is based. But this fact cannot, I think, affect the petitioner's case. The petitioner alleges that he is being detained in illegal custody and if he is able to make out a prima facie case it will be for the Crown to show "legal justification" for the custody. The writ of Habeas Corpus is considered to be the greatest safeguard of the personal liberty of a subject in England and is available against the acts of the highest officers of the Crown. The same remark would apply to the powers conferred by S. 491, Criminal P. C., on the High Courts and the mere fact that the Ordinance was promulgated by the Governor-General, who is not personally subject to the jurisdiction of the Court would, in my opinion, be no justification for the petitioner's detention in custody, if the Ordinance were, in fact, found to be ultra vires as alleged.

Lastly, it was urged that it would create a very inconvenient situation if the Governor-General's decision on the question of emergency and necessity of a particular measure for the peace and good government of the country were held to be open to scrutiny by Courts. But this argument cannot, by itself, be considered to be a sufficient ground for holding that the jurisdiction of the Courts to enquire into these questions is barred.

As pointed out already, the existence of an "emergency" is a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of promulgating Ordinances conferred upon the Governor-General. Similarly, the section requires the power to be exercised only for the peace and good government of British India or any part thereof. It follows, therefore, that unless these conditions are fulfilled no Ordinance promulgated under S. 72 will be valid. If, then, a Court of law has power to enquire into the validity of an Ordinance, it must necessarily have power to see whether these conditions are fulfilled. If, for instance, it is found that an Ordinance was promulgated in the absence of an emergency whatever or for a purpose wholly unconnected with the peace or good government of the country (a contingency which is, of course, not very likely to arise in practice, but is not inconceivable) can it be maintained that a Court of law has no power to declare the Ordinance to be invalid? I think the answer to this question must clearly be in the negative. In Puran Mal v. Emperor (3) the question arose whether certain extraordinary powers which were conferred on the President of a Municipality by the Punjab Municipal Act had been properly exercised and it was held that the exercise of the said powers was illegal as there was no emergency. This was, no doubt, a decision by a single Judge of the Punjab Chief Court, but it does not appear to have been dissented from or overruled in any subsequent case. The person concerned was, of course, a much humbler individual than the Governor-General, but I do not see how the case can be distinguished in principle. The learned counsel for the Crown conceded that Courts have power to enquire into the third condition laid down in S. 72 viz., that the Ordinance must not go beyond the law-making power of the Indian legislature and his contention that the first two contentions cannot be inquired into seems inconsistent. Of course, it was open to the legislature to lay down that the declaration of the Governor-General as to the fulfilment of these conditions should be taken as conclusive evidence but it has not chosen to do so.

The position as regards Ordinances issued in an emergency in this country seems to be analogous to that as regards regulations, framed in the interest of public safety under the Defence of the Realm Act in England during the Great War. But the Courts in England do not appear to have considered themselves debarred from going into the question whether a particular regulation was reasonably necessary for the public safety on the ground that the executive authorities were the sole judges of the matter. In Rex v. Halliday (12) (at p. 1127), in dealing with a Regulation framed in the interest of public safety, Lord Atkinson remarked as follows:

"It by no means follows, however, that if on the face of a regulation, it enjoined or required something to be done which could not in any reasonable way aid in securing the public safety and the defence of the realm, it would not be ultra vires and void."

In Chester v. Bateson (13) Darling, J., adopted this position and went on to consider whether it was a "necessary or even reasonable way to aid in securing the public safety and the defence of the realm to give power to a minister to forbid any person to institute any proceedings to recover possession of a house so long as a war worker is living in it."

Similarly, Avory, J., another Judge who sat on the Bench in that case, stated the question in the following terms:

"And the only question for decision is whether this portion of the regulation is ultra vires the statute under which it purports to be made, that is to say the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914. This depends upon whether it can be said, on any reasonable construction of the statute to be a regulation for securing the public safety and the defence of the realm and particularly under S. 1, sub-S. 1 (c), whether it can be said to be a regulation to prevent the successful prosecution of the war being endangered."

Eventually the regulation in question in that case was held to be ultra vires, the Judges (apparently) holding that the regulation as it stood was not required for public safety and that the infringement of the right of the subjects to have access to the Courts of justice, which it involved was not warranted by the statute under which it was framed. A similar view was taken in Newcastle Breweries Co. v. The King (14). In Rex v. Halliday (12) on the other hand, the regulation in question in that case was held to be not ultra vires because it was covered by the express language of the statute. But even then Lord Atkinson thought it necessary to make the observation quoted above and reserve his decision thereon. After giving my anxious and careful consideration to the arguments advanced by the learned counsel for the Crown, I am unable to find any valid ground for holding that the jurisdiction of Courts to enquire into the above-mentioned conditions is absolutely barred.

But though the decision of the Governor-General on the aforesaid conditions cannot, in my opinion be held to be final, it will naturally be entitled to very great weight. The legislature has invested him with a discretion in very wide terms to exercise his power under S. 72. No rigid definition of the term "emergency" has been attempted and the words are also obviously of the widest import. When the law vests discretion in a certain authority, the Courts are entitled to see that the discretion is exercised in a proper manner: see Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, Edn. 6, p. 226, but when the discretion is conferred in wide terms the scope for interference with the discretion is of course narrowed to a considerable extent. A Court of law will, therefore, I think, not be justified in questioning or interfering with the wide discretion conferred upon the Governor-General in the present instance unless it is clear that there were no circumstances which could reasonably be considered to constitute an "emergency" that the Ordinance in question could not possibly be required for the peace and good government of the country.

None of the authorities cited seemed to throw much light on this point, but the following test laid down by Salter, J., in New Castle Breweries Ltd. v. The King (14), in which the validity of a regulation framed under the Defence of the Realm Act was challenged seems to me to be a suitable guide in the circumstances of the present case. "The test to be applied" remarked the learned Judge :

"Is whether this part of the regulation is reasonable for securing the public safety and the defence of the realm. If it is, it is valid and the Crown-in-Council is the sole judge of its expediency."

So in the present case, if the ordinance is reasonably capable of being required for the peace and good government of British India or any part thereof this condition must, I think, be held to be fulfilled. Similarly, if there are circumstances which are reasonably capable of being 'looked upon as giving rise to an "emergency," the Court will not, in my opinion, be justified in interfering even it was 'inclined to take a different view on facts.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the existence of an emergency and the purpose of the Ordinance can be looked into by a Court of law to the extent stated above.

I now proceed to consider whether there are any good grounds for holding that the Ordinance which is sought to be attacked in the present case is invalid. It is the petitioner who comes to Court to challenge the validity of the Ordinance. The onus obviously lies on him in the first instance to make out a prima facie case. The petitioner's case is that there was no emergency to justify the Ordinance and that it was not needed in the interest of peace or good government. The petitioner has filed an affidavit that the proceedings in the committing Magistrate's Court were going on in a regular manner when the Ordinance was promulgated and it has been contended on his behalf that even the statement issued by the Governor-General along with the Ordinance does not make out any case of "emergency." The learned counsel for the petitioner drew our attention in this connexion to the meaning of the word "emergency" as given in Webster's Dictionary which is as follows :

"An unforeseen occurrence or combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action or remedy."

It was urged that the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court were going on for some nine months and no unforeseen event had occurred immediately before the Ordinance to justify its promulgation. But I do not think that is the right way of looking at the matter. An emergency may result according to the very definition relied on by the learned counsel from an unforeseen "combination of circumstances." This combination may not take place all at once but gradually, and immediate action may be rendered necessary when the culminating point is reached. The statement issued along with the Ordinance does not purport to be a complete statement of facts constituting the "emergency," but even from that statement (the correctness of the facts in which was not challenged before us) it is clear that the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court had been delayed by the wilful absence of the prisoners who had gone on a hunger strike on two occasions and that the administration of justice was being brought into contempt by their disorderly conduct and revolutionary demonstrations. It was brought out in the course of the arguments of the petitioner's counsel himself that this Court was unsuccessfully approached on two occasions with a view to find a remedy for the situation under the existing law and a Bill introduced for the same purpose had also for some reason or other proved abortive. It is also common knowledge that conditions in India had been disturbed for some time before the promulgation of the Ordinance. It cannot, therefore, be said that there were no circumstances at all, which could reasonably be held to constitute an emergency or call for immediate action in the interests of peace and good government of the country.

Finally, it was urged that the Ordinance was ultra vires, at any rate in so far as it made provisions for matters wholly lacking in the essentials of emergency as it has deprived the accused of their right of appeal and the High Court of its power of superintendence over the tribunal. But these provisions not being in excess of the powers conferred upon the Indian Legislature by S. 65, Government of India Act, the Ordinance cannot be held to be ultra vires on this ground. Under S. 65, Government of India Act, the Indian Legislature has power to make laws affecting the jurisdiction of the High Court and under S. 72, Government of India Act, the Governor-General has the sole power in this respect as the Indian Legislature itself. This is also made clear in Cl. 87,

Letters Patent of this Court. The expediency or propriety of the provisions of the Ordinance cannot be called in question in these proceedings, if the ordinance, as a whole, is within the provisions of S. 72, Government of India Act, as I hold it to be. It may, however, be pointed out that an appeal to this Court was probably considered unnecessary as the tribunal consists of three Judges of this Court. It must also be remembered that the deprivation of the right of appeal in such circumstances cannot be said to be wholly repugnant to the existing law. For under S. 526, Criminal P. C., the High Court has power to transfer a case to itself for trial, and if this is done the right of appeal is automatically taken away.

In my judgment the petitioner has failed to establish that Ordinance No. 3 of 1930 is ultra vires and I, therefore, concur with my learned brother in dismissing this petition.

PULLAN, J.

Lala and others—Accused — Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 15 of 1930, Decided on 24th April 1930, made by Second Addl. Sess. Judge, Lucknow.

Public Gambling Act (18 of 1867), S. 13 — "Public place" — Meaning explained.

A public place is one which is in full view of the public and one to which the public has access: White v. Cabitt, 1 K. B. 443, Ref.; A. I. R. 1922 Oudh 275; 51 I. C. 971 and A. I. R. 1922 Oudh 196, Dist. [P 905 C 2]

Jagannath Prasad Kapur — for Appellants.

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow at Unao in a case of gambling under S. 13, Public Gambling Act 18 of 1867. The first objection made to the trial was that one of the accused was only 13 years of age. The Magistrate pointed out that he himself recorded his age as 17, and he was therefore quite entitled to proceed with the case as no plea was raised that the accused was a minor. The second point raised by the learned Additional Sessions Judge is that the place where the gambling took place was not a public place. He describes it as a verandah of a shop and he does not controvert the statement of the Magistrate that it is on a public road. A public place for the purposes of the Gambling Act is a place to which the public have a right of access and the question of ownership is immaterial. The same is the view taken by the Courts in England in interpreting various special acts and I have before me a very recent decision of the King's Bench, White v. Cabitt (1) in which reference is made to the standard case of Queen v. Wellard (2) which shows that the view taken in England still is that a plot of ground privately owned to which the public have no right of access but are allowed to pass over may be a public place.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge refers me to two cases: one reported in Emperor v. Bashir (3) and another reported in an unauthorized report of the Lahore High Court Badraduddin v. Emperor (4) in which cases it was held that certain places, namely, land forming an angle between two roads in the one case and lands situated near a temple in the premises of the railway station in the other case were not public places. I have been referred on the part of the Crown to another ruling of the Judicial Commissioner's Court reported in Emperor v. Lalji (5), in which it was held that a footpath running from a public way through a private grove and used by the public as of right is a public place. None of these cases is exactly parallel to that before me. In my opinion a public place is one which is in full view of the public and one to which the public has access. But in this case there is no evidence that the public had a right of access to the verandah. For all I know the owner of the shop may have refused to allow the public to go on his verandah. If the public had no right of access even though the shop is Criminal Appeals Nos. 1504 and 1505 of 1929, Decided on 6th January 1930.

(a) Burma Village Act, S. 28—S. 28 does not apply where Magistrate takes cognizance of offence of his own motion under Criminal P. C., S. 190 (1) (c).

The terms of S. 28, Burma Village Act, must be strictly construed. The section applies only to the entertainment of a complaint and does not impose any restriction upon the prosecution of a headman if the prosecution is instituted otherwise than on complaint. It does not, therefore, apply to a case in which a Magistrate of his own motion takes cognizance of an offence under the provisions of S. 190 (1) (a), Criminal P. C. [P 906 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 190 — Proceedings of enquiry into certain unauthorized horse-races submitted to Deputy Commissioner — Latter can take cognizance of offences in his capacity of District Magistrate.

Where the Township and Subdivisional Officers enquire into certain unauthorized horse races and submit the proceedings to the Deputy Commissioner who on considering the report records an order in his capacity as District Magistrate, taking cognizance of offences, the latter has jurisdiction to take cognizance of offences in a manner he did : 43 Mad. 709, Rel. on; 37 Cal. 221, Cons. [P 907 C 1]

Lambert—for the Crown.

Paul—for Respondent.

Judgment.—On two different days in February and March last unauthorized horse races were held at a village in the Henzada District. This matter was enquired into by the Township and Subdivisional Officers whose proceedings were submitted to the Deputy Commissioner. On considering their reports the Deputy Commissioner recorded an order in his capacity as District Magistrate taking cognizance of the two offences and sending them to another Magistrate for trial. The present respondent was one of the persons thus prosecuted and in both cases he was convicted by the trying Magistrate. On appeal to the Sessions Court the convictions of the respondent were set aside and he was acquitted on the ground that the prosecution of the respondent, who was a village headman, could not be instituted except with the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner under S. 28, Burma Village Act. The Sessions Judge held that the procedure adopted by the Deputy Commissioner and District Magistrate was incorrect, and that the proper course would have been for the Deputy Commissioner to sanction the prosecution of the Headman. The Local Government now appeals against these orders of acquittal.

In the circumstances above described I should be inclined to hold that, if S. 28, Village Act, were applicable in the present case, the procedure adopted by the Deputy Commissioner in his dual capacity as Deputy Commissioner and District Magistrate was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of that section. But I do not think it necessary to go into this question more fully, for, in my opinion, from the terms of S. 28, that section is not applicable at all in the present case.

The section reads:

No complaint against a headman or member of a village committee or rural policeman of any act or omission punishable under this Act shall be entertained by any Court unless the prosecution is instituted by order of, or under authority from the Deputy Commissioner.

The terms of this section must be strictly construed, and on such a construction it is clear that the section applies only to the entertainment of a complaint and does not impose any restriction upon the prosecution of a headman if the prosecution is instituted otherwise than on complaint. It does not, therefore, apply to a case in which a Magistrate of his own motion takes cognizance of an offence under the provisions of S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C. The Sessions Judge was, therefore, clearly wrong in allowing the appeals of the respondent on the ground given by him.

For the respondent it has been urged: firstly, that on the evidence the conviction of the respondent was not justified; and, secondly, that the District Magistrate has no power under S. 190 (1) (c) Criminal P. C., to take cognizance of an offence on information received by him in a different official capacity. In support of this second proposition I have been referred to the case of Lakhi Narayan Ghose v. Emperor (1). In that case it was held by one Judge of the Calcutta High Court that a Magistrate who has received information in another public capacity cannot act on it in his capacity of a Magistrate and initiate criminal proceedings under S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C. The learned Judge came to this finding following the case of Thakur Pershad Singh v. Emperor (2), in which he himself and another learned Judge had come to a similar decision. It may be noted that in this latter case the Judges said that by his action in that particular case the Magistrate was practically making himself a Judge in his own case. But in the case of Lakhi Narayan Ghose v. Emperor (1), the other Judge Carnduff, J. was not prepared to accept this decision. He pointed out that the decision clearly went beyond the terms of the Criminal Procedure Code. This view has also been taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Sundarasan v. Emperor (3).

I agree with the view taken by the learned Judges in this last case that the effect of the earlier Calcutta decision would be to add to the terms of S. 190, Criminal P. C., provisions which cannot be found therein. In my view, the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offences disclosed in the present cases. As regards the facts, it is true that the Sessions Judge has not come to any definite finding as to whether it was or was not proved that the respondent committed the offences of which he had been convicted. The case should now, I think, go back to the Sessions Judge in order that he may decide the appeals on the fact. I allow these appeals, set aside the orders of acquittal passed in favour of the respondent, Nga Po Win, and remand the appeals of the respondent to the Sessions Court for determination on their merits, Criminal Reference No. 794 of 1929, Decided on 16th January 1930, made by Addl. Sess.-Judge, Basti, on 11th November 1929.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 139 (2) and 140 (1)—Magistrate cannot compel a party to go to civil Court and specially party in whose favour he is inclined.

The provisions of S. 140 (1) do not apply to a stay under S. 139 (2) and the Magistrate cannot compel either party to go to the civil Court. If the defendant denies the claim and the denial is proved, the criminal Court holds its hand and it will be the business of the plaintiff to bring a civil suit if he likes. If he does not, the denial is maintained. If he does bring a suit and succeeds, the Magistrate may proceed to pass an order absolute under S. 140 (1) Under no circumstances when the opinion of the Magistrate is in favour of one party can he direct that party to go to the civil Court. [F 907 C 2]

S. Mohammad Amin—for Applicants.

M. Waliullah and L. M. Roy—for Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—I am not surprised at the Magistrate being confused by the in-artistic provisions of Ch. 10, Criminal P. C. What is meant by the provisions of S. 139 (2) is that when a Magistrate finds that there is reliable evidence in support of the denial by the defendant of the plaintiff's claim of public right, all he has to do is merely to stay the proceedings until the matter of the existence of such right has been decided by a competent civil Court. The provisions of S. 140 (1) do not apply to such stay and the Magistrate cannot compel either party to go to the civil Court. The purpose of this new section introduced in 1923 is clear. The plaintiff in the criminal Court makes a claim and a defendant denies it. If the denial is proved the criminal Court holds its hand and it will be the business of the plaintiff to bring a civil suit if he likes. If he does not, the denial is maintained. If he does bring a suit and succeeds the Magistrate may proceed to pass an order absolute under S. 140 (1). When the opinion of the Magistrate was in favour of the applicants, Rozan and others, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct Rozan and others to go to the civil Court. The Magistrate's order of 20th July 1929, subsequent to the sentence:

"I stay the proceedings till the matter of the existence of such right has been decided by a competent civil Court"

Meher Sardar and another — Accused — Petitioners.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Nos. 1 and 2 of 1930, Decided on 22nd May 1930.

Forests Act, S. 59—Interpretation—Words "any person claiming to be interested in the property" in S. 59 are not limited to case contemplated by S. 57—Words "so seized" refer to seizure under S. 52.

The first canon of construction of a statute is that you must take the language as it stands and if it is clear, give effect to it. There is no possible ground for saying that the phrase "any person claiming to be interested in the property so seized" occurring in S. 59 could be construed as limited to the case contemplated by S. 57 when no mention is made of any such limitation, the language of the section is perfectly clear and unrestricted in its terms and must be given effect to accordingly. Apart from that, the words "so seized" logically and grammatically refer to the seizure under S. 52, which includes seizure of tools, boats and etc.

Suresh Chandra Taluqdar and Hari Das Gupta—for Petitioners.

Anil Chandra Roy Chowdhury — for the Crown.

Judgment.—In this case an order has been made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Khulna confiscating a boat said to belong to the petitioner, under the provisions of Chap. 9, Forests Act. The boat has been confiscated under the provisions of S. 55. On appeal to the learned Judge he has dismissed the appeal holding apparently inter alia that the applicant was no party to the proceedings in the original Court and no investigation as to his claim for relief from confiscation was made in that Court, and that under the provisions of S. 59, Forests Act, he is not entitled to a determination of that question on appeal.

The language of S. 59 is this:

"The officer who made the seizure under S. 52 or any of his official superiors, or any person claiming to be interested in the property so seized may appeal from the order of confiscation."

The contention before us has been that the phrase "or any person interested in the property so seized" has reference only to the circumstances previously contemplated and provided for in S. 57. S. 57 provides a special procedure when the offender is not known or cannot be found and it relates to the forest produce and provides that no order of confiscation is to be made in that case amongst other things without hearing the person if any claiming any right thereto and the evidence if any which he may produce in support of his claim. We are unable to give effect to the contention that the clause already quoted from S. 59 is to be confined in its scope to the conditions contemplated in S. 57. The first canon of construction of a statute is that you must take the language as it stands and if it is clear give effect to it. There is no possible ground for saying that the phrase "any person claiming to be interested in the property so seized" should be construed as limited to the case contemplated by S. 57 when no mention is made of any such limitation; the language of the section is perfectly clear and unrestricted in its terms and must be given effect to accordingly. Apart from that, the words "so seized" logically and grammatically refer to the seizure under S. 52, which includes seizure of tools, boats and etc.

The only other argument placed before us was that even if it was conceded that the present applicant had any locus standi before the appellate Court it should be laid down that his contention there must be limited to this a that the order for confiscation will not stand because the boat was not used in the commission of the offence; and that once it is shown that it was in fact used the order for confiscation must stand as a matter of course. To any such proposition laid down in such broad terms we are unable to assent. It need only be said that the matter is one to be determined upon such evidence as there may be in the particular circumstances of each case. The Rules accordingly are made absolute in these terms and the matters must go back to the learned Judge for determination of the question according to law.

Devi Dayal—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 370 of 1930, Decided on 21st May 1930, reported by Sess. Judge, Karnal, on 1st March 1930.

Motor Vehicles Act, S. 16—Owner is guilty of offence even though not present in case of breach of road certificate—Punjab Motor Vehicles Plying for Hire Rules (1922), S. 3.

Where the driver of a motor lorry does not use the lorry in conformity with the conditions specified in the road certificate, the owner of the lorry is guilty of an offence under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act read with R. 3, Punjab Motor Vehicles Plying for Hire Rules, 1922, even though he is not present when the breach of the condition takes place.

Where, therefore, a driver was found carrying 47 (when only ten could be carried under the road certificate) and one passenger was sitting on mudguard, which was prohibited.

Held: that there being clear breach of the road certificate, the owner was liable under R. 3, Punjab Motor Vehicles Plying for Hire Rules, 1922, although he was not present: 39 Cal. 415; 45 Cal. 480 and A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 985, Rel. on; 27 P. R. 1918; A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 410 and A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 63, Dist. [P 911 C 1]

S. M. Haq for Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Report.—The petitioner Devi Dayal was the owner of motor lorry No. P. 4969-A plying on hire in Rohtak District and Mumtaz Ali was its driver. On 24th April 1929 the District Engineer, Rohtak, reported that he found the preceding day motor lorry No. P. 4969-A carrying 17 passengers, of whom one was on the mudguard. The driver Mumtaz Ali admitted the above allegations, and as the lorry was licensed to carry ten passengers only, and the carriage of a passenger on the mudguard was prohibited, he was convicted under S. 16 for having contravened the rules of the road certificate, and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

The owner Devi Dayal stated that the driver had no authority from him to carry more passengers than allowed by the rules, and denied all knowledge. The learned Magistrate, however, held that the owner was responsible for the breach of the conditions of the road certificate as it was in his name, and he sentenced him as well to fine of Rs. 20.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds.

It was not contended that the owner was present in the lorry when 17 passengers were being carried by the driver, and the report of the District Engineer, the defence of the petitioner as also the trend of the order of the District Magistrate, confirm the conclusion that he was not present. The learned District Magistrate practically gave no reasons for holding the owner liable, but the Public Prosecutor relies on R. 3, Punjab Motor Vehicles Plying for Hire Rules, 1922, which reads as under:

"No person shall let or ply for hire or suffer to be let or plied for hire a motor vehicle in any public place unless a road certificate in Form A, specified in Sch. A hereto has been granted in respect thereof by the controlling authority, and except in conformity with the conditions in such certificate."

He argues that the owner suffered his motor vehicle to be plied for hire in contravention of the conditions of his road certificate and was, therefore, liable. The real question thus was whether in the above circumstances the petitioner can be said to have "suffered," that is, allowed his driver to ply the lorry for hire in contravention of the terms of the road certificate. Now it cannot be said that there was any evidence, either direct or circumstantial, from which any consent, express or implied, can be held to have been established or to be capable of being deduced. That being the case, it cannot by any stretch of interpretation be held that the petitioner allowed the driver to contravene the rules, and he could not, therefore, be held liable: vide A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 410 and A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 63.

An absent owner cannot be held liable if the Act provides for liability for permitting and causing a certain thing, unless it can be shown that the act was done with the master's knowledge and assent, express or implied. The use of the word "suffer" indicates that a particular intent or state of mind is of the essence of an offence, and as that intent or state had not been established, the conviction of the owner could not be said to be justifiable: vide Sohan Singh v. Emperor (1).

As a result of the above discussion, I am of opinion that the petitioner Devi Dayal was wrongly convicted, and submit the records to the High Court with a recommendation that the conviction may be quashed and the sentence set aside.

Note.—The fine has already been paid.

Order.—Dev Dayal, the owner of a motor lorry plying for hire in the Rohtak District, was convicted under S.16, Motor Vehicles Act, by a Magistrate, First Class, for a breach of R. 3, Punjab Motor Vehicles Plying for Hire Rules, 1922, and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20. The learned Sessions Judge has forwarded the proceedings with a recommendation that the conviction be quashed on the ground that an absent owner cannot be held liable unless it can be shown that the act was done with his knowledge and assent, express or implied. He relied upon Sohan Singh v. Emperor (1), A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 410 and A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 63.

None of the authorities referred to by the learned Sessions Judge are in point. In Sohan Singh v. Emperor (1) it was held that an absent owner cannot be fined because his servant drove his motor car without lights after lighting up time. The breach in that case was of Rr. 10 and 17, Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules, 1915. The effect of these rules is that no person should drive a motor vehicle at night without lights. There is nothing in them about suffering another person to do so. It follows that Sohan Singh v. Emperor (1) was properly decided and only the person driving the car was liable under the rules.

Similarly A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 410 is not an authority for the proposition advanced by the Sessions Judge. That was a breach of R. 6 of the Act which provides that no owner shall allow any person, who is not licensed, to drive his car. In the case before Mukherji, J., the driver, who was licensed, in the absence of the owner, allowed a third person, who was not licensed, to drive it and clearly the owner was properly held not guilty.

The Rangoon case, A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 63, is also not in favour of the view taken by the Sessions Judge. In that case the owner of a motor car was held not criminally liable for negligence of the driver in driving the car without a properly illuminated rear-light, if the owner had made provision for such illumination. Under R. 26 (3), Burma Motor Vehicles Rules provision has to be made in every motor vehicle for the illumination of the registered number on the rear number plate in such a manner as to render the number legible at a reasonable distance. This was done by the owner and the negligence of the driver in not having the lamp lit was clearly not within his power. Further, it was pointed out in that judgment that it did not come within the mischief of any of the rules. Edward Thorton v. Emperor (2) was distinguished as the rule in that case was as to permitting a motor car to be used in a particular way. The learned Judge who decided the Burma case has clearly shown that there was no provision like that in the Burma rules and it was on that ground that the decision was based. On the authorities before the learned Sessions Judge, therefore, he should not have made the present reference.

There are, however, three Division Bench decisions of the Calcutta High Court on this question. The first is Edward Thorton v. Emperor (2). It was held in it that the owner of a motor car who expressly or impliedly permitted his car to be used or driven by his servant was liable under R. 4 and S. 4 of the Act, for causing a breach of R. 20 of the rules framed in Bengal though he was not in the car at the time and had given his servant general directions to observe the regulation speed. It was pointed out, however, that this principle was not to be applied when the chauffeur was improperly using the car for his own purposes without the permission of the owner. R. 4 referred to in the above judgment is as follows :

"No person shall drive, or * * * permit to be used any motor car * * * which does not in all respects conform to these rules, or which is so driven or used as to contravene any of these rules."

Rule 20 provided against dangerous driving and the owner was held guilty under R. 4. This decision was followed by another Division Bench in Baiyanath Bose v. Emperor (3). It is true that Edward Thorton v. Emperor (2) was not followed in Varaj Lal v.

(2) [1917] 88 Cal. 415=12 Cr. L. J. 89=9 I. G. 480.

(3) [1918] 45 Cal. 430=18 Cr. L. J. 985=42 I. C. 601.

Emperor (4) but the first two decisions have equal authority with the last.

Coming now to the case referred to, the driver was caught with 17 passengers in his lorry of whom one was on the mudguard. Under the road certificate only ten passengers could be carried and the carriage of a passenger on the mudguard was prohibited. There was, therefore, a clear breach of the road certificate, and the only question is: Was the owner liable. Now under the Punjab Motor Vehicles Plying for Hire Rules, 1922, it is the owner who has to get a road certificate and put it in his lorry. S. 3 of those rules runs:

"No person shall let or ply for hire or suffer to be let or plied for hire a motor vehicle in any public place unless a road certificate in form A, specified in Sch. A hereto, has been granted in respect thereof by the controlling authority and, except in conformity with the conditions specified in such certificate."

This rule is in two parts. It is clear that under the first part if the owner suffered his lorry to be plied for hire without a road certificate even though he was not present, he would be guilty of an offence under S. 16 read with this rule. It follows logically that he would also be guilty of an offence if the lorry was being used not in conformity with the conditions specified in the certificate as provided for in the second part of the rule. I am quite clear that the owner is liable under R. 3 of the rules referred to. It is impossible to hold that he will be liable under the first part of the rule and not under the second. Such an absurd interpretation has to be avoided at all costs.

In my judgment the owner was properly held guilty of suffering his motor lorry to be plied for hire not in conformity with the conditions specified in his road certificate even though he was not present. His driver in this particular case had been twice convicted of a breach of the rule and the owner had kept him on. This shows that the owner knew what his driver was in the habit of doing and accepted this. Apart from this consideration, however, the owner is in my judgment clearly guilty.

I, therefore, decline to interfere and direct that the record be returned.

J. L. Kapur for Muhammad Alam—for Appellant.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Om Parkash, 27, a Brahmin of Dera Ismail Khan, and described as an itinerant preacher of the Punjab Provincial Congress Committee, has been convicted of sedition under S. 124-A, I. P. C., in respect of a speech delivered by him on 13th June 1929 at a public meeting held at the Sabzi Mandi at Maghiana town in the district of Jhang. He has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 or in default six months' further rigorous imprisonment.

Notes of the speech, which was delivered in Urdu, were taken down by constable Nazar Hussain (P.W. 3) and these notes were later elaborated and a fair copy made of them by head constable Ladh Ram who was also present at the meeting. The notes of the speech are marked as Ex. P. D. and the fair copy prepared by Ladh Ram as Ex. P. C. The notes do not purport to be a verbatim report of the speech made by the appellant, but I entertain no doubt that these notes and the fair copy Ex. P. C. correctly represent what the appellant said. Appellant, when asked whether he had delivered the speech as contained in Ex. P. C., denied having done so and also disclaimed having attempted on that occasion to bring into hatred or contempt, or to excite disaffection against, the Government. In the written statement filed by him he denied having made any seditious speech at a public meeting on 13th June 1929, and stated that he never intended to bring or attempt to bring into hatred or contempt the Government, nor did he incite or attempt to incite disaffection towards Government; that the report alleged to have been made by the police official of his speech is distorted, mutilated and several sentences have been interpolated into the speech which appellant never uttered, and that the creed of the appellant was to strive for Swaraj by non-violent, peaceful and legitimate means on which lines he had always been working.

Appellant has not shown in what particular aspect the speech as contained in Exs. P. C. and P. D. does not correctly represent what he said at the meeting. The notes made by constable Nazar Hussain certainly contain many gaps, but these have not been filled in such a way as to materially affect the speech as a whole. Further, as pointed out by the learned District Magistrate, the evidence of two of the defence witnesses supports, to some extent, the correctness of the version as taken down and reported by the two police officers mentioned above. I have read the original notes of the speech made by constable Nazar Hussain and also the fair copy prepared by head constable Latha Ram and find it established that the intention of the appellant by the speech was to bring or attempt to bring into hatred or contempt or excite or attempt to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India.

The appellant commenced his speech by a laudatory reference to Bhagat Singh and Datt, and quoted, with approval, certain utterances by them in connexion with their act in throwing a bomb into the Assembly at Delhi. The appellant then proceeded to refer to the late Lala Lajpat Rai having been beaten with lathis on the occasion of the visit of the Simon Commission to Lahore, and remarked that this was the act of a civilized Government. He then, by way of contrast or comparison, referred to the Saunders murder and to seven youths having been taken into custody without discrimination as to their guilt or innocence in this affair. He wound up this portion of his speech by stating that Lala Lajpat Rai had been killed and nobody, presumably Government, cared. He then went on to point out that the Government was creating discord between Hindus and Mussalmans over kine-killing and music before mosques, while, at the same time 70,000 kine were being daily killed for the purpose of supplying meat for the British Army. The Hindus suffered this on account of the soldiers being armed with pistols, guns and bombs, whereas if the Muslim sacrificed a cow a riot or fight resulted and money was wasted in the Courts.

Thus it was the policy of Government to pit one community against the other and obtain the benefit, or in other words, to divide and rule. Government itself was preaching them to practise violence and, though, at present, the speaker and those who thought like him were non-violent, their future attitude would be decided at the end of December, and if it became necessary they would become violent. Ireland was held up as an example and Government was, enjoined to arrive at an understanding of the situation. The speaker then pointed out to his audience that in the Great War the Indians had rendered great help and that the reward for this was the Rowlatt Act, Jalianwala Bagh and the hanging of innocent leaders. He concluded his speech by stating that in the eyes of the Government Indians were of much less value than a mule or an ass and mentioned a remark alleged to have been made by a certain General that while a mule was worth Rs. 500 a sepoy was worth Rs. 10. It may be that the actual words used by the appellant are not in themselves seditious but the whole purport and tenor of his speech undoubtedly shows in my opinion, that he was holding up the Government to execration by his reference to the various acts attributed by him to Government and the attitude taken by Government in certain matters.

In order to show the intention of the appellant the prosecution led evidence as to two speeches delivered by the appellant at Garh Shanker in the Hoshiarpur District on 7th December 1928 and Jahman in the Lahore District on 11th December 1928. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that these speeches were not relevant and admissible but, in my judgment, they are clearly so under S. 14, Evidence Act, as illustrated by illustrations (e), (f) and (j) to that section. Mr. Kapoor conceded that, where certain speeches formed part of a series of speeches or lectures on one topic delivered within short period of time any of such speeches or lectures were admissible, under S. 14, as evidence of the intention of the speaker in respect of the speech which formed the subject of prosecution in the present case. But the latter had not been delivered within a short period of time owing to more than six months having elapsed between the speeches delivered in December and the speech in the present case. I do not think it is possible to exclude the two speeches delivered at Garh Shanker and Jahman simply on this ground as the intervening period cannot be described as long. These two speeches clearly indicate the intention of the appellant when he made the speech in the present case. Mr. Kapoor referring to Satyaranjan Bakshi v. Emperor (1) urged that the speech should be read as a whole in a fair, free and liberal spirit and that isolated and selected sentences should not be taken into account. He further submitted that the speech read in this manner was incapable of producing disaffection and the reference to the beating of the late Lala Lajpat Rai did not bring the Government into contempt. The learned counsel by his reference to this particular matter is himself doing what he has asked the Court not to do. It is clear from the judgment of the learned District Magistrate that he has read the speech as a whole and has not based the conviction on isolated or selected utterances. I, too, have read and construed the speech in the sense in which the learned counsel would have me do, and my opinion of its nature and character has been arrived at after having so read the speech.

It was then contended on behalf of the appellant that the notes of the speech were not admissible in evidence as Nazar Hussain should have testified orally as to the speech and under S. 159, Evidence Act, refreshed his memory from those notes. I fail to see how S. 159, relied upon by the learned counsel and as urged by him, can render the notes of the speech inadmissible in evidence. This provision of law merely provides for a witness, while under examination, refreshing his memory by referring to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned or so soon afterwards that the Court considers it likely that the transaction was at that time fresh in his memory. Instead of deposing orally as to the speech made by the appellant constable Nazar Hussain put in the notes made by him of that speech, and I confess I can see no difference between this procedure and Nazar Hussain deposing orally after reference to those notes. For all practical purposes this would be one and the same thing.

Finally, it was urged by Mr. Kapoor that even if the speech did offend against the provisions of S. 124-A, which it did not either piecemeal or collectively, the sentence imposed was severe, and in this connexion he referred to three similar cases which recently came before this Court, namely Sant Ram v. Emperor, Anand Kishore v. Emperor and Satya Pal v. Emperor reported in A. I. R. 1930 Lah. pp. 86, 306 and 309, respectively. In the first case the sentences of one year's and 18 months' rigorous imprisonment in respect of two charges were reduced to two concurrent sentences of nine months' rigorous imprisonment. In the second case a sentence of 12 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 was reduced to the period of imprisonment already undergone, five weeks' imprisonment, the fine being maintained. In the third case a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 was reduced to the period of impidocument already undergone, four months, the fine being remitted.

The question of sentence in such cases is certainly not free from difficulty, but at the same time it must be remembered that undue leniency far from having a deterrent effect, which is the end and aim of all punishment, tends to result in offences of this nature being repeated or more widely committed. The principal object of punishment is the prevention of crime and the measure of punishment must consequently vary from time to time according to the prevalence of a particular form of crime and other circumstances. An amount of severity may be very appropriate at one time which would be quite uncalled for at another, and the converse of this holds equally good namely where at one time leniency may be appropriate such would be quite uncalled for later. In determining the appropriate sentence it is also necessary to bear in mind the time, place and circumstances existing at or about the period during which the speech in the present case was made. Bearing all these points in mind, I have, after mature consideration, arrived at the conclusion that the sentence of imprisonment in the present case is by no means severe, but is, on the other hand appropriate, and should not be reduced. The fine imposed, however, seems to be somewhat excessive and I reduce this to Rs. 200, or in default four months' rigorous imprisonment. The appeal is otherwise dismissed.

G. C. Narang—for Appellant.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Judgment. — Professor Indra of Delhi has been convicted by the Additional District Magistrate of Delhi of sedition, as defined in S. 124-A, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for nine months. He was tried for having made two speeches on 25th January 1930 and 23rd February 1930, respectively. With the complaint two documents, marked Exs. B and C, were filed which were alleged to be transliterations of the speeches, and it was alleged that by those speeches the accused created or attempted to create feelings of disaffection, contempt and hatred against His Majesty's Government established by law in British India. There is no controversy as to the subject-matter of the speeches made by the appellant.

The only contention of the learned counsel for the appellant before me is that the speeches do not offend against the provisions of S. 124-A, I. P. C. It is in my opinion desirable to copy in extenso the two Exs B and C:

Exhibit B.—"Abstract from a meeting report held on 25th January 1930, under the auspices of District Congress Committee, Delhi, in the Queen's Gardens.

"Professor Indra moves the following resolution:

"That this public meeting of the citizens of Delhi heartily congratulates Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose and other Bengal leaders on their convictions and assures them that the country would not now rest until it has achieved complete independence'. In support of the above resolution the speaker made a short speech in which he remarked that Subhas Chandra Bose was the advocate of the complete independence along with Pandit Jowahir Lal Nehru who had not been yet arrested being President of the Lahore Congress. The Government therefore gave the same position to Subhas Chandra Bose which it would have given to Pandit Jowahir Lal Nehru if he had not been the President of the Congress. When the warrant of Mr. Bose was out in Calcutta it was then intimated that he would not be convicted. Mr. Bose was the Bengal lion, hence the Government did not think it proper to leave him outside the jail. He said that in fact the Government wanted that until the parliamentary enactment which would be the outcome of the Simon Commission's report such people who made agitation should not be left free. The speaker criticized His Excellency the Viceroy's speech delivered yesterday in the Assembly and said that the personnel of the Conference will be composed of Rajas of States, Hindus, Muslims and other parties of India, who would oppose one another with the result that the English papers would send out the report that the Indians fought amongst themselves in the Round Table Conference. The second thing that the Viceroy had declared in his speech was that he had reminded those who wanted to assert complete independence through unlawful means and by breaking laws, that he being the Viceroy of India he realized his responsibility and powers and up till now the policy of the Government had been not to punish those who merely expressed an opinion, but henceforth such men would also be punished whose utterances may bring about unpleasant results. He further said that Subhas Chandra Bose has been sentenced for the offence of participating in a procession where shouts of "long live revolutions and down with imperialism" were raised. He remarked that the conspiracy meant thinking and consulting secretly, but mere shouts could not constitute a conspiracy under which they were sentenced. He said that the conviction of Mr. Bose was the first specimen of the hints contained in the Viceroy's speech. They were congratulating the Bengal leaders because they had got what they wanted. Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose would have been congratulated all the more if he had died for the sake of the motherland. He further said that those leaders who characterized Lord Irwin's policy towards India as peaceful should read his recent speech. He said that Subhas' conviction was not due to the police and magistracy of Calcutta, but it was the reflection of the policy of the Government of India which had been hinted in the Viceroy's speech. He said that by celebrating the Independence Day they were putting their hands into the lion's den and were giving a challenge to the Government. If they were frightened by such arrests they should sit quiet or else they should prepare hundreds of men like Subhas Chandra Bose. The speaker strongly appealed to the audience to participate in the Independence Day celebration in large numbers and not to give an impression to the Government that in Delhi these functions were unsuccessful. He said that the statement of the Viceroy and such punishment could not crush the movement for freedom.

Exhibit C.—"Abstract from the meeting report held on 28rd February 1930, at Najafgarh in connexion with the Naujawan Bharat Sabha rural propaganda: "Professor Indra in moving the resolution for the remission of land revenue and tanjawi tried to instigate the peasants for the preparation of non-payment of land revenue. One Jhande, Lambardar of Dinapore, interrupted and said that Mahatma Gandhi had once before advised the Indians and thousands died in consequence, he would like to know what they got at that time. To this the speaker replied that as the people did not act properly on the instructions of the Mahatma, therefore they failed. He further said that the leaders were true messengers of Mahatma and they were undergoing all sorts of trouble for the betterment of the country and the nation whereas the Government messengers were sucking their blood. The speaker further in the course of his speech inviting the peasants to attend the meetings remarked that there could be no peace during the British Raj, the true peace would be restored when there would be a Government of the peasants and labourers. The speaker further instigated the audience for the non-payment of the revenue and at this juncture Diwan, a Banis of Najafgarh, shouted, "The distress warrant comes with the officer commanding the revenue." On this the speaker exemplifying the case of Bardoli exhorted them to become firm and do the same."

Now, taking the speech made on 25th January 1930, first a report whereof is contained in Ex. B, it would be observed that the speech of the petitioner was made in moving a resolution at a meeting held under the auspices of the District Congress Committee of Delhi in the Queen's Garden of Delhi. The resolution was to congratulate Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose and other Bengal leaders on their convictions and contained an assurance to them that the country would not rest until it had achieved complete independence. It is contended by the learned Government Advocate that in the speech made in moving the resolution the appellant suggested that the Government had secured the conviction of Mr. Bose in order to confine him in jail in pursuance of their policy that:

"people who made agitations should not be left free until the parliamentary enactment which would be the outcome of the Simon Commission's Report," in other words, that the conviction of Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose was illegal and had been secured for ulterior motives. The appellant is further alleged to have appealed to the audience to participate in the "Independence Day Celebration" which was to be held on the next day and to have warned them that:

"by celebrating the Independence Day they were putting their hands into the lion's den and were giving a challenge to the Government."

The above are the objectionable portions of the appellant's speech selected by the learned Government Advocate in support of the conviction.

It was contended before me that the very fact of congratulating in a public meeting a person who has been convicted of sedition is tantamount to inciting the audience to follow the example of that person, and further that the speech amounted to an exhortation to the audience to observe the Independence Day and to try to achieve complete independence which alone amounts to sedition. Further, it was urged that to suggest that the Government had secured the convictions of Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose and others of his way of thinking for ulterior motives is calculated to bring the Government into hatred and contempt and to excite disaffection towards it in the minds of the audience.

The appellant's counsel on the other hand has strenuously contended that neither the speech nor the resolution offend against the law of sedition, especially having regard to the fact that the real object of the appellant was to congratulate Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose and others and to exhort the audience to attend the Independence Day celebrations and that nothing was said in the speech with the intention of creating disaffection towards the Government. It is true that intention is a necessary ingredient in the offence punishable under S. 124-A, I. P. C. But the intention has to be gathered from the expressions used by the accused.

I have carefully read the whole of the speech more than once and have reached the conclusions that it does offend against the provisions of S. 124-A, I. P. C., though it must be conceded that the speech was couched in a comparatively moderate language and the offence is of a technical character.

The second speech of 23rd February 1930 was made at Najafgarh in connexion with a 'movement started to move the Government to remit land revenue and to grant takawi to the agriculturists owing to the alleged failure of crops. The appellant merely asked those present to submit petitions to the Government and the Chief Commissioner representing that owing to famine all round Delhi caused by hailstorms and locusts remission of the land revenue be granted to them and takawi paid to them. The transliteration Ex. C. is really only an extract from the speech or rather "a precis prepared by some officials. A copy of the speech in extenso has been proved and is marked Ex. P. W. 3/20 A, and a reference to that document shows that the extract gives distorted, one-sided and prejudiced view of the speech. After telling the people that applications had been made by residents of other villages the appellant stated:

"If the condition here is just the same as elsewhere, you should also submit similar applications."

During the course of the speech a remark was made by one Jhanda Lambardar, of village Dinpore that on a former occasion Mr. Gandhi had advised them to non-co-operate with the Government and that this advice had resulted in disaster. On this the appellant remarked:

"Mahatma Gandhi was a great man. The Mahatma's view point was to stop the payment of taxes all at once and to turn the Government out. But we have not come to preach this. We have not acted according to his views. We use foreign cloth and are afraid of the Government. We do not want you to do as the Mahatma asks you to do. . . . The Lambardar and Zaildar who realized a comparatively large amount of the revenue were rewarded. These are the Government messengers who suck your blood. We are the humble messengers of Mahatma Gandhi and have come to save your money and are prepared for the jails. Tell us, which of the messengers are better."

It would thus be seen that the remark stressed in Ex. C "whereas the Government messengers are sucking their blood" is not a fair representation of what the accused said. He compared himself with the lambardars and zaildars and asked the audience whether they considered the lambardar and the zaildar as their real friends or the men like the speaker. No doubt the lambardars and the zaildars were described as the messengers of Government and as persons who sucked their blood but the attack was not directed against the Government. Then next in Ex. C, the accused is alleged to have stated:

"There could be no peace during the British Raj, the true peace would be restored when there would be a Government of the peasants and labourers."

According to the translation of the full speech what the appellant really stated was:

"There could be no peace in the presence of the British Government and peace will reign when the labourers and peasants' Government is established. But we do not ask it of you just now. You should first try your parents and see if they give you something or not."

Now this extract puts quite a different complexion on the extract than what was intended to be conveyed by Ex. C. The term "parent" obviously is intended to apply to Government.

Next, reference is made to the instigation by the appellant for the non-payment of the revenue and an exhortation to follow the example of Bardoli. This is what he really said:

"If an attachment order is issued, let it be issued. Unite and let us see how many attachment orders are issued. Who will buy the attached property. Be determined that you cannot pay the revenue. Tell us the reply you receive of your application and it will be seen what to do next. The Government had ordered to enhance the land revenue at Bardoli. The people refused to pay, the Government issued attachment orders but none came forward to bid for the attached property. The Government had at last to appoint a commission which decided that the Bardoli people were justified in their action and the land revenue was not enhanced. You should not be afraid of putting this before the Government and unite like the Bardoli people."

It was not suggested that people should refuse to pay land revenue to the Government, on the other hand the matter was left for decision later.

In my opinion the whole underlying idea of this speech was to induce the people to represent their grievances to the Government. It was not the intention of the speaker to turn them against the Government.

I observe that in his judgment the learned Magistrate has quoted other passages from the two speeches and has held that these passages offend against S. 124-A, I.P.C. In my opinion the only portions of the two speeches for which the appellant could be tried and convicted, if found to be seditious, were the portions mentioned in Exs. B and C and the other portions of the speeches could be utilized by the Magistrate only for the purpose of determining the intention of the accused in using the language mentioned in Exs. B and C, if such language was in his opinion ambiguous or was not capable of being properly construed apart from the context. Indeed, the learned Government advocate did not seek to support the conclusions of the learned Magistrate with regard to any other portions of the two speeches except those mentioned in Exs. C and D. Reading the second speech as a whole and having regard to the object with which and the occasion on which it was made, I am of opinion that this speech is not seditious. In any case the dividing line between culpability and an honest desire to obtain redress from the Government is very thin.

With regard to the first speech, I have held that it offended against S. 124-A, I.P.C. At the same time, I am unable to hold that the speech was of a character which called for a severe sentence. About the end of his judgment the learned Magistrate has discussed some other speeches alleged to have been made by the appellant on other occasions which according to him were highly seditious. In my opinion it was not open to him to admit any evidence with regard to those speeches or to consider them in determining the guilt or otherwise of the appellant for having made the two speeches for which he was prosecuted nor even for the purpose of determining the sentence to be awarded to the appellant. I have no doubt that the Magistrate has been much influenced by this inadmissible evidence both in determining the guilt of the appellant and in awarding him the sentence of nine months' rigorous imprisonment which he himself considers to be deterrent. I do not think such a serious sentence was called for in the present case.

I accordingly accept the appeal and reduce the appellant's sentence to the term of imprisonment already undergone by him. He was arrested about 22nd March 1930, and remained in custody during the trial; he was convicted on 5th April since when he has been undergoing rigorous imprisonment so that he has been in jail for more than 2½ months.

Criminal Miso. Petn. No. 80 of 1930.

* Criminal P. C., Ss. 196, 476 and 526 (3).
—Proceedings under S. 476, can be taken only by Court and not by private person.—
Person moving Court to take action is not interested party within the meaning of S. 526 (3) and has no locus standi to apply for transfer of case.

Since 1923 proceedings under S. 476, Criminal P. C. are taken only by the Court in the interests of justice when it thinks fit to do so. It is not now open to a private person to take proceedings after taking the sanction of the Court under S. 195. A private person may move the Court but it is for the Court to decide whether to take action and initiate the proceedings.

A person moving the Court to take action under S. 476 cannot therefore be considered to be an interested person within the meaning of S. 526 (3) and also has no locus standi to apply for the transfer of a case, the Court being the "complainant."

N. C. Pandit and Qabul Chand—for Petitioner.

Des Raj Sawhny and Zafarullah Khan—for Respondent.

Order.—This is an application for transfer of a case under S. 193, I. P. C., pending against Mehr Dil Khan, an Inspector of Police, from the Court of the District Magistrate, Karnal.

The case was originally pending in the Court of Pandit Bishen Lal Kichlew, Magistrate, First Class, Karnal, but on an application by the accused Mehr Dil Khan it was transferred by the District Magistrate to his own Court. The petitioner Ram Sarup contends that there was no good ground for transfer of the case from the Court of Pandit Bishen Lal Kichlew and that there is a reasonable apprehension that the case will not be fairly tried by the District Magistrate.

A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the Crown that Ram Sarup has no locus standi to make this application and after considering the facts of the case, I am of opinion that this objection should prevail. The prosecution in this case proceeded on a complaint made by a Court under S. 476, Criminal P. C. It is true that the Court was moved to take the action by the present petitioner Ram Sarup, but the Court and not Ram Sarup was the "complainant." The learned counsel for the petitioner contends that he is at any rate an "interested party" within the meaning of sub-S. 3, S. 526, Criminal P. C. But I do not think even this contention is sustainable. Proceedings under S. 476, Criminal P. C., are now taken by a Court in the interests of justice when it thinks fit to do so. The legislature made an important change in the procedures in this respect in 1923. Previously it was open to a private person to take proceedings after obtaining sanction of the Court under S. 195, Criminal P. C. But now the matter is left entirely in the hands of the Court. A private person may move the Court but it is for the Court to decide whether to take action and initiate the proceedings. Consequently Ram Sarup cannot, in my opinion, be considered to be an "interested party" within the meaning of sub-S. 3, S. 526, Criminal P. C.

The learned counsel for the petitioner urged in the end that the High Court can transfer the case of its own initiative in the interests of justice and that this is a fit case for taking such action in view of the attitude of the District Magistrate. But I do not think there is sufficient justification for adopting this course. I must say that I am not satisfied that there were good grounds for transferring the case from the Court of Pandit Bishen Lal. But this may be nothing more than an error of judgment. The learned counsel has urged that the District Magistrate was taking interest in the case and asking for explanation of the Magistrate even before an application for transfer was made to him by the accused; but it appears that an application for revision was made to the District Magistrate first, and it was in this connexion that he had called for an explanation from the Magistrate. I do not think there are adequate grounds for apprehending that the District Magistrate will not try this case in a fair and impartial manner and I trust he will do his best to do so. I dismiss the petition.

CURRIE, J.

Sham Das—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Criminal Appeal No. 375 of 1930, Decided on 13th June 1930.

Penal Code, S. 124-A—Accused is guilty where intention to create disaffection towards Government is clear—But where speech is not in intemperate language and accused is old man severe punishment should not be given.

S made a speech stating that though matters were bad under other kings, who ruled before the British, we were never in worse plight than now. They have sucked our blood and we do not realise this. Again, whereas in previous days the education was general the present Government has only given education to fit people for clerks and also the handicrafts and trade have been ruined. S also referred to incidents of martial law days.

Held: that the speech exceeded the limits of fair comment and could be held to bring the speaker within the purview of S. 124-A. But in view of the fact that the speech was not couched in very intemperate language and the speaker was an old man, a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment was rather severe and a sentence of imprisonment for a term of three months (already undergone) was sufficient. [P 919 C 1]

Mazhar Ali—for Appellant.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Shram Das has been convicted under S. 124-A, I. P. C., and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment in respect of a speech delivered by him at a meeting at Hoshiarpur on 25th January 1930. His counsel contends that the speech of which Ex. P. E. is the English translation of the report does not come within the mischief of S. 124-A, but is merely a criticism of the existing Government. A perusal of the speech shows that it is one of those speeches which are on the border line. That the intention of the appellant was to attempt to create disaffection towards the Government is I think clear. He states that though matters were bad under other kings who ruled before the British we were never in worse plight than now. They have sucked our blood and we do not realise this. Again he urges that whereas in previous days education was general the present Government has only given education to fit the people for clerks and also the handicrafts and trade have been ruined. He refers also to various incidents of martial law days.

In my opinion the speech exceeds the limits of fair comment and can therefore be held to bring the speaker within the purview of S. 124-A. The conviction, therefore, must be maintained, but in view of the fact that the speech is not couched in very intemperate language and the speaker is apparently an old man, I would reduce the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment to the term of imprisonment he has already undergone which, as he was convicted on 21st March, is nearly three months.

Khushal Chand Khursand—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Criminal Appeal No. 315 of 1930, Decided on 23rd May 1930, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Lahore, D/ 10th March 1930.

* Penal Code, S. 124-A—The fact that article was not written by editor does not affect question of guilt whatever effect it may have on question of sentence.

If an article constitutes an offence under S. 124-A, the fact that it was not written by the editor does not affect the question of his guilt whatever effect it may have on the question of sentence.

When therefore an editor, though not the author of an article falling under S. 124-A is willing to take the responsibility which is legally his, but adds that he published it at a time of stress when he was not in a position to fully discharge his liability as an editor and publisher, he deserves to be treated leniently, specially when the policy of the newspaper ordinarily is in favour of non-violence.

G. C. Narang and Amin Chand Mehta—for Appellant.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Khushal Chand Khursand, Editor of a Vernacular daily newspaper in Lahore, called the Milap has been prosecuted under S. 124-A, I. P. C., for publishing an article in the special congress number of his paper, headed "Punjab ke khamosh sipahin." It is claimed by the prosecution that the said article is calculated to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India and to excite disaffection towards it. Mr. Lewis, Additional District Magistrate, Lahore, has in a carefully written judgment, found him guilty of the offence with which he was charged and has sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for a period of nine months and to a fine of Rs. 200 or to further rigorous imprisonment for three months in default of payment of fine. He has appealed to this Court against his conviction and sentence through Dr. Narang and Mehta Amin Chand. I have heard Dr. G. C. Narang on his behalf and Mr. Abdul Rashid, Additional Government Advocate, on behalf of the Crown.

The publication of the article is not disputed; in fact the appellant frankly takes full responsibility for the article, in his capacity as an editor and publisher of the paper, but he states that he is not the author of the article. The learned Magistrate has accepted this statement of Khushal Chand as correct but if the article constitutes an offence under S. 124-A, the fact that it was not written by the editor would not affect the question of his guilt, whatever effect it may have on the question of sentence.

Dr. Gokal Chand contends, in the first place, that the article in question professes to be a brief history of the revolutionary movements in India, from the time of the Mutiny of 1857 up to date and, though it mentions in laudatory terms the deeds of violence committed by some of the heroes of those movements, there are no comments on them, nor is anything said with reference to the doings of those men, which could be construed into an inducement to others to go and do likewise.

His second contention is that even if it is held that the article is covered by the terms of S. 124-A the offence of the appellant is merely technical, that he has never been prosecuted for an offence of this kind before, and that the article appeared at such a time when Khushal Chand was very busy in connexion with the congress week at Lahore and was not in a position personally to scrutinize the contributions that appeared in his paper.

I need not dwell at any length on the first point raised by Dr. Nanang. I have been taken through the relevant portions of the article by counsel on both sides and have also read the resume of it given in the judgment of the learned Additional District Magistrate, and I have no reason to differ from the view taken by him that the article is one calculated to bring the Government established by law in British India into hatred or contempt and to excite disaffection towards it. I need not quote the passages the translation of which is given in the judgment of the Court below. It is sufficient to note that the article begins by quoting with approval the doings of the Kuka leader Ram Singh and his disciples, and the writer of the article adds that the Kukas removed from the face of this province the blot of infamy which had been brought on it by helping the aliens, i. e., the British Government, in the Mutiny of 1857, which the writer calls the "War of Independence". The learned Government Advocate rightly points out that the last part of this paragraph is in the nature of a comment and is so worded as to give to the readers an idea that they should act in a similar manner. The counsel for the appellant lays stress on the fact that in the article in dispute no incitement against Government is given in so many words. It may be true that there is no direct preaching to that effect, but it is noteworthy that in the short sketches of which the article is composed, every sketch deals with the acts of a revolutionary, who is set up as a hero or a patriot, and at the end of almost every sketch there is a telling sentence, in the nature of indirect commentary, which is clearly calculated to have a pernicious effect on the mind of the reader and to fill him with hatred towards the established Government in India. Next after the Kukas, the person mentioned is Madan Lal Dhingra, who assassinated Sir Curzon Wylie in London in 1909, and was convicted and punished for that offence. A long list of convicts for offences relating to sedition follows and the description of every man taking part in sedition, conspiracy or open violence is given in glowing terms. Reference to the article need not be multiplied, as the trend of the article on the whole is unmistakable and I have no doubt that the author of the article has committed an offence under S. 124-A, I. P. C., and if he had been on his trial before me I would certainly have given him a substantial punishment.

I am dealing, however, with a man who says that, though he is not the author of the article, he is willing to take the responsibility which is legally his for publishing it and adds that he published it at a time of stress, when he was not in a position to fully discharge his responsibility as an editor and publisher. It is also added that the policy of his newspaper ordinarily is in favour of non-violence and the publication of this contribution must be regarded as an accidental lapse. Dr. Narang has drawn my attention to issues of the Milap, dated 11th April, 12th April and 18th April 1929, and also to its issue of 26th December 1929, in which the appellant has, in leading articles, unreservedly condemned the cult of violence and stated in express terms that bomb throwing and other deeds of that nature are calculated to do immense harm to the cause of the country and should be denounced by all right thinking citizens. These instances of a rational attitude on the question of violence may not be strictly relevant to the case before me, but they are not without their value, as antecedents of the appellant and a general indication of his attitude against violence. The learned counsel particularly emphasizes the article in the Milap of 26th December, condemning the bomb outrage on the train of His Excellency the Viceroy, and urges that this article appeared in the ordinary issue of the newspaper on the very day, on which the special congress number came out. He urges, therefore, that the lapse of his client in allowing the publication of the contribution under consideration must be lightly punished. He refers to Mehta Anand Kishore v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 306, in which Anand Kishore had been sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 for a speech made by him in connexion with the celebration of the Kakori Martyrs' Day, but the sentence was reduced to fine and the imprisonment already undergone, by Fforde, J.

There is considerable force in the last-mentioned plea of the appellant and I think this case is one in which the conviction of the appellant deserves to be upheld, but he deserves to be leniently treated in the matter of the sentence. He has not been previously convicted for any offence of this nature. He has taken up a reasonable and frank attitude in the trial Court and the time of stress in which the article happened to be published is an extenuating circumstance in his favour. Moreover I gather from the plea put forward by his learned counsel as to his general attitude in favour of non-violence in political matters, that a lenient treatment of him on this occasion may have a good effect on him and he may desist, in future, from publishing such pernicious and harmful articles as the one that appeared in the special congress number. I would, therefore, reduce the sentence of imprisonment passed against him to the imprisonment already undergone by him, but the sentence of fine of Rs. 200 is maintained.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 87 of 1930, Decided on 14th June 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 526 (1) (a)—“Reasonable apprehension of not having a fair trial”—Meaning explained.

All that is necessary for the accused under S. 526 (1) (a) to establish is that circumstances have arisen which have afforded a reasonable apprehension in his mind that he would not receive justice in the Court of the Magistrate; it is not necessary to establish that the Magistrate is actually prejudiced. In other words, it is to be established that Magistrate has conducted himself in such a manner that there is a reasonable apprehension in his mind that he would not approach the case with an impartial mind. The apprehension, of course, must be such as a reasonable person would entertain. [P 922 C 2; P 923 C 1]

Gokal Chand Narang—for Petitioners.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application by certain residents of Multan for transfer of a criminal case pending against them from the District of Multan or, in the alternative, from the Court of Khan Muhammad Afzal Khan, Magistrate of the First Class. The case apparently has created some local sensation and is connected with the levy of water-tax which is being resisted by a section of the residents of that town. On receipt of the application I issued a notice to the District Magistrate and directed that a copy of the affidavit filed on behalf of the petitioners be sent to the District Magistrate to enable him and the trial Magistrate to submit any explanation which they may desire to submit. The trial Magistrate has submitted no explanation owing to the fact that the District Magistrate did not consider it necessary to send the affidavit to him for explanation. The District Magistrate, however, has submitted no explanation but, on reference to the affidavit, I find that there are some allegations which the District Magistrate is not competent to meet on personal knowledge, and it is conceded by the learned Government Advocate that the trial Magistrate was the proper person who should have met those allegations if he so desired. In view of the above the learned Government Advocate has suggested that, unless I am prepared to hold that the allegations made in the affidavit are not justified, I should give an opportunity to the Magistrate to give an explanation with reference thereto. I consider this prayer of the Government Advocate is reasonable. I must, therefore, adjourn the hearing of this petition and direct that the trial Magistrate be asked to state what he may desire to do with reference to the allegations made regarding proceedings which took place in his presence.

The accused are apparently respectable men and in view of the delay that would arise in the disposal of this petition and other circumstances, I was prepared to favourably consider the prayer of the learned counsel for the petitioners that they may be released on bail for the time being, but it has been pointed out to me that an application for bail has recently been rejected by a learned Judge of this Court. I do not under the circumstances consider it fair to pass any orders releasing the accused on bail. The only course that I can suggest under the circumstances is that the petitioners should renew their application for bail and this application be placed before Abdul Qadir, J., for disposal in case he is prepared to reconsider the matter in the light of altered circumstances. The case is adjourned.

Order.—This order will be read in continuation of my order of 30th May 1930. The Magistrate has now submitted an explanation with regard to the allegations made by the petitioners, and I have heard the learned Government Advocate and the counsel for the petitioners. From the documents on the record there can be no manner of doubt that this case is directly connected with the agitation against the levy of water-tax by the Municipal Committee of Multan. It also appears that the entire prosecution evidence was closed on 22nd March 1930, and the case was adjourned to 3rd April to decide whether charges should or should not be framed against the accused. On that day no orders were passed by the Magistrate. On the other hand a desire was expressed that a meeting of the representatives of those who objected to the water-tax and the representatives of the authorities be held in order to find out if there were any reasonable grievances of the objectors which could be redressed; in other words, in order to find out some means of compromising the main dispute. These negotiations broke down. A meeting was held at which the trial Magistrate was present under the orders of the Deputy Commissioner, it is alleged as his representative.

There is a certain amount of conflict between the versions of the Magistrate and the petitioners as to what happened at the meeting with regard to the present case. But there is no difference between the two versions as to the object of the meeting and as to the presence of the Magistrate at it. The only difference is that the accused state that the Magistrate stated that if certain terms suggested by him were accepted the case would be withdrawn or a recommendation would be made that the case be withdrawn. The Magistrate on the other hand says that a suggestion for the withdrawal of the case came from the representatives of the objectors but that he declined to entertain it saying that the withdrawal of the case had no connexion with the negotiations.

It was after the negotiations had broken down that the Magistrate took up the case on 7th April and framed charges against the accused. The dates mentioned above are not without significance, and whether the Magistrate had in his mind or not that if the negotiations resulted in an amicable settlement, the case would be dropped, what transpired might have very well led the petitioners to apprehend that the withdrawal of the case was intimately connected with the result of the negotiations. I am also of opinion that knowing that the criminal case was so closely connected with the agitation against levy of the water-tax by the Municipal Committee, Multan, the trial Magistrate should not have been deputed and should not have taken any part in the negotiations relating to the settlement of the dispute about the levy of the tax. It is not necessary for the petitioners in a case like this to establish that the Magistrate is actually prejudiced against them. All that is necessary for them to establish is that circumstances have arisen which have afforded a reasonable apprehension in their minds that they would not receive justice in his Court; in other words that the Magistrate has conducted himself in such a manner that there is a reasonable apprehension in their mind that he would not approach the case with an impartial mind. The apprehension of course must be such as a reasonable person placed in the situation in which the accused persons are placed would entertain. Applying this test I feel no doubt that in the present case the Magistrate's conduct is calculated to cause a reasonable apprehension in the minds of the accused that he would not approach the case with an impartial mind.

The next question, which was very strenuously pressed by the petitioner's counsel is whether the case should be transferred from the district of Multan. It was suggested that the District Magistrate had conducted himself in such a manner that the accused persons have reason to believe that he is taking undue interest in the case against them. It is not suggested that the District Magistrate is actually prejudiced against them but it is alleged that circumstances have arisen which have caused an apprehension in the minds of the accused persons. Now, I have carefully considered the material on the record in this respect, but I am unable to hold that the accused persons should have any reasonable apprehension. The District Magistrate is not directly connected with the administration of the Municipal affairs and as such is not interested in the recovery of the water-tax. He is of course interested in seeing that the peace of the district under his charge is not disturbed and it may be that in order to avoid any disturbance of the peace in the district he deputed some Magistrates to try to effect a compromise between the parties. But beyond that he does not appear, from the present record, to have done anything from which it might appear that he has taken any interest in the case more than what he would have ordinarily done. I cannot believe that he has in any way influenced the mind of the trial Magistrate or of any other Magistrate who may have ultimately to decide this case or that the Magistrates in the Multan District are not capable of deciding the cases entrusted to them impartially under a wrong, or even a right impression, that the District Magistrate is prejudiced against the accused. I am not therefore prepared to transfer the case from the Multan District. I, however, withdraw it from the Court of Khan Muhammad Afzal and transfer it to the Court of Rai Sahib Lala Nand Lal Manchanda, Magistrate, First Class, with enhanced powers in the Multan District, with direction to try this case in accordance with law.

I hope that nothing that has been stated by either party in these proceedings against each other would in any way affect the ultimate fair trial of the case.

Judgment.—The material facts for the purpose of this revision petition are briefly as follows: On 26th July 1928 one Ghulam Muhammad, son of Imam Din filed a criminal complaint under Ss. 406/109, I. P. C., against the petitioner Allah Ditta. The complaint was dismissed after a summary inquiry on 9th October 1928 on the ground that the dispute was of a civil nature. A petition for revision of this order was lodged but was dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge, who agreed with the view of the Magistrate that the dispute was of a civil nature.

On 9th December 1929 Karam Bakhsh, brother of Ghulam Muhammad, son of Imam Din (the previous complainant) filed a complaint against the petitioner on the same facts and thereupon fresh proceedings were taken against the petitioner. A petition for revision was filed in the Sessions Court but failed and hence the petitioner has come up to this Court.

The learned counsel for the petitioner has urged that a second complaint was not legally entertainable on the same facts in the circumstances stated above and that in any case it was nothing short of an abuse of the processes of law and hence the proceedings taken thereon should be quashed.

In Emperor v. Kiri (1) it was held by a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court that a second complaint for an alleged offence is entertainable by a Magistrate and that it is not absolutely necessary to get a previous order of dismissal under S. 203, Criminal P. C., set aside by a superior Court before lodging such a complaint. The learned counsel for the petitioner seeks to distinguish this ruling on the ground that in the present instance the previous order of dismissal was confirmed by a superior Court. He relies in support of this contention on Mahomed Yaqub v. Emperor (2), a single Bench decision of the Punjab Chief Court of the year 1910, i. e. prior to the Full Bench decision referred to above. In view of the line of reasoning adopted by the Full Bench, I doubt if the mere fact that a superior Court has dismissed a petition for revision would legally be a bar to the institution of a fresh complaint. The order of the superior Court would only mean an expression of opinion that the order of dismissal was justified on the facts as they stood on the record at the time when that order was passed. But if the order was passed, for instance on an incomplete record and valuable fresh evidence became subsequently available, I do not see why a second complaint should be incompetent merely because a superior Court had already dismissed a petition for revision of the previous order. A second complaint appears to have been entertained in similar circumstances in Jyotindra Nath v. Hemchandra (3).

But although a previous dismissal under S. 203, Criminal P. C., may not be legally a bar to the institution of a fresh complaint, it would be only in exceptional circumstances that a second complaint would be entertained on the same facts as pointed out in Emperor v. Kiri (1), e. g. where the previous order was passed on an incomplete record or where the previous order was manifestly absurd or foolish. But nothing of this sort has been alleged here. The previous order was not only not absurd or foolish, but perfectly reasonable, and the view taken by the Magistrate was upheld by a superior Court. The learned Magistrate has not considered this aspect of the question at all and given no reason for reconsidering the case. It has been urged that the complainant in this case was a different person. But when it is admitted that the facts are identical and there are no good grounds for reconsideration of the case, the mere fact that the complainant is not the same person would in my opinion make no difference. If this were not so it would be easy enough for a complainant to harass an accused person with complaints on the same facts by his friends and relations as often as he likes. It is, in my opinion, nothing short of an abuse of the processes of the Court to entertain a fresh complaint in such circumstances. I, therefore, accept this petition for revision and quash the proceedings taken on the second complaint.

Criminal Revn. No. 126 of 1930, Dated on 20th March 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Saran, D/-23rd January 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 109 (a)—In order to apply clause (a) it is not necessary to show that accused followed continuous course of conduct in taking precautions to conceal his presence.

Section 109 (a) applies to any person taking precautions to conceal his presence within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and it is not necessary, in order to bring a person within the operation of that clause, to show that he had followed a continuous course of conduct in taking precautions to conceal his presence : 41 I. C. 649, Ref; A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 775 and A. I. R. 1927 All. 50, Rel. on; A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 563, Foll. [P 925 O 2 P 926 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. S. 109 (a)—Accused with his companions taking precautions to conceal their presence at mathia—They running away when police arrived—They were taking precautions to commit offence.

The fact that the accused and his companions took precautions to conceal the fact that they were in a mathia, together with the fact of their running away when the police approached, warrants the inference that they were taking the precautions with a view to commit an offence. [P 926 C 1]

G. P. Cammiade—for Petitioner.

B. P. Jamuar—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been required under S. 109, Criminal P. C., to execute a bond for four hundred rupees, with two sureties of two hundred rupees each to be of good behaviour for one year. It appears that in July 1929 the Superintendent of Police of Saran, believing that a gang was about to assemble for the purpose of committing dacoity in an old mathia at Dudhaila in the Sonapur jurisdiction, arranged that the mathia should be watched by a strong party of police including himself. At about 9 p. m. fourteen or fifteen men entered the mathia where they lighted a dhibri and then extinguished it. Half an hour later the signal was given for the raid by the police party. There was some delay on one side of the mathia which enabled the men assembled to escape; but the petitioner was pursued and captured by the Superintendent himself. Afterwards the mathia was searched and a garasa and a dhibri were found there.

Mr. Cammiade on behalf of the petitioner argues that the order of the learned Magistrate is illegal, because the petitioner is a resident of the Sadr Sub-Division of the Saran District, so that he was not taking precaution to conceal the fact that he was present within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. He cites the decision in Reshu Kaviraj v. Emperor (1) in support of his argument that taking precautions to conceal his presence within the jurisdiction means something more than a momentary effort at concealment to avoid detection or arrest, and that it refers to a continuous act. In the case of Gagon Chandra De v. Emperor (2) it was pointed out by the learned Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court that in S. 109 (a) the idea is that some one may be taking precautions to conceal himself within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, not to conceal himself as one who hides from a policeman, but to conceal the fact of his infesting the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and that in such case, if there is reason to believe that this is a precaution taken with a view to commit an offence the Magistrate can require him to give security. In Emperor v. Bhairon (3), it was pointed out that clause (a), S. 109, should not be read as applying to a person who merely took steps to conceal himself in the sense of concealing his presence in the way in which a criminal conceals his presence from the police when he was about to commit an offence, and that the offence contemplated in S. 109 (a) is that a person, probably though not necessarily coming from outside the Magistrate's jurisdiction for some nefarious purpose and taking precautions to conceal the fact that he is present in that jurisdiction. In the case of Rambirich Ahir v. Emperor (4) Sir Dawson Miller held that S. 109 (a), Criminal P. C., applied to any person taking precautions to conceal his presence within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and that it was not necessary in order to bring a person within the operation of that clause to show that he had followed a continuous course of conduct in taking precautions to conceal his presence.

The petitioner in the present case lived in Chapra town, twenty or thirty miles from the place of occurrence. He was found hiding in the mathia on this night, twenty or thirty miles away from his home, still within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chapra; but manifestly, as the learned Sessions Judge has pointed out, taking precautions to conceal the fact that he was still within the Magistrate's jurisdiction by hiding in the mathia avoiding the use of a light, and by running away as soon as the police came up to the place. It is true that the petitioner endeavoured to prove that he was not taking steps to conceal his presence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction by the examination of a witness, Nathuni Singh, who said that on that evening the petitioner had been making enquiries regarding a missing buffalo, but this witness was not believed by the learned Magistrate.

Mr. Cammiade argues in the second place that the order of the learned Magistrate should be set aside, because there was no evidence to prove that the petitioner was preparing to commit an offence. I consider that the precautions taken by the accused and his companions to conceal the fact that they were present at the mathia, together with their conduct when the police began to approach it, warrant the inference that the petitioner and his companions were taking their precautions with a view to commit an offence. The application is accordingly dismissed.

COURTNEY-TERRELL, C. J. AND ROWLAND, J.

Kalu Manjhi—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Criminal Appeal No. 85 of 1929, Decided on 24th June 1929, from decision of Sessions Judge, Purnea, D/- 16th March 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 342 (3) — Although Court should not examine accused to entrap him into admissions which can fill up gaps in prosecution case, still if questions are straightforward and accused is asked what he has to say, his statements can be considered under S. 342 (3).

Although it is not proper for the Court in examining the accused to seek in any way to entrap him into admissions which may fill gaps in the prosecution case, still where the questions put are straightforward and the accused are asked whether they committed the offence and what they had to say, the statements given by accused can be rightly taken into consideration under S. 342 (3).

S. M. Gupta—for Appellant.

C. M. Agarwala—for the Crown.

Rowland, J.—This appeal arises out of a trial by the Sessions Judge of Purnea in which Kalu Manjhi and Phurlai Manjhi, Santals, were convicted under S. 398, I. P. C., and sentenced each to be imprisoned rigorously for seven years. Both the accused appealed and the appeal of Kalu was dismissed summarily, that of Phurlai being admitted for hearing.

The occurrence took place on the evening of 2nd November 1928 on the road along which Ram Kumar Marwari, Rameshwar Marwari and Hari Bux Marwari were returning with their ponies and merchandise to their homes from Sonaili hat. On the way they were accosted by three or four men armed with lathis and axes who demanded that they should give up the goods they had with them. Ram Kumar was assaulted with a lathi and received slight injuries. Rameshwar also received some scratches. There was a scuffle in which Ram Kumar took away a lathi from one of the assailants and also bit the arm of one of the assailants and took from him an axe which he was carrying. The principal witnesses Ram Kumar, Rameshwar and Hari Bux were unable to identify any of the robbers. In the course of the police investigation it transpired that Kalu Manjhi had marks on his arm of being bitten by human teeth and it was in consequence of statements made by him and by the other accused, Phurlai, more than through anything that the prosecution witnesses had been able to establish, that they were put on their trial. The eye-witnesses prove nothing as to the identity of the accused but they describe the course of the occurrence as summarized above.

The accused gave a different version, but their statements were to the effect that they were the persons who had encountered the Marwaris. In the Magistrate's Court, Kalu had said that he and Phurlai were going together and Phurlai also said :

"I was on the right side of Kalu. He was caught hold of. I fled away."

The story was slightly altered when they were examined in the Court of Session where Kalu said that both of the Marwaris caught hold of him with their hands. Phurlai Manjhi went away ahead. Phurlai in his statement said :

"I was ahead and Kalu was following me. I am not an eye-witness."

The examination of an accused person is taken in inquiries before commitment under S. 209, Criminal P. C. and at the trial under S. 342. In both these sections the examination of the accused is stated to be

"for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him."

In the present case we have the peculiar position that if the accused had not been examined at all the prosecution evidence must have fallen short of being sufficient to prove that these accused persons were the men who committed the offence. I have no doubt that in such a case it is not proper for the Court in examining the accused to seek in any way to entrap him into admissions which may fill gaps in the prosecution case but the Court has not done any such thing in the present inquiry or trial. The questions put were straightforward. The accused were asked whether they had committed the offence and what they had to say. The statements given by Kalu and by the appellant were, therefore, rightly taken into consideration under S. 342 (3), Criminal P. C., and when so considered I have no doubt that they support and justify the conviction of the appellant.

As regards sentence, the trial Court has imposed a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment. We have considered whether this sentence should not be reduced ; but highway robbery, more particularly when it is committed between sunset and sunrise, cannot be regarded as other than a very serious offence and in the district of Purnea from which this case comes, its prevalence seems to make it imperative that a very substantial sentence should be imposed when there is a conviction. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—I agree.

v.

Criminal Revn. No. 704 of 1929. Decided on 6th February 1930, from order of Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, D/- 20th November 1929.

* Criminal P. C., S. 421 (2)—Pleader heard and record sent for—Appellant need not be heard again after perusal of record

Though in many cases it may be useful to hear the pleader again to elucidate some point raised by a perusal of the record, there is no illegality in summarily dismissing the appeal without hearing the pleader again after the record is called for: A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 361, Foll.; 39 I.O. 1007 Diss. from; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 161 and A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 174, Ref. [F 928 C 2]

B. C. De—for Petitioners.

Assistant Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Adami, J.—The petitioners were convicted under S. 379, I. P. C., by a Deputy Magistrate of the 2nd Class and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30 each, or in default rigorous imprisonment for thirty days.

The case for the prosecution was that Churan Gope, the recorded tenant of a holding under the petitioners, who were the landlords of the village, having died, the complainant came into possession of the holding. The petitioners, however, were not ready to recognize him as a tenant and set up two of their servants Puna and Khedua to claim that they were entitled as heirs of Churan in preference to the complainant. Eventually the names of these two persons were entered in the sharrista and the landlords refused the rent from the complainant.

On the day of the occurrence the two petitioners entered the field cultivated by the complainant and looted away his makai crop. The Deputy Magistrate found that, though the petitioners had done their best to influence the prosecution witnesses, the possession of the complainant was proved and also the theft by the petitioners, and he therefore convicted the petitioners, as I have stated above.

An appeal was made before the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, who, having heard the pleader for the petitioners then sent for the record of the case. After perusal of the record he passed the following order:

"I have gone through the record of this case carefully. I agree with the lower Court in thinking the case a true one, and the evidence is sufficient to support the conviction. The appeal is summarily dismissed."

Against that order this Court was moved. It was contended that the order was not according to law, firstly because the case was one in which there should have been no summary dismissal, and secondly, that, having called for the record, the Deputy Commissioner was bound again to hear the pleader which he failed to do. It is also urged that as there was a bona fide dispute as to title between the parties, the appeal should have been heard in the ordinary way.

The application was heard by a single Judge of this Court, who disagreed with a decision of Chapman, J., in the case of Jagdeo Rai v. Kali Rai (1), in which it was held that after perusal of a record the appellate Court is again bound to hear the appellant's pleader. The learned Judge, considering that this was a point which should be decided by a Bench, has referred the case to us.

First, with regard to the question whether the Deputy Commissioner was bound again to hear the pleader, the case which was chiefly relied upon was the case of Jagdeo Rai v. Kali Rai (1), above cited. Chapman, J., in that case, decided that where a District Magistrate, on a criminal case coming before him in appeal, sends for the record and on receipt of the record dismisses the appeal without hearing the appellant or any legal practitioner engaged on his behalf, the procedure adopted by him is not in accordance with law and the appellant must be given an opportunity to be heard.

There are two other cases which have also been relied on; they are Lalit Kumar Sen v. Emperor (2) and Suren-dranath Ghose v. Emperor (3). These two cases were both decided by the same Judges and the decision in both is to the effect that after a record has been sent for, the pleader must be heard.

(1) [1917] 16 Cr. L. J. 689=89 I. O. 1007.

(2) A. I. B. 1926 Cal. 174=92 I. O. 694=27 Cr. L. J. 322.

(3) A. I. B. 1926 Cal. 161=92 I. O. 76=27 Cr. L. J. 412.

Now in the first of the three cases Chapman, J., remarked that the record was sent for after giving some sort of hearing to the mukhtear at the time of the presentation of the appeal. In the other two cases there is nothing to show that a pleader had been heard before the record was sent for.

In the present case the learned Deputy Commissioner gave a full hearing to the pleader before he decided to send for the record. If we turn to S. 421, Criminal P. C., we find that, though it is provided that no appeal presented under S. 419 shall be dismissed unless the appellant or his pleader has had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same, the Court has power, before summarily dismissing an appeal, to call for the record but is not bound to do so. There is nothing in that section requiring that the pleader should be heard again if a record is sent for. All that the section requires is that the pleader shall have a reasonable opportunity of being heard in the Court of appeal before there is a summary dismissal.

In the present case the pleader had been fully heard and had the reasonable opportunity which the section demands. It may be that in some cases, after perusing the record, the Court may desire to hear the pleader on a point which the perusal of the record makes it necessary to have explained, but I can find nothing in the law requiring this second hearing of the pleader.

In the case of Emperor v. Basavaneppa Basava (4), Fawcett and Patkar, JJ., held that ordinarily, if the Court does send for the record it is preferable to hear the pleader when the record is before the Court, but there is nothing in S. 421 to prevent the Court from hearing the appellant's pleader at the time when he presents the appeal, if the appellant's pleader desires that course, and if the Court desires to send for the record then it is not illegal summarily to dismiss the appeal without giving a further opportunity of the pleader being heard. That decision coincides with my view on the point. If after hearing a pleader and sending for the record it is necessary to hear the pleader again with the record before the Court, the dealing with the appeal would hardly be a summary dealing, for the appeal would practically have to be heard fully and there would be no reason for the sub-S. (2), S. 421, allowing for the calling for the record before summarily dismissing an appeal. I would hold that, though in many cases it may be useful to hear the pleader again to elucidate some point raised by a perusal of the record, there is no illegality in summarily dismissing the appeal without hearing the pleader again after the record is called for.

With regard to the reasonableness of the summary dismissal in this case it has to be remembered that there was really no bona fide dispute as to the right to hold the land between the petitioners and the complainant in the case. Any such dispute, if it existed, was between the complainant and Puna and Khedu. The landlords, in no case could claim that they had a right to enter a tenant's holding and cut and take away his crop, so that the contention that this case should have been heard fully as any ordinary appeal and a judgment should have been delivered on the ground that there was a bona fide dispute can have no support. The Deputy Magistrate came to a finding that he believed the complainant and his witnesses on the question of possession and as to the theft of the crop by the petitioners, and the learned Deputy Commissioner states in his order that he has carefully read through the record and finds that the Deputy Magistrate's finding on this point was correct.

The order of the Deputy Commissioner is a proper order under S. 421. It was unnecessary for him to write a judgment if he found that the case was one which could be dismissed summarily.

I can see no reason to interfere in this case and the application should be rejected.

Scroope, J.—I agree. S. 421, Criminal P. C., contemplates that a reasonable opportunity of being heard should be given to the appellant or his pleader in support of the appeal no more and no less; and if after hearing the pleader at the time of presentation of the appeal; as admittedly the Deputy Commissioner did in this case, he then sends for the record and dismisses the appeal without hearing the pleader for the appellant—then I do not consider that he infringes the section in question. In fact my view entirely coincides with that expressed on this matter in the case of Emperor v. Basavanappa Basava (4).

Ram Prasad Guru—Accused—Appellant.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 279 of 1928, Decided on 22nd March 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Manbhum, D/- 28th September 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 188 — Sanction is imperative.

The sanction of the Political Agent or the Local Government under S. 188 is imperative and the omission to obtain it vitiates the trial and conviction : 10 Bom. 186; 13 Mad. 423 and 28 All. 372, Ref. [P 981 C 1]

Parsuram Prasad Verma—for Appellant.

Assistant Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Jwala Prasad, J. — Appellant Ram Prasad Guru has been convicted under Ss. 420 and 467, I. P. C., and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment under former section and two years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 500 under the latter; the sentences of imprisonment to run concurrently.

On 16th June 1927, the accused presented a postal cash certificate for Rs. 10, and received Rs. 11-14-0. The certificate was issued on 4th September 1918 in the name of Manindra Nath Sarkar (P. W. No. 2). Both the appellant and Manindra Nath Sarkar were employed as teachers in Sonepur Feudatory State School. Manindra Nath Sarkar had passed the I. Sc. examination of the Calcutta University, and accused Ram Prasad Guru was preparing for the Matriculation examination. He used to receive tuition from Manindra Nath Sarkar and pay him Rs. 15 as his monthly fee. The Feudatory State of Sonepur had required the servants of the State to purchase postal cash certificates, and accordingly on 4th September 1918 both Manindra Nath Sarkar and the accused purchased postal cash certificates of Rs. 10 each. The accused cashed his certificate the next day, and received Rs. 7.12-0. Manindra Nath Sarkar left the school in December 1918, or in January of the following year, and first he went to Calcutta and then he came to Jamshedpur as a teacher in Perine Memorial English High School. He found that his postal cash certificate was missing from his trunk, and accordingly in November 1919, he applied to the Postal Authorities to issue a duplicate cash certificate. This was issued after enquiry on 8th January 1920, and he encashed it on 6th January 1921, and received Rs. 8.8-9 as value of the certificate on that date. The accused had left Sonepur in 1918, and on 16th January 1927 he presented the original cash certificate to the Sambalpur Post Office and received payment of Rs. 11.14-0 as its value on that date. Payment was made to him on the strength of an endorsement on the back of the certificate, which purported to be in the handwriting of Manindra Nath Sarkar and under his signature. Subsequently it was discovered by the Postal Authorities that the money due under the certificate was already paid in 1921 to Manindra Nath Sarkar on the basis of the duplicate certificate issued to him, and an enquiry was made from the accused.

He admitted having encashed the certificate and received payment. He claimed to have done so under the authority of the endorsement thereon by Manindra Nath Sarkar referred to above, stating that he had purchased the certificate from Manindra Nath Sarkar on the very day 4th September 1918, that the certificate was issued on payment of Rs. 5 to him. The reason stated by him was that Manindra Nath Sarkar and he himself did not in fact want to purchase cash certificates but did so simply on account of the orders of the State and in order to avoid displeasure, and that the accused encashed his own certificate the next day, but Manindra Nath Sarkar, fearing that if he did so the Raj authorities might be displeased and might perhaps dismiss him from service, did not encash his certificate. Therefore he wanted to dispose of it but could not get anyone to pay him more than Rs. 5, and consequently he sold it to the appellant for Rs. 5. Upon enquiries the Postal Department lodged this prosecution against the accused for having forged the endorsement on the certificate and for having cheated the Postal Department by receiving payment thereunder.

The accused stated that the endorsement was made by Manindra Nath Sarkar on 4th September 1918 at Sonepur and the certificate was made over to him at that place and that he actually did present the certificate for encashment to the Post Office at Sonepur the next day, but he could not receive payment upon the ground that such a transfer was not authorized without the sanction of the Postmaster-General. Consequently he kept the certificate with him, and did not make any further attempt to cash it. Afterwards when he went to Sambalpur he presented it for encashment at the Post Office there, but he was refused payment upon the ground that it should be presented to the Post Office of issue. Some years after he learnt that the rules in the matter had been changed and that the Sambalpur Post Office could make payment. Accordingly, he did present the document in January 1927, and received payment from the Post Office at Sambalpur.

The charge under S. 467 stated that : "on or about 16th June 1927, at Sambalpur the accused forged the endorsement on the certificate with a view to receive the money due thereunder." It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the date and the place of occurrence mentioned in the charge are wrong. There is nothing to show that the endorsement in question upon the certificate was made on 16th January 1927 or that it was made at Sambalpur. Manindra Nath Sarkar left Sonepur in December 1918, and at Jamshedpur he found that the cash certificate was missing. He means that it was lost, stolen or misplaced at Sonepur at or before the time he was leaving that place in December 1918. The endorsement on the back of the document must have been written between that date and 16th January 1927. That is, however, not very material for the purposes of this case. According to the statement of the accused the endorsement was made at Sonepur, and not at Sambalpur. There is nothing to show that it was made at Sambalpur. No doubt, some inference can be drawn from the fact that it was presented at Sambalpur on 16th January 1927 and the accused did not give any evidence to prove that the endorsement was made at Sonepur. Be that as it may, we have at present only the definite statement of the accused to go upon and it cannot, therefore, be said that the offence of forgery was committed at Sambalpur or any other place in British India. If it was committed at Sonepur, as the statement of the accused shows, then under S. 188, Criminal P. C., the accused could not be tried without the sanction of the Political Agent for that State or the Local Government. Sonepur State is one of the Orissa Feudatory States for which there is a Political Agent : vide Vol. 1 of Treaties, Engagements and Sanads, India, p. 299, and the Bihar and Orissa Civil List for 1929. The obtaining of sanction has been held to be imperative and the omission to do so vitiates the trial and the conviction of an accused of that charge : vide Queen-Empress v. Abiul Latib (1), Queen-Empress v. Kathaperumal (2) and Emperor v. Baldeva (3). At the same time it is very difficult to come to a definite finding in this case that it was the accused who wrote the endorsement on the back of the cash certificate in question (Ex. 4) and thus forged it in the name of Manindra Nath Sarkar. Two handwriting experts have been examined in this case one on behalf of the prosecution Babu Surendra Nath Ghosh, Inspector of Police, C. I. D. and the other the well-known handwriting expert Mr. Hardles Senior, now retired from service, on behalf of the accused. In view of the conflicting opinion of the experts it is very difficult to hold with certainty, upon mere comparison of the specimen handwritings of both Manindra Nath Sarkar and the accused that the endorsement is in accused's handwriting and that the charge of forgery has been brought home to him. Two witnesses on behalf of the accused who have always seen the accused writing have sworn that the endorsement in question is not in the handwriting of the accused. Therefore, the accused is acquitted of the charge under S. 467, I. P. C.

Now as regards the charge of cheating under S. 420, I. P. C., the offence was committed at Sambalpur, inasmuch as the cash certificate with the aforesaid endorsement thereon of Manindra Nath Sarkar was presented at the Post Office of that place. That being within British India the offence was triable in British India. The question is whether the offence of cheating under S. 420 has been proved. There are certain circumstances, no doubt, in favour of the accused. Admittedly he was in a way a student of Manindra Nath Sarkar who had been employed by him as his private tutor on Rs. 15 or Rs. 20 per month. At times he used to advance him petty loans of a rupee or so whenever he required, for Manindra Nath Sarkar was getting only Rs. 50 a month from the school and was not very well off financially. The father of the accused is a Tahsildar in the Sonepur State and has property. Both the accused and Manindra Nath Sarkar were teachers in the same school and their relationship was, therefore, cordial until they parted with each other, Manindra Nath Sarkar leaving Sonepur in December 1918, and going to Calcutta and ultimately to Jamshedpur.

On the other hand, it seems very unlikely that Manindra Nath Sarkar, a year after he left Sonepur, would venture to ask the Postal Department to issue a duplicate cash certificate to him upon the ground that the original cash certificate granted to him had been lost if in fact he had sold it to the accused by making an endorsement thereon in his own handwriting. Had he sold it certainly he would not have made the application for issue of a duplicate certificate, without having ascertained that the original certificate had not been already cashed by the accused, for it would have endangered not only himself but also the accused with whom he was intimate during his stay at Sonepur. Manindra Nath Sarkar's case that he had not sold the certificate in question to the accused finds support from the aforesaid circumstances, and it seems that the accused having got the certificate in question somehow and finding that it was not asked for or demanded by Manindra Nath Sarkar for about nine years thought of converting it into money. There is nothing to show, and the Court below has also so held, that the accused came to be in possession of the cash certificate dishonestly. This would also seem to be so because the accused would not then have waited for nine years to convert it into money. The amount covered by this postal certificate was also not so large as to induce the accused to make any appreciable profit thereby. His antecedents were not bad, but he committed the offence of cheating under S. 420, I. P. C. by presenting the certificate to the Post Office at Sambalpur and inducing it to pay the value thereof.

In the circumstances the finding and the conviction under S. 420, I. P. C. are maintained, but the sentence of imprisonment is reduced to six month's rigorous imprisonment. The sentence of imprisonment and fine of Rs. 500 under S. 467 are set aside, and the fine, if already realized, must be refunded to the accused.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 196, of 1930, Decided on 11th June 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Shahabad, D/-25th February 1930.

Penal Code: Ss. 415 and 420—Arrangement to marry girl to particular person—Refusal to marry the girl later on amounts to mere breach of contract and cannot give rise to criminal prosecution under S. 420.

Mere breach of contract cannot give rise to a criminal prosecution.

A arranged the marriage of his brother with the daughter of the accused B, the transaction being more or less a sale of the young girl. Some earnest money was paid and one of the ceremonies connected with the marriage was performed. Later on A went to B's village to have the marriage performed but found the girl being married to another person and was told that his brother was to be married to a daughter of D and the earnest money was not repaid. B was tried under S. 420.

Held that the criminal offence under S. 420 had not been disclosed. There was nothing more in the circumstance of the case than a breach of contract that is refusal to marry the girl to A's brother giving cause of action in a civil Court. [P. 933 C. 1, 2]

H. N. Sinha—for the Crown.

Wort, J.—This rule is directed against the conviction of two persons Jamadar Rai and Kuber Rai of an offence under S. 420 I. P. C., the second applicant Kuber Rai being found guilty of abetting the commission of the offence. The learned Magistrate sentenced them to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 300, the fine if realized to be paid to the complainant in this case.

The facts so far as it is necessary to mention them are these: The complainant had a brother whom he desired to marry, the first applicant having a daughter and on or about the 3rd July 1929 the second applicant who was the brother-in-law of the first applicant proceeded to the village of the complainant and there it is stated arranged the marriage between the daughter of the accused and the brother of the complainant. The actual transaction was nothing more or less than a sale of this young girl to the complainant or to his brother for a sum of Rs. 1,400; and the learned Sessions Judge before whom an appeal was preferred points that out. The term was as I have stated that Rs. 1,400 was to be paid to the father of the young girl to be given in marriage; it was also one of the terms that Rs. 500 should be paid in cash and that payment was in fact made. One of the ceremonies connected with the marriage was performed some eight days after this alleged agreement and in due course the complainant went to the village of the accused for the purpose of having the marriage ceremony performed. When he arrived there with some other persons, he discovered that another marriage ceremony was being performed at the house of the accused. Explanations were asked for and then it was stated that the brother of the complainant was to be married to the daughter of one Deonarain; and it was also alleged that he refused to make the repayment of Rs. 500 which had been paid to him as earnest money. One of the witnesses for the defence had stated that no such arrangement as was alleged by the complainant had ever been made, the reason being that an arrangement had already been made for the marriage of complainant's brother with the child of one Deonarain and it was in his evidence it appeared that it was stated that this arrangement with Deonarain preceded the arrangement between the accused and the complainant.

Now it is contended that on the facts which I have stated no criminal offence is disclosed. The learned Sessions Judge when he comes to deal with this point states that it was urged before him that the prosecution had failed to show that any deception had been practised on the complainant; but states that the evidence clearly showed that Jamadar Rai one of the accused represented to the complainant that he would marry his daughter to his brother and it was on this representation which was apparently false that the transaction was entered into and the payment was made. That perfectly obviously cannot be the basis of a criminal prosecution. If it can be in this case, then it is quite clear that any breach of contract must inevitably give rise to a criminal prosecution. It is as I have stated under S. 420 I. P. C. that these persons have been convicted. The section reads that whoever cheats and thereby dishonestly induces the person deceived to deliver any property to any person . . . shall be punished with imprisonment therein provided. The section which defines cheating is S. 413 and it provides that whoever by deceiving any person, fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person, or to consent that any person shall retain any property is cheating.

Now the cheating or the representation if any in this case, was either the direct or implied representation that the daughter was marriageable, if I may use the expression. Now assuming for the moment that an agreement had already been entered into with another person to marry this young girl, even so her status had not been altered and there was nothing to prevent the father of the girl from marrying her to the brother of the complainant. If on the other hand the girl had already been married when the agreement with the appellant was entered into, the express or implied representation that the girl could be married to the complainant's brother would have been false and could have been the basis of a criminal prosecution. In my judgment this was nothing more in the circumstances of the case than a breach of contract, that is a refusal to marry the girl to the brother of the complainant giving cause of action in a civil Court and the remedy of the complainant can be obtained only in that way. In the circumstances of this case no offence under S. 420, I. P. C. has been disclosed. The conviction will be set aside and the rule made absolute.

that some money and documents had been stolen from a box in his house. The Sub-Inspector after investigating the matter found the information to be false; and he complained to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that Gonour Singh had committed an offence punishable under S. 182, I. P. C. The Magistrate issued process under S. 182; and on the date fixed Gonour Singh filed a petition stating that the information which he had given was true and that he could prove it to be true. The trial proceeded, with the result that Gonour Singh was convicted of the offence charged and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. I am asked to revise this order on two grounds.

The first ground taken is that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate ought to have treated Gonour Singh's petition of 9th November as a complaint, and that the prosecution could not proceed until that complaint had been formally disposed of. The learned advocate for the petitioner cites the decision in the case of Ramdhar Gope v. Emperor (1), but in that case the person who was accused of an offence under S. 211, I. P. C., preferred his petition of protest before the date fixed for his appearance to answer the charge before the Magistrate; and the petition of protest actually was a formal complaint, since he definitely prayed that the case against the accused person whom he charged might proceed. Reference is made to an obiter dictum of this Court in the case of Maguni Padhan v. Emperor (2) wherein it was remarked that a Court is bound to treat the informant's petition as a complaint, when being dissatisfied with the police investigation he comes to the Court and asks that the case may be re-investigated or makes allegation against the police.

Mr. B. P. Jamuar on behalf of the Crown points out that even where the petition would be ordinarily treated as a petition of complaint it should be made before a Magistrate has actually taken cognizance of an offence under S. 182 on the complaint of a police officer. I agree with the view expressed by Macpherson, J., in Chhakari Chamar v. Emperor (3) and in the case of Parma- nand Brahmachari v. Emperor (4), that when a Magistrate has once properly taken cognizance of an offence, anything that may happen subsequently cannot bring into operation S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., so as to deprive him of jurisdiction to dispose of the matter in accordance with law. Moreover I do not consider that in the present case the petition which was filed on 9th November could in any circumstance be properly treated as a complaint. Gonour Singh was summoned under S. 182, I. P. C. to appear on 9th November. On that date if he did not plead guilty to the charge it was necessary for him to show cause why he should not be convicted. He showed cause by his petition; and after he had filed this petition it would have been superfluous for the Magistrate to examine him again under S. 342, Criminal P. C. But the petition did not (any more than the original information had done) name any person as guilty of the offence charged. It merely said that Gonour Singh was not guilty of the offence under S. 182. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate properly treated this as a petition showing cause against conviction; and he proceeded to summon the witnesses for the prosecution who were named in the Sub-Inspector's complaint.

It is argued in the second place that the Courts below have erred in treating as substantive evidence the recitals in a document (Ex. 2) which showed that two mukarrari pattas said by Gonour Singh to have been stolen from him had been made over to one Debi Prasad at the time when a certain zar-peshgi deed was executed. The learned trying Magistrate points out that the witness Jagarnath Prasad stated that the two pattas were made over to Debi Prasad in his presence; while a pleader said that it was settled in his presence that these pattas should be made over to Debi Prasad by way of security. The deed itself recited that these pattas had been made over to Debi Prasad, a fact which does not of course in itself prove that the pattas were made over, but which is not irrelevant, since it is at least not inconsistent with the story told by the prosecution witnesses. The learned Deputy Magistrate who heard the appeal says that apart from the oral evidence the zarpeshgi deed proved that these documents were made over to Debi Prasad as security in 1917. If the learned Deputy Magistrate had said no more than this, his decision might well have been criticized on the ground that the zarpeshgi deed to which Gonour Singh was not a party cannot in itself be held to prove the truth of any recital contained in it. But the learned Deputy Magistrate has not relied exclusively on this zarpeshgi deed. He remarks that there is overwhelming evidence which cannot for a moment be distrusted that the two mukarrari deeds had been in possession of Debi Prasad Singh for a long time and that they could not possibly have been in possession of Gonour Singh. I am satisfied that the learned Deputy Magistrate gave proper weight to the evidence on this point; and if he attached too much importance to the corroboration of that evidence which is afforded by the fact that the recitals in the deed Ex. 2 are not inconsistent with it, I do not consider that his decision can be regarded as vitiated on that ground. I accordingly maintain the finding and order of the lower Court and dismiss this application.

Criminal Revn. No. 240 of 1930, Decided on 21st May 1930.

Penal Code, S. 287—Standard of security required stated.

Section 287 does not say "any possible danger" and so, the owner is not required to provide perfect security against every possibility of danger, however remote. D. N. Sircar and S. P. Asthana—for Petitioner.

Cammiade for Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner Mulraj Dhir has been convicted, under S. 287, I. P. O., for negligent conduct with respect to machinery and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 60 and his appeal has been dismissed by the Sessions Judge.

The facts leading up to the prosecution were that a boy Ainul went with a companion taking some wheat to be ground into flour at a mill of which the petitioner is the owner. The petitioner was absent; his servants in charge of the mill began to grind the wheat and the lid and hopper fell from the top of the mill on to the foot of the boy who was sitting on the platform; his foot was broken.

The Magistrate held that the accident was due to something being wrong with the machinery of the mill by which some parts of the machinery were thrown off, and fell on the foot of the boy. In face of this he said the machinery cannot have been in order.

Now the Sessions Judge in his judgment said:

"It seems clear that the accident itself was due to the carelessness of the man operating the machinery, who might have been prosecuted if his identity was known. But I do not see how the appellant himself can be convicted under S. 287, I. P. C., on that particular score either as having himself done any negligent act or having negligently omitted to take proper order with his machinery, seeing that the actual falling of the cover was not due to any defect in the mill."

Having regard to this finding the logical conclusion would appear to be that the accused should be acquitted; but the Sessions Judge says that there were other defects discovered by the Inspector. He then refers to the evidence that there was a bamboo fence along the platform; he points out that there was an opening in it to give access and says that the appellant is still liable for failing to take proper steps to fence off the platform and the machinery; the result being that the boy was able to get up on to the platform and was injured which would not have happened had the machinery been properly railed off. I do not think the facts found can amount to criminal negligence on the part of accused. The machinery was fenced, and that should have been sufficient warning to outsiders to keep outside the fencing. To require it to be so fenced that approach to it should be impossible would be setting up a standard of security beyond what is laid down in the law. Admittedly the Factory Act is not applicable. The standard which was to be applied was according to S. 287, I. P. C., to take such order with the machinery as was sufficient to guard against any probable danger. The section does not say "any possible danger;" the owner is not required to provide perfect security against every possibility of danger, however remote. As I understand the section he ought to take reasonable precautions and so much care as is sufficient to guard against such danger as can be expected within the bounds of probability.

In the result I find myself unable to uphold the conviction. It is, therefore, set aside. The fine if paid will be refunded. I note that in the Sessions Court the petitioner offered in any case to compensate the boy to the extent of the compensation awarded by the Magistrate. I hope he will carry out that offer.

Criminal Revn. No. 94 of 1930, Decided on 8th March 1930.

Penal Code, S. 379—Occupancy tenant in Behar and Orissa and specially in Champaran District commits no offence in seizing fishes from trespasser collecting same on his land.

In Behar and Orissa and specially in Champaran District, provided the tenant has not made a re-grant of the right of fishery, or the landlord has not acquired such a right by custom or by adverse possession for a period of 12 years, a raiyat of an occupancy holding has a right to fish that may come on his land when it is flooded and can not only prevent any other person from entering on his land for the purpose of catching fish, but can seize the same from the trespasser who has taken them without himself committing any offence. A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 9 and A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 534, Rel. on. [P 936 C 2, P 937 C 1]

*B. C. De—*for Petitioners.

Judgment.—The petitioners are occupancy raiyats in Sangrampur village in Champaran District. On 27th September 1929, when their fields were under water, certain persons acting with the permission of a man who had taken a lease of the fishery in Sangrampur from the proprietor of the village caught about a maund of fish from the water which covered the petitioners' land. The nine petitioners came in a body and took the fish away by force from the men who had caught them. They were accordingly prosecuted for the theft of the fish. They took the defence that they were themselves entitled to the fish which had been caught on their own land, that the person who caught the fish on this land committed theft and that the petitioners were merely recovering stolen property. The Deputy Magistrate found that for some years past the fish on uncultivated land had been appropriated by the thikadar who had been in possession of the jalkar right on behalf of the proprietor. He accordingly convicted the petitioners of an offence under S. 147, I. P.C., and sentenced them each to pay a fine of thirty-five rupees.

Mr. B. C. De on behalf of the petitioners argues that it has not been proved in this case that the proprietor or his thikadar had any right to take the fish from water which was standing on occupancy holdings. It is suggested by the learned Assistant Government Advocate that all that need be proved in a criminal case of this nature is that the proprietor has within recent years been in possession of the fishery, and if that is proved the tenant cannot be held to have any right to resist an act asserting possession on behalf of the proprietor. The law of the right of fishery over flooded fields of occupancy raiyats in this province, and particularly in Champaran district, was laid down by this Court in Henry Hill and Co. v. Sheoraj Rai (1) at p. 56 of (3 P.L.T). Prima facie the raiyat of an occupancy holding has a right to fish that may come on his land when it is flooded; but as Sir B. K. Mullick pointed out, the tenant may at the time of taking his lease make a re-grant of the right of fishery to the landlord, or the landlord may have acquired such a right by custom or by adverse possession for a period of over twelve years. In the present case no re-grant by the tenant has been proved, no local custom has been proved limiting the ordinary right of the raiyat to use the land of his occupancy holding in any manner he pleases subject to the provisions of S. 23, Ben. Ten. Act; and it has not been proved that the landlord has acquired an exclusive right of fishery by adverse possession for twelve years. Therefore the raiyats had a right to catch any fish which might be found in water standing on their occupancy holding; and they had also a right to prevent any other person from entering on their land for the purpose of catching fish. That being so the rule laid down in King-Emperor v. Artu Rautra (2) will apply. The tenants were entitled to seize the fish from the trespassers who had taken them, and they committed no offence in doing so, since there was no exercise of undue violence. The application is accordingly allowed. I set aside the finding and order of the lower Court, and acquit the petitioners of the offence charged. The fines if paid will be refunded.

Assistant Govt. Advocate — for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 193, I. P. C., and sentenced to one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 300. His appeal has been dismissed by the Sessions Judge.

The petitioner was Sub-Assistant Surgeon at Baghmundi hospital in Manbhum District. On the afternoon of 3rd December 1928 a riot occurred which led to criminal proceedings and one of the accused was Wasi Ahmad Khan. His defence was an alibi, that is to say, he asserted that at about 5 p. m. on the date in question he was in bed at his house suffering from dysentery and was professionally visited by Dr. Gurudas Mandal, the present petitioner. His house is close to the Baghmundi hospital and is about four miles from the place of occurrence. The time of occurrence according to the prosecution was about 5 p. m. The petitioner was a witness for the prosecution to depose regarding certain injuries on persons whom he had examined after the riot. In cross examination he stated that on 3rd December 1928 at about 5 p. m. he had visited Wasi Ahmad Khan as a patient to treat him for dysentery and found him to have slight fever. This deposition was given on two dates, 16th February 1929 and 1st March 1929. He brought his register of private patients which was taken in evidence. The riot case ended in conviction of Wasi Ahmad Khan, among others, the Court not believing the alibi set up in face of the direct evidence. The prosecution of the petitioner was ordered with the result as stated above.

The Magistrate was of opinion that accused could not have paid a visit to Wasi Ahmad Khan at 5 p. m. because Wasi Ahmad Khan was at that time elsewhere committing a riot. He also held that the accused paid a visit to Wasi Ahmad Khan, but the time of this visit was 8 or 8-30 p. m., the Writer Head Constable of Baghmundi having deposed that he had seen accused at 8 or 8-30 p. m. who told the witness that he was going to see Wasi Ahmad Khan on a professional call.

The Sessions Judge found that the evidence regarding the time of riot was not exact and that the riot might have taken place at 3 p. m. or at any time between that and 5 p. m. and that it was possible for Wasi Ahmad Khan after taking part in the riot to get home by 5 p. m. The Sessions Judge says clearly:

"there can be no doubt, as far as all this evidence is concerned, that Wasi Ahmed could have got back by 5 p. m."

But the Sessions Judge upheld the conviction on a consideration of the evidence of the Writer Head Constable holding that the time of the accused's visit to Wasi was 8 or 8-30 p. m. and that there was only one visit; therefore, the alleged visit at 5 p. m. was false.

Substantially the defect in the decision is that there is no evidence that there was only one visit. The reasoning of the Sessions Judge by which he comes to the view that there was only one visit is a reasoning from probabilities. In a case like this reasoning from probabilities cannot take the place of evidence.

The Sessions Judge has said that it is improbable that accused paid two visits and that he has not said anywhere that he did pay two visits. It may be improbable; but if the paying of two visits was a possibility it was for the prosecution to prove by evidence that it was not a fact. The prosecution had sought to prove that it could not be a fact in as much as Wasi was four miles away at 5 p. m. and this evidence was accepted by the Magistrate; but the Sessions Judge had not accepted this evidence and has held that it is not proved that Wasi Ahmad was elsewhere at 5 p. m.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate has suggested that the Sessions Judge has not taken a correct view of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses as to the time of riot and that it ought to have been held that the riot was at 5 p. m. and that Wasi Ahmad's participation in it definitely disproves his medical examination at 5 p. m. I do not, however, think that in revision I ought to reopen a finding favourable to the accused at which the Sessions Judge has arrived on the evidence.

The view that I take of the case as a whole is that if the prosecution could prove that at 5 p. m. Wasi was four miles away and could not at that hour have been examined by the accused that evidence and finding would have supported the conviction. And the probabilities set out in the judgment of the Sessions Judge would have been relevant considerations in aid of that evidence and finding. But when the Sessions Judge had held against the prosecution of that point the materials that were left are not sufficient in law to exclude the possibility of the deposition of the accused having been substantially true.

The result is that the rule is made absolute and the conviction and sentence are set aside and the fine if paid is to be refunded.

Judgment.—This rule was granted with regard to a trial which is now proceeding against certain persons, being 42 in number, for an offence punishable under S. 400, I.P.C.

Two of the accused persons had made statements to the police and it appears that they are now about to give evidence under the provisions of S. 337, I. P. C., that is to say, they are assisting the prosecution and giving evidence on behalf of the prosecution.

Mr. Sinha on behalf of the applicant contends that the other accused are entitled to copies of the statements made by these persons to the police in the course of the investigation. I have used the expression "in the course of the investigation," but, according to the argument of the learned advocate, one of the questions to be determined in this case is whether those statements were made in the course of an investigation under Chap. 14, Criminal P. C. It is contended by Mr. Sinha on behalf of the applicant that under the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C., the accused are entitled to be furnished with copies of these statements, so that any part of such statements, if duly proved, may be used to contradict such witnesses in the manner provided by S. 145, Evidence Act. The argument is based on Ss. 160, 161 and 162 which I have already mentioned. Chap. 14, Criminal P. C., commences with S. 154, and, briefly stated, provides that every information relating to the commission of cognizable offences shall be reduced to writing, and then the latter section makes provision for an investigation into that information by the police. We can pass over Ss. 154, 155 and 156 up to S. 160 which, I say, together with Ss. 161 and 162, are the important sections to be considered.

Most of the argument by the Crown is based on the contention that neither under S. 160, nor under S. 161 can an accused person (as these statements were made by persons who were in custody and were accused persons) be forced to attend, nor is the police officer entitled to question such accused person under either of those sections, S. 160 or S. 161. S. 161 provides:

"Any police officer making an investigation under this chapter or any police officer not below such rank as the Local Government may, by general or special order, prescribe in this behalf acting on the requisition of such officer may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case."

The earlier section, that is S. 160, provides that the police officer may order in writing the attendance of a person who can give information and it also provides that such person shall attend as so required.

It is argued that quite clearly S. 162 cannot apply to the facts of this case for the reason that neither under S. 160 nor under S. 161 is an accused person contemplated, and that, in any event, under S. 160 no accused person can be required to attend.

The case which was relied upon for its contention by the learned Sessions Judge is the case of Queen Empress v. Saminada Chetti (1). That was a case, as the Chief Justice of the Madras High Court points out, in which the accused person was charged for disobeying a summons under S. 160 requiring him to attend and to answer a charge of kidnapping. The Court decided that S. 160 did not authorize a police officer to require the attendance of any accused person with a view to his answering the charge, and then it goes on to add the provisions which are contained in S. 161, Criminal P. C.

The learned Sessions Judge quite clearly was wrong in coming to the conclusion that in the case quoted above it was held that an accused person could not be compelled under S. 160 to attend after being ordered to do so by a police officer. What the case decided and decided alone was that under S. 160 an accused person could not be called upon by a police officer to attend and answer a charge. It is equally clear that the case does not assist this Court either one way or the other as regards this argument.

Another case was relied upon, the case of Emperor v. Maung Tha Din (2). That was a case which related to a statement which was made by the accused and the question was whether S. 162, Criminal P. C., overrode in any way S. 27, Evidence Act. It is unnecessary to set out the details but the real question can be shortly stated as being whether this particular statement was admissible in evidence. It is not contended on behalf of the Crown that this case was an authority on the point which is before me, but it is referred to because of the reasoning which was adopted by the Court in coming to the conclusion on the question then before it. In the course of the judgment in that case Rattledge, C. J. stated:

"It has, in my opinion, been rightly held that a police officer has no power to require the attendance of, or to examine under Ss. 160 and 161, a person accused of the offence under investigation;"

and certain cases were relied upon in favour of that view, one of which is the case of Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das (3). The question there also was whether a certain statement made was admissible under the Evidence Act and the comment which I have made on the Rangoon case (1) equally applies to this case, that is to say, that only the reasoning adopted by the learned Judges can be used to throw any light upon the matter which is before us.

It was faintly contended, as I understood the argument on behalf of the Crown, that if the statement could be used in evidence under the Evidence Act, it would necessarily follow that it could not be a statement which is contemplated by S. 162, Criminal P. C., that is to say, a statement taken in pursuance of an investigation as contemplated by that section. The argument seems to be this that S. 162 makes provision of the manner in which such a statement can be used, and it is contended that it can be used only in that way. However, if that argument is still adhered to, it seems to me to be sufficiently answered both by the provisions of S. 162, that is to say, the proviso thereto and by the decision in the case of Venkatasubbiah v. Emperor (4). But in my judgment, neither of the cases which are quoted nor the proposition which is put forward really deal with the point which is before me.

Before I come to state my view of the matter, I should add that there is another authority which is relied upon, an authority of this Court in the case of Jagwa Dhanuk v. Emperor (5). But although the value of that decision may be great as regards the point therein decided, it seems to me that the comment which I have already made as regards the other cases is one which holds as regards this. The question before the Bench of this Court in that case was whether a certain statement was admissible in evidence or not, and the questions which we have to construe in this case were only incidentally referred to, as I have already stated, as a part of the reasoning in coming to a decision on the main question. The argument by the Crown seems to me to depend upon this consideration, that S. 160 and 161 are necessarily bound up with the provisions of S. 162, that is to say, when a statement referred to in S. 162 is mentioned, it is a statement which is taken by reason of the powers given to the police under either S. 160 or under S. 161. In my judgment that does not necessarily follow. Chap. 14 deals with the investigation of the police; it makes certain provisions relating thereto, and it states that the police have certain powers in an investigation, notably the powers under Ss. 160 and 161. It is quite clear that the provisions of S. 161 are not relevant to the facts of this case. There was no such order, as far as I am aware, under S. 161, nor was there an order contemplated by S. 160. But the question that must be asked is, assuming that to be so, that is to say, the statement was not made to the police by reason of their exercise of the powers under Ss. 160 and 161, is the statement which was made to the police, a copy of which is required by the accused, any less a statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter? It is admitted, and of course it must be so, that as regards the police powers of investigation, and they are statutory powers be it noted, there are no provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code other than the chapter referred to. I am not unmindful of the provisions of the Police Act. I do not suggest for a moment that the cases referred to are not rightly decided, but to my mind the question of whether an accused can be summoned to attend under Chap. 14 is beside the point. The police may and do investigate cases and take statements and put them in writing otherwise than by reason of their powers under Ss. 160 and 161 (a person may be present of his own accord and make a statement.) The question, therefore, comes to this: Are the statements (in this case the statements made to the police in the course of an investigation), have they been made "by any person" using the expression in the section, and have they been reduced to writing? There appears to be one answer and one alone to those questions, and that answer must, in my judgment, be in the affirmative. If the police had statements made to them by accused persons and those accused persons were not to be witnesses, then of course S. 162 would not apply. This reminds me that a further question should be asked in this case. Is the person making the statement to be a witness in the case? That also must be answered in the affirmative and it makes no difference that it so happens that that person at one time was an accused. If these questions, each and every one, have to be answered in the manner in which I have stated, then there can only be one answer to the contention which is placed before this Court by Mr. Sinha on behalf of the accused that they are entitled to copies of these statements, that answer also being answered in the affirmative. There will be an order accordingly.

PULLAN, J.

Shah Naim Ata—Accused—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appln. 46 of 1930, Decided on 7th May 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 31st July 1929.

(a) Limitation Act, Art. 181—Art. 181, Lim. Act, does not apply to application in revision—No time limit is placed on High Court's power of revision—Criminal P. C., S. 439—Civil P. C., S. 115.

Article 181 has no application to an application made to High Court in revision of an order of a criminal Court of inferior jurisdiction. It does not appear that the legislature ever intended that there should be a time limit placed upon the power of the High Court to interfere by way of revision in a criminal case. There is no reason also why the same principle should not be applied to civil revisions. These powers are exercised by High Court quite irrespective of any right on the part of the aggrieved party to move the Court. 43 Cal. 1029, Ref. [P 941 G 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Admission or non-admission of application is in discretion of Court—Applications must be made within reasonable time.

The admission or non-admission of applications for revision is entirely discretionary and it is not necessary for the Court to prescribe any hard and fast rule, but the Court should not as matter of practice admit applications for revision unless it is satisfied that they are made within a reasonable time, and the reasonable time would appear to be the time granted by statute for admitting appeals. When an application for revision has been made after the expiry of the period allowed for an appeal it is proper that the Court should ask the applicant to give reasons for the delay and if those reasons are not sufficient to dismiss the application: 8 All. 514; 27 All. 468 and A. (c) Penal Code, S. 405—S. 405 covers any person who is in any manner entrusted with any property.

Section 405 does not limit the offence to the case of persons who are entitled to be called trustees in the technical sense. The section is couched in broad terms and covers any person who is in any manner entrusted with any property. Where a person manages a large property under a definite agreement that he should get 3/5ths for his own use and spend 2/5ths on certain religious and educational objects, if it can be proved that he has converted to his own use some portion of the 2/5ths share of the profits which he should devote to these objects, he may be properly convicted of an offence of breach of trust; A. Judgment.—This is an application in revision of an order passed on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow on 31st July 1929. When the application was admitted the office reported according to the practice of this Court that it was within time up to 31st July 1932, but an objection has now been raised by the learned Assistant Government Advocate that this application should be held to have been made too late and that in accordance with the practice of this Court it should not be entertained. The practice of the office is based on the belief that Art. 181, Lim. Act, applies to applications for revision. It is true that that article is provided for applications and the time from which the period begins to run is "when the right to apply accrues." In my opinion this article has no application to an application made to this Court in revision of an order of a criminal Court of inferior jurisdiction. It does not appear that the legislature ever intended that there should be a time limit placed upon the power of a High Court to interfere by way of revision in a criminal case. I say "a criminal case" because the case before me is a criminal case, but I know of no reason why the same principle should not be applied to civil revisions also. These powers are exercised by a High Court quite irrespective of any right on the part of aggrieved persons to move the Court. As a matter of fact no one has any right to move the Court in revision. All that can be done by the aggrieved person is to ask the Court to exercise the power conferred upon it by S. 435, Criminal P. C. I therefore find a further reason for my view that Art. 181, Lim. Act, has no application to this case in the fact that no "right to apply" has accrued to the person making it. A similar case came before a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the matter of Khetra Mohan Giri v. Darpa Narayan Giri (1). In rejecting the application the learned Chief Justice observed:

"This is not a question of limitation but a rule of the practice of the Court to the effect that an application for revision must be made within a reasonable time."

Moreover justice demands that there should be no limitation for righting a miscarriage of justice for such a miscarriage may be discovered many years after it has been committed, and in many cases it can only be put right by moving the High Court in revision.

On the other hand it has never been the practice of this Court, or, as far as I know, any High Court, to admit applications for revision if in the opinion of the Court they have been made after unreasonable delay. The Calcutta High Court has laid down in the case to which I have referred that their practice is to admit no applications after a period of 60 days together with such period as may have been necessary for obtaining copies; but they observe that this is not an inflexible rule and in exceptional circumstances might be departed from. I have been referred to two cases decided by the Allahabad High Court : Queen-Empress v. Ram Narain (2) and Emperor v. Jagan Nath (3) in which applications for revision were rejected on the ground that they were made too late. The first was made nine months after the order of which revision was sought and the second was made 5 months and 23 days after the order. In Oudh there is no reported case on the criminal side though I am informed that the practice of the Court has always been to reject applications made more than 90 days after the order complained against unless special reason was shown for the delay. In a reported case on the civil side the Judicial Commissioner rejected an application for revision on the ground that it was filed after an inordinate delay, that is to say, a year after the order complained of : Binda Prasad v. Banarsi Das (4). In my opinion the admission or non-admission of such applications is entirely discretionary and it is not necessary for the Court to prescribe any hard and fast rule; but the Court should not as a matter of practice admit applications for revision unless it is satisfied that they are made within a reasonable time, and the reasonable time would appear to be the time granted by statute for admitting appeals. When an application for revision has been made after the expiry of the period allowed for an appeal it appears to me proper that the Court should ask the applicant to give reasons for the delay, and if those reasons are not sufficient to dismiss the application.

In the present case the judgment was dated 31st July 1929. The applicant applied for a copy of the judgment on 21st October 1929 and obtained it on 22nd October, and he did not file any application in revision until the 12th April 1930. The learned counsel who appears for the applicant has given no reasons for the delay and in my opinion I should be fully justified in the circumstances in rejecting the application. As however the application was admitted by a learned Judge of this Court owing to what I consider to be an incorrect office report on the point of limitation I think it right to decide the case also on the merits. The applicant was found guilty of the offence of breach of trust under S. 406, I. P. C., and sentenced to one day's simple imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000. He is a hereditary Sajjadanashin of a Mahomedan religious institution in the Rae Bareilly District.

"The property was made wakf in the time of the Kings of Oudh and after the annexation the British Government restored to the Sajjadanashin the same tenure which he was in possession of prior to confiscation."

These words are quoted from a judgment of this Court in an appeal in a civil suit in which the present applicant was the defendant Shah Mohammad Naim Ata v. Mohammad Shamsuddin (5). I have been asked to hold that in view of that judgment the applicant is not a trustee and cannot be guilty of the offence of breach of trust. Apart from the fact that this judgment was delivered on 20th December 1926 long before the offence, if any was committed for which the applicant has been convicted, I can find nothing in the judgment to show that the applicant holds a position in which it is impossible for him to commit a breach of trust. On the contrary it appears that he manages a large property under a definite agreement that he should get 3/5ths for his own use and spend 2/5ths on certain religious and educational objects. If it can be proved that he has converted to his own use some portion of the 2/5ths share of the profits which he should devote to these objects it appears to me that he may be properly convicted of an offence of breach of trust. S. 405, I. P. C., does not limit the offence which is there defined to the case of persons who are entitled to be called trustees in the technical sense. The section is couched in broad terms and covers any person who is in any manner entrusted with any property. A perusal of the judgments of the Courts below show that they have found the applicant guilty of converting to his own use a portion of the funds which he was legally bound to spend on the objects on trust. I can find no reason to doubt the correctness, legality or propriety of the finding, sentence or order of the lower Court. I therefore see no reason to interfere in revision on the merits of the case. The application is accordingly dismissed.

Judgment.—These references were made by the learned Sessions Judge of Unao. They arise out of the same case. The Kotwal of Unao obtained a warrant from the Superintendent of Police in order to raid a house where gambling was going on at the time of Dewali. He found a number of people gambling with cowries. The total amount of money found on the premises was Rs. 24-12-9 and the number of persons playing was twenty-eight. The Magistrate fined all except two whom he held to be minors and whom he discharged with an admonition. The total amount of fines realized was Rs. 29. In his judgment the Magistrate observed:

"The festival of Dewali does not give a free permit to persons to gamble in contravention of the provisions of the Gambling Act."

The last words are important. The festival of Dewali is recognized by all Hindus as a time when gambling is not only permissible but praiseworthy, and the law has never yet interfered with this practice as such. It is, however, true to say that the law will not countenance gambling even at Dewali if it is in contravention of the Gambling Act. If, therefore, this gambling took place in a public place, or if the owner of the premises was making a profit out of the gamblers, the conviction might not be illegal although the raid and the prosecution would still in my opinion be deplorable. The only evidence in this case that anything was being done in contravention of the Gambling Act is that the owner of the house had in front of him a small pot containing As. 15. There is no reason whatever for supposing that this represented his profits or that it was what is known as "nal." It may very well have been the small sum which he had won or which he proposed to stake. In my opinion this was an ordinary case of Dewali gambling in a private house. The sums staked were trifling and in my opinion no offence was committed under the Gambling Act. On previous occasions the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh have had occasion to point out that Dewali gambling was not to be considered an offence. I refer to Ram Shanker v. Emperor (1) and Emperor v. Shankar Dayal (2). In his explanation the learned Magistrate has attempted to differentiate both cases but he has not succeeded. I regret to say that I have recently seen several cases in which warrants have been issued to the police in order that they may interfere with persons engaged in Dewali gambling. In my opinion to issue such warrants is highly undesirable as the police are merely encouraged to run in numbers of perfectly innocent persons in order to get a reward. As I have already shown in this case no less than Rs. 290 have been collected from 26 persons and the Magistrate has expressed his intention of giving a reward to the police. I can only hope that no reward has been given. I accordingly accept this reference, set aside the convictions and direct that all the fines shall be returned. It is not, in these circumstances, necessary to consider the mind law point raised as to the applicability of S. 562 (1-A) to cases under the Gambling Act.

R. F. Bahadurji and Moti Lal Sak-sena—for Appellant.

B. K. Dhaon and H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., against an order of the Sessions Judge of Hardoi in which he makes a complaint to the District Magistrate under S. 476, Criminal P. C., requiring one B. Shankar Sahai, who is a practising lawyer in the Hardoi District, to be prosecuted under Ss. 193 and 465, I. P. C. The case which gave rise to the proceedings was a criminal case brought by one Shambhu Nath against Tula and others which resulted in the conviction of the accused for offences under Ss. 147, 323 and 324, I. P. C., and the conviction and sentences were upheld on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge. Neither he nor the Magistrate elected to prosecute B. Shankar Sahai at that time and the present order has been passed on the application of Shambhu Nath. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon the Courts that such proceedings should not be undertaken on the application of private persons unless the prosecution is clearly in the interest of the State and is reasonably certain to result in a conviction. I have been very carefully through the facts of this case. The Judge was under the impression that the assault took place in a certain field which is No. 440 and that it arose out of a dispute as to tenancy rights in that field between Tula on the one side and Shambhu Nath on the other. I find on the contrary that in the report made by Shambhu Nath no particular field is mentioned. It is only stated that Shambhu Nath heard that his jundhri crop had been cut, that he went to verify the fact and that he was waylaid by Tula and others, but the scene of the occurrence is not placed on this field. Tula made a counter complaint and he also stated that he was attacked when on his way back from his field. The evidence was recorded in Court on 8th November. The complainant examined himself and six other witnesses; none of them mentioned the number of the field and it is very clear from the evidence that the matter in dispute was the assault not the field. On 25th November Shambhu Nath was cross-examined by B. Shankar Sahai who was counsel for the accused. He was tied down in cross-examination to a description of the field which could be verified, but even on that day no number was assigned to the field. On the following day, 26th November, the village patwari was examined. He located the field from Shambhu Nath's description as No. 440, and he stated that this field was partly cultivated by B. Shankar Sahai, who is the lambardar of the village, and was partly fallow. He did not beat out Shambhu Nath's assertion that he (Shambhu Nath) had obtained this field by relinquishment from a former tenant Badlay. It is at this stage of the proceedings that B. Shankar Sahai, who had withdrawn from the case on the previous day, was examined as a witness, and he said that Badlay's field No. 440 had been relinquished in his own favour and he had himself given it on lease to Tula accused on 25th June 1929, and he verified the lease which was produced. The view taken by the learned Sessions Judge is that B. Shankar Sahai got this lease prepared during the trial of the case in order to establish the defence of Tula and it is on this belief that he has instituted proceedings against him. From the facts which I have stated it is evident that the field was not the matter of dispute until the 25th November. Shambhu Nath had up till then made vague statements only about the cutting of his crops and it was not until he was forced to give the boundaries and description of the field which he alleged to have been cut that the other side had any opportunity to prove their possession over that field. Thus the production of the lease was not an after thought as stated in his judgment in appeal by the learned Sessions Judge. It could not have been produced any earlier and his reason for supposing that the lease is antedated falls to the ground. I cannot myself see any other reason for supposing the lease to be antedated.

When proceedings were taken under S. 476 Babu Shankar Sahai asked to produce witnesses to prove the lease, but he was not allowed to do so. He had also offered in Court to produce the deed of relinquishment said to have been executed in his own favour by

Badlay, but the deed of relinquishment produced by Shambhu Nath was produced and not that said to have been executed in favour of Shankar Sahai. It is therefore a matter still open to question whether this field was relinquished by Badlay in favour of B. Shankar Sahai who is the lambardar or Shambhu Nath who had purchased some land in the village and is apparently disliked by the former zamindars. In my opinion there is no presumption that the lease produced by B. Shankar Sahai was a forgery and there is certainly no evidence to prove that it was not executed as stated on 25th June 1929. Thus in my opinion the prosecution for forgery was bound to fail. There is nothing on which the Court could base a conviction. Apart from that the learned Sessions Judge acted without jurisdiction. Under S. 476, Criminal P. C., he could take action by way of complaint where in his opinion an offence referred to in S. 195, sub-S. (1), Cl. (b), or (c)

"appears to have been committed in relation to a proceeding in that Court."

But S. 196 (c), which is the relevant clause, forbids any Court from inquiring into an offence described in S. 463, where such an offence is alleged to have been committed "by a party to a proceeding in any Court," except on the complaint in writing of the Court. I find no clause under which the Court can take proceedings against a person who is not a party, and B. Shankar Sahai was not a party to the proceedings in the Court of the Magistrate on which action has been taken by the Sessions Judge. No doubt the learned Judge was empowered to take proceedings in respect of an alleged offence under S. 193, but the only statement which he considers to constitute perjury was the following:

"Main ne No. 440 ka patta 25th June 1929 ko Tula Ram mulzim ko dia."

The Judge himself describes the perjury charge as a mere corollary to the charge of forgery. In my opinion the complaint of the offence of forgery was without jurisdiction and neither a charge of forgery nor a charge of perjury can possibly be made out on the materials given by the learned Sessions Judge. When such complaints are made under S. 476 the officer making them must state the evidence on which he relies, otherwise the Magistrate to whom the case is referred for decision has no means of ascertaining what the evidence is on which the prosecution case is based. 'As far as I can see the Magistrate, who is required to act on the complaint in the present case, would start and end with the opinion of the Sessions Judge that this lease was antedated and that B. Shankar Sahai had made a false statement about it. I am at a loss to see how either opinion of the learned Sessions Judge was to be established by legal evidence. I consider that the whole order was misconceived. There was no justification for the prosecution of Babu Shankar Sahai either under S. 193 or S. 465; I. P. C; and under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., I direct the withdrawal of the complaint.

Criminal Appeal No 244 of 1930, Decided on 10th July 1930, from order of Addl. Sess-Judge, Bahraich, D/- 8th May 1930.

There is no more dangerous witness than young children. Any mistakes or discrepancies in their statements are ascribed to innocence or failure to understand, and undue weight is often given to what is merely a well taught lesson. Children have good memories and no conscience. They are easily taught stories and live in a world of make-believe so that they often become convinced that they have really seen the imaginary incident which they have been taught to relate. The evidence of a child should therefore be accepted with great caution.

Judgment.—Manni Ahir a man of thirty years of age has been convicted of the murder of his wife and sentenced to death. The sentence is before us for confirmation and Manni has appealed against his conviction.

The girl Jugra who died was stated by her mother to be about fourteen years of age. It is in evidence that she had been married for about a year, that she was not on good terms with her husband and that she had run away from him more than once. Her body was found in the river Khurpehwa on the afternoon of 16th October by Mr. Surja. The chaukidar Surja was told about the recovery of the body and he went to the place and found the body of Jugra lying naked on the bank of the river tied by a rope to a short bamboo stick. He found her mother Mt. Surja with it. The chaukidar went to the police station and made a report. Admittedly this report is based on the statement made by Mt. Surja. In that report he gave the gist of the evidence which has subsequently been produced in Court. He said that on his inquiry Khemai's wife (Surja) said :

“that she (the corpse) was her daughter named Jugra who was married to Manni Ahir of Gurpurwa, that she used to live little at the place of her husband and used to run away to her parents' house, that therefore she had been killed by her husband, that the girl was at the place of her husband, that her granddaughter, the daughter of Baldi, had gone along with her to her husband's place, that she returned in the evening on the day previous saying that her aunt had been killed by her uncle, that she and her people began to search for her from early morning that day and that they found the dead body in the river at that time.”

This fixes the time of the alleged murder on the night of 14th and 15th October and naturally the most important evidence in the case is that of the granddaughter, the daughter of Baldi, whose name is Shukhrania, and who is said to have given the first information to her grandmother Surja of the commission of the crime. Sukhrania has been believed by the learned Sessions Judge. This child is six years of age. Her statement in Court is that she and her grandmother Surja went to the house of the accused and that she (Sukhrania) was sleeping with Jugra and woke up on receiving a kick from her. She states that she saw the accused throttling his wife. He was sitting on her chest, and when the child began to cry he told her to go to sleep. She says that she went to sleep. When she woke up in the morning she did not find Mt. Jugra. She found another woman who had been sleeping in the same house behind a partition of cornbins and she asked her what had happened. This woman told her that Jugra had been beaten and had run away, and this is the story which she told to her grandmother on the same evening. She said nothing about the throttling, and although the learned Judge thinks it not unnatural that a child should describe throttling by the word beating we are not of that opinion. We do not believe that anybody would describe the incident which the child now says she saw as a beating. The learned Judge is clearly impressed by the child's statement. He says she did not give him the impression of having been tutored and there is no reason why anyone should tutor her. Now Surja in her statement in Court admitted that she suspected the accused from the first because there was no one else possible. She obviously believes in his guilt and her whole conduct throughout shows that she wishes that he should be convicted. The child is completely under her influence and could very easily be taught by her what she was to say in Court. The Judge was impressed by the fact that Sukhrania caught her own throat with her hands and set her teeth to illustrate what she saw the accused doing. We are not impressed by this piece of acting which had previously been performed in the Court of the Committing Magistrate. It does not appear to us to have been spontaneous, but rather to have been tutored along with the rest of her statement. There is no more dangerous witness than a young child. Any mistakes or discrepancies in their statements are ascribed to innocence or failure to understand, and undue weight is often given to what is merely a well-taught lesson. Children have good memories and no conscience. They are easily taught stories and live in a world of make-believe so that they often become convinced that they have really seen the imaginary incident which they have been taught to relate.

We find in this case that there is no evidence to corroborate the statement made by the child. There is no evidence that the woman was throttled.

The cause of her death is entirely unknown. There is no evidence that her husband was present on the night on which she died, and it is uncertain that she died on the night which is stated to have been the date of her death. The Civil Surgeon who conducted the post-mortem examination on the morning of 18th October found that the woman had been dead for five or six days, that is to say, according to his opinion she died on the night of 12th and 13th October and not on the night of 14th and 15th. Doctors are frequently wrong on the difficult question of post-mortem appearances, but as this body was in water, it would be expected that decomposition would be delayed and not accelerated, and it is surprising that if the woman really died on the night of 14th and 15th October, the doctor should have placed her death some 48 hours earlier.

We have been asked to consider a statement made under S. 164, Criminal P. C., by another woman Mt. Sarjudei who is said to have been actually present in the house on the night in question. This statement was excluded by the learned Sessions Judge and in our opinion he was right in so doing. A statement made under S. 164 behind the back of the accused cannot be properly used as evidence against him. The only object in recording such statement is to obtain a hold over the witness. This was the view expressed by Lindsay, J. C., in the case of Puttu v. Emperor (1) and we believe it to be a correct statement of law.

Another point used by the learned Judge against the accused is that he ran away and remained in hiding for over two months. We should be most reluctant to use this fact in any way against the accused. The man is an ignorant villager, and according to his own statement he returned to his village from a short absence of seven days to hear that his wife had been drowned, that members of the family were shut up in the thana, and that a report was made against him. If this statement is true, and there is no evidence to rebut it as the man was not seen anywhere either on the day when his wife is said to have been killed or later until he was arrested, we can only say that his conduct can easily be explained on the ground of fear, and fear is not necessarily caused by a guilty conscience.

The last point which we need consider is the alleged identification of danda or stick which was found tied to the body. Certainly three witnesses say that the danda belonged to the accused. It has no particular marks of identification and in our opinion it is very difficult for anyone to say that this is the accused's danda. But even if it were so, it does not provide important evidence against its owner. Nor can we say how the danda was used. We cannot accept the explanation given by the learned Judge that it was fixed in the sand in the bed of the river in order to prevent the body from being washed away because we cannot imagine anyone doing anything so foolish. A short stick like this could not retain its hold in a river bed even for a few minutes let alone for three or four days. Moreover all that we know from the chaukidar who may be considered to be an impartial witness is that when the body was lying on the bank it was tied by the rope to the stick. We are far from certain that when the body was in the water it was tied to the stick and we cannot understand the object with which any murderer could have so tied the body. It is at least probable that the stick and the rope were merely used to bring the body to the shore.

Viewing the case as a whole we are of opinion that there is no sufficient evidence to justify the conviction of the appellant of the offence of murder. We are not even certain that the woman was murdered. We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and declare the accused Manni to be acquitted.

Penal Code, Ss. 99, 103, 302 and 304—
Right of killing offender found committing burglary given by S. 103 is subject to provisions of S. 99—Deceased beaten to death by lathi blow while found coming out of hole in wall after committing burglary—Accused held guilty of offence under S. 304—S. 300, Excep. (2) held applicable but accused held to have exceeded right of private defence of property.

The right in exercise of right of private defence of property of killing of offender who is found committing burglary given by S. 103 is subject to the provisions of S. 99.

Where the deceased was found committing housebreaking and was set upon by the owner of the house and his son when he was coming out of the hole and was beaten to death with lathi blows.

Held: that the accused were guilty of an offence under S. 304. The Exception (2) to S. 300 applied to their case: The accused had no intention of committing more harm than was necessary for the purpose of their defence of private defence of property, but without premeditation they in fact exceeded their right of private defence of property as the deceased was at their mercy while coming out of the hole and he could have been easily overpowered and secured. It was not necessary to beat him to death with lathi blows.

But as the accused were villagers who hardly realized that in killing a thief caught flagrante delicto they were committing any serious offence, severe punishment was not called for: A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 425; A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 28 and A. I. R. 1923 All. 194, Dist.

Judgment.—Mahabir Tewari, aged 70, and Tarpai, his son aged 24 of Pura Beni Ram, a hamlet of village Ghatauli, police station Milkipur, in the district of Fyzabad, have been both convicted of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad. They have appealed against their conviction and sentence. The reference in confirmation of the sentence of death is also before us.

The facts out of which this charge of murder arises are briefly as follows:

On 1st February 1930 at 6-30 a. m. Mahabir, appellant, accompanied by the village chaukidar made a report at Thana Milkipur that on the previous night at about midnight four thieves entered his house by making a hole in the back wall of his house, that three of them ran away when a cry of "thief, thief" was raised but that the fourth one as he was coming out of the hole in the wall of the house was attacked by Mahabir and his son Narpat with their lathis, that this thief who was coming out of the hole in the wall was Mulhar Singh a resident of Narsara and that he died shortly afterwards as a result of the injuries inflicted on him by Mahabir and Narpat, that having seated Sital Brahman and Narpat to keep watch over the dead body of the thief Mulhar Singh, Mahabir along with the village chaukidar hurried to the thana to make his report. His report was entered in a cheque receipt or first information report and the offence of burglary was registered at the Milkpur police station as Crime No. 19. Upon this very same report of Mahabir there and then, without any further enquiry, a case of culpable homicide under S. 304, I. P. C., was registered against this unfortunate Mahabir and his son Narpat by the Station Officer of Thana Milkpur and Mahabir who had come to make a report concerning the burglary at his own house found himself all of a sudden a prisoner in police custody. Subsequently the charge under S. 304, I. P. C., became magnified into one of wilful murder under S. 302, I. P. C. The original case under S. 457, I. P. C., was dropped by the police as an empty worthless husk and a very laboured, halting and lame story was set up on behalf of the prosecution to explain the manner in which the deceased Mulhar Singh met with his death. It is said that Mulhar Singh who was a notorious house-breaker and thief and who was bound over under S. 110, Criminal P. C., in August 1926 came with Karia Bhat to the house of Aharwadin (P. W. 19) of Deora Kotra. Aharwadin is a history-sheeter and with him was seated his associate Raghubans Rai (P. W. 9). This meeting of bad characters took place after night fall, and then Mulhar Singh asked his friends Aharwadin and Raghubans Rai to accompany him through the jungle as he was afraid of the people of Pura Beni Ram and apprehended danger at their hands. Thereupon Aharwadin and Raghubans Rai accompanied Mulhar Singh through the jungle and when they were about 2½ furlongs from the hamlet of Pura Beni Ram they turned home leaving Mulhar Singh to go his way alone. When they had gone about 165 paces towards their own village Deora Katra they heard a cry of Mulhar Singh, and they turned back and saw 15 or 16 men beating Mulhar Singh with lathis. How these men, amongst whom presumably were the two appellants, came to be there is a matter upon which the prosecution witnesses do not throw any light. There is also no evidence adduced by the prosecution to explain how Mulhar Singh came to be found at the house of Mahabir, appellant, and as to who carried Mulhar Singh from the imaginary spot where the 15 or 16 men are said to have beaten him to the house of Mahabir. A story so truncated and formless and so absolutely devoid of the sap of reason and of common sense it is hard to imagine, and it is therefore a matter of surprise, to us that it found such ready credence with the learned trial Judge. The learned Sessions Judge himself characterizes the evidence of Ram Bakhsh (P. W. 13), Bhawani Pher (P. W. 16) Ribai Pasi (P. W. 17) Bhabhute (P. W. 18) and Ram Nath (P. W. 20) unreliable and unworthy of belief. We entirely agree with the learned Sessions Judge in his estimate of the evidence of these witnesses and we, therefore, will not discuss their testimony. The only witnesses upon whose evidence the learned Sessions Judge convicts the appellants are Aharwadin P. W. 19 and Raghubans Rai (P. W. 9). A part from the fact that these witnesses did state before the police that Mulhar Singh was accompanied by Karia Bhat and that Karia Bhat suddenly disappears from the scene and is not produced as a witness in the case, the story told by these witnesses is in our opinion very discrepant and inherently improbable. There was no pressing necessity which compelled Mulhar Singh a notorious bad character to go at night time to Pura Beni Ram where he suspected treachery and trouble. It is also not understood why, if Aharwadin and Raghubans Rai were willing to be friendly with Mulhar Singh they did not see him safely to his place of destination that night. They left Mulhar Singh in the lurch after going a short distance with him. They did not run and raise an alarm nor attempt to rescue Mulhar Singh when they saw him being beaten by a dozen men or more. The cry of dacoity which these witnesses say they heard in Pura Beni Ram is not explained. They did not state whose house was being decoited or what connexion this alleged dacoity had with the beating and the death of Mulhar Singh. All these matters the prosecution has left in the dark and there is no clear answer given in the evidence of the Crown witnesses to the many doubts that arise in our mind as to the truth of the story told by these two witnesses. Aharwadin admits that he and the deceased Mulhar Singh were suspected in the theft committed at Kandhai Kurmi's house. He is a thoroughly unreliable and dishonest witness and his evidence in our opinion is quite unbelievable. The evidence of Raghubans Rai (P. W. 9) about his seeing Mulhar Singh being beaten by 15. or 16 men is not believed even by the learned Sessions Judge because this very witness told the investigating police officer when he was first examined (vide Ex. A.) that on hearing the cry of Mulhar Singh, he and Charwa Din did not go to the scene of the occurrence but returned straight home to their village.

We are in entire agreement with the learned Sessions Judge on this point and we consider that the evidence of Aharwadin and Raghubans Rai as to the circumstances in which the deceased came to Pura Beni Ram and met with his death is entirely false. The entire case for the prosecution as presented in Court is in our opinion a pure unadulterated fabrication and the investigating police officer would have been well advised if he had accepted the first information report of Mahabir and left it to the latter to prove that the death of Mulhar Singh was justifiable homicide.

The learned Sessions Judge has attempted to argue that the story of house breaking set up by the appellants "(the Sindh theory," as he calls it) is highly improbable. We find ourselves absolutely unable to accept his reasoning on this point. His argument is that because the northern and southern walls of the appellant's house are very low so there was no necessity for making a hole (sindh) in the back wall of the house. The fact that a hole in the back wall of the house had been actually dug is proved beyond any shadow of doubt. Sub-Inspector Mohammad Ishaq and chaukidar Sajjan who is a defence witness prove this fact, and it is idle to argue that because in the opinion of the trial Court there was no necessity for making a hole in the wall, that therefore the story of housebreaking set up by the appellants is improbable. Even the investigating police officer Sub-Inspector Mohammad Ishaq, though he has coolly ignored the commission of the offence of housebreaking by the deceased, does not venture to assert that no burglary was committed by the deceased. The fact that a burglary was committed and a hole made in the back wall of the appellants' house is as definitely and clearly proved as the fact that the thief Mulhar Singh was killed while coming out of the hole in the wall of that house. We see no reason to disbelieve the evidence of chaukidar Sajjan Singh and of the other defence witnesses. The evidence of these defence witnesses strikes us as far more reasonable and intelligible than the remarkable and imaginary story put into the mouths of the prosecution witnesses. The medical evidence in our opinion does not in any way conflict with the defence version of the occurrence. The Civil Surgeon of Fyzabad nowhere deposes that the bruises on the left and right thighs of the deceased were caused by lathi blows. He merely deposes that the fracture of the skull was caused by blows from a blunt weapon like a lathi. This evidence of the Civil Surgeon of Fyzabad is entirely consistent with the story told by the appellant.

The fact that articles were not lying in a confused state inside the house of the appellants would not per se prove that no thieves had come on the night of the occurrence to that house. In fact the chaukidar Sajjan deposes that when he reached Mahabir's house that very night immediately after the occurrence he found the body of Mulhar Singh lying inside the hole and a lota and a thali and a lathi were found outside the house near the hole. This evidence clearly proves that the deceased was committing house-breaking when he was set upon by the owner of the house and his son and unfortunately killed. The mere absence of any loss of property by the appellants because their women-folk woke-up in good time and raised an alarm will not prove that no offence of burglary or house-breaking took place. The refusal of Mahabir after he had been charged with murder to produce the thali and lots which the thieves had taken out of his house is easily intelligible. We can fully sympathize with the bitter feelings of the outraged Mahabir and his son Narpat who found Sub-Inspector Mohammad Ishaq had put the halter round their necks instead of helping them to discover the thieves who had broken into their house. Is it to be wondered at if in these circumstances they did not trouble to comply with the thanadar's request to produce the stolen property even if we are to suppose that that officer did ask them to produce the stolen utensils?

Upon a careful consideration of the entire evidence on the record and after giving the facts and circumstances of this case our best consideration we have unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that the case for the prosecution fails and that the defence version of the occurrence is satisfactorily proved.

The learned counsel for the appellants, Mr. John Jackson, who has argued this appeal with remarkable frankness and brevity, has conceded that the burden of proving that the death of Mulhar Singh brought about by the appellants was justifiable homicide lay upon his clients: S. 105, Evidence Act. Under S. 103, I. P. C., the appellants had the right, in the exercise of the right of private defence of property, of causing even the death of the offender who committed burglary or house-breaking in their house, but this right of killing of an offender who committed burglary is subject to the provisions of S. 99, I. P. C., which lays down very clearly that the right of private defence in no case extends to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence. In the present case, accepting the version of the appellants themselves we find that when they had the thief at their mercy as he was coming out of the hole in the wall it was not necessary for either of them to beat him to death with lathi blows. They could have overpowered and secured him in a 100 different ways short of causing his death by fracture of his skull. We therefore hold that the appellants on their own showing exceeded the right of private defence of property. It may be noted here that no right of private defence of person has been pleaded by the appellants. Upon the legal view of the appellants' conduct that we take in this case we hold that exception (2) to S. 300, I. P. C., applies to their case. The appellants had no intention of committing more harm than was necessary for the purpose of their defence, but without premeditation they in fact exceeded their right of private defence of property. They are therefore guilty of an offence under S. 304, I. P. C.

The learned counsel for the appellants invited our attention to a ruling of the Lahore High Court reported in Ishmail v. Emperor (1), in which it was held by a single learned Judge of that Court that the accused not knowing in the dark whether the burglar was armed or not did not exceed his right of self defence under Cl. (4), S. 103, I. P. C., by striking him three times and causing his death and that his conviction under S. 304, I. P. C., must be set aside. The facts of that case are entirely different from the facts of the present case. In the present case the appellants themselves admit that the burglar was entirely at their mercy as he was coming out of the hole made in the wall. At that time the burglar was unarmed and not in a position to attack them and they could have easily overcome him and arrested him without inflicting such injuries on his head as inevitably and immediately led to his death. He has also invited our attention to a ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in Emperor v. Hira (2), in which the late Ryves, J., made the following notable pronouncement:

"If a man is entitled to protect his own life by using a lathi, it is impossible to weigh the force of the blows which he uses for that purpose, as it is said, in 'golden scales'; and to adjudicate with great nicety as to the exact amount of force which would be justified."

This observation of the learned Judge has however no applicability to the facts and circumstances of the present case. The appellants were not exercising the right of private defence of person. They were in no fear of their lives when they caused the death of the burglar. Equally inapplicable to the facts of the present case is the ruling reported in Baij Nath v. Emperor (3).

In our opinion the appellants are clearly guilty of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under S. 304, I. P. C. We find ourselves unable under the proved circumstances of this case to hold that the acts of the appellants were committed in the exercise of the right of private defence of property and that the death of Mulhar Singh was justifiable homicide.

For the reasons given above we allow this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the appellants for an offence under S. 302, I. P. C., and acquit them of that charge, but we convict each of them of an offence under S. 304, I. P. C. It now remains for us to consider the question of punishment. The appellant Mahabir is an old man of 70 and his son Narpal is a young man of 24 years of age. They are villagers who hardly realized that in killing a thief caught "flagrante delicto" they were committing any serious offence. Taking all the facts and circumstances of the case into consideration we sentence Mahabir for an offence under S. 304, I. P. C., to undergo six months' rigorous imprisonment and Narpal for the same offence to undergo one year's rigorous imprisonment. The commencement of the sentence in each case will take effect from the date of the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad.

Criminal Appeal No. 315 of 1930, Decided on 21st July 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Rae Bareilly, D/- 24th June 1930.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 30 — Retracted confession believed to be true by Court is sufficient evidence for convicting person making it—Corroborative evidence is necessary only in case of co-accused.

A retracted confession, even without any corroborative evidence, is sufficient evidence, if the Court believes it to be true, for convicting the person who makes it. A man of sound mind and full age who makes a statement in ordinary simple language must be bound by the language of the statement and by its ordinary plain meaning. As regards his co-accused corroborative evidence is, of course necessary : 20 All. 138; 29 All. 494; A. I. R. 1925 All. 627 and A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 17, Rel. on. [P 953 C 2, P 954 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 30—Retracted confession of accused standing unrebutted and corroborated sufficiently by material evidence is admissible and goes strongly against co-accused.

Retracted confession alone of an accused is not sufficient to justify a conviction—the co-accused, but when such confession stands unrebutted and there is nothing to show that the accused had any reasons for naming other persons falsely and the story fits in exactly with the facts known and is corroborated sufficiently by material evidence against the co-accused the evidence is admissible and is strong piece of evidence against the co-accused.—A.I. H. K. Ghosh—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Wajid Quraishi, aged forty, and his cousin, Bachcha Quraishi, aged twenty-five, of village Chaksara in the district of Partabgarh, have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Rae Bareilly of an offence of murder under S. 302, I. P. C. Bachchu Quraishi, aged forty, of Kundri, has been convicted of abetment of murder under Ss. 302/109, I. P. C. They have been sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court. They appeal and the reference in confirmation is also before us.

Chaksara and Kundri are adjoining villages. Only a nala (ravine) intervenes between the two villages. The houses nearest to the nala are those of Wajid and Bachcha accused. Wajid is the son of Makun who was also sent up for trial, but was given the benefit of doubt and acquitted by the learned Judge. It is quite unnecessary to determine in this case whether Makun was or was not rightly acquitted by the learned Judge.

Bachchu accused is the son of Abdul Quraishi by his first wife. Abdul deserted his first wife long ago and married another woman, Mt. Nasiba by whom he has two sons, Umar Ali and Moharram. Abdul lives with his second wife and her children. Bachchu occupies a separate house which adjoins Abdul's house. He lives with his mother and his wife Mt. Jinta and his children by her. Mt. Hadisul (deceased) was one of the four children (two sons and two daughters) of Bachchu by his wife, Mt. Jinta.

The charge in this case relates to the murder of Mt. Hadisul who was of about eleven years of age. She was brutally murdered, shortly after nightfall on the night of 30th-31st January 1930. The medical evidence shows that she had received twenty-two injuries on different parts of her body and her death was due to asphyxia caused by pressure applied to the neck.

This is a case of horrible murder committed under unusual circumstances. It has been found, that Hadisul's father Bachchu himself entered into a conspiracy with Wajid and Bachcha to murder her with the nefarious object of implicating his own father, stepbrothers and stepmother.

The evidence on the record shows that the relations between Bachchu and his father Abdul were very strained. Abdul has given Bachchu only a small area of the sir land and has kept the rest of the zamindari for himself and his children by Mt. Nasiba. Bachchu made a report of burglary against his father Abdul and his stepbrother Umar Ali about a year ago. The case was investigated by the police, but the report was found to be utterly false. The result was that ill-feeling between Bachchu and his father and stepbrothers became more acute. [His Lordship then discussed the evidence and came to the conclusion that there had been a conspiracy between the three accused to commit the offence and proceeded]. It will be convenient now to take up the case of each accused separately. We should like to note that they pleaded not guilty in the Court of Sessions Judge but produced no evidence in defence.

1. Bachchu.—The confessional statements made by this man show clearly that he was concerned in the crime. He made a full and detailed confession and stuck to it in his statement before the Committing Magistrate, but retracted it in the Sessions Court. He wishes it to be believed that he had made the confession at the instance of the police who had caused him to believe that his co-accused had murdered Hadisul and that if he (Bachchu) would make a confession, he would be granted a pardon and his co-accused would be convicted on his evidence. There is nothing on the record in support of this allegation. The police officers have denied the allegation in question. After most careful and anxious consideration we have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in the confession or in the evidence to show that the making of the confession was caused by any inducement, threat or promise. The confession is full of detail and very circumstantial and bears on it the impress of truth. The man confessed and then produced the ornaments of Mt. Hadisul tied in a piece of her sari which he himself had buried in the nala. He states now that the ornaments in question were supplied to the police by his wife and that they belonged to his younger daughter, Mt. Ahidul. This is surely untrue. The evidence given by his wife, Mt. Jinta is clear on this point. There is sufficient corroborative evidence in support of the confession. We have no hesitation in finding that the confession was genuine and the retraction false. There is no doubt that Bachchu is on inimical terms with his father and stepbrothers. He went so far as to get his own daughter, Hadisul, murdered with the object that his father, his stepmother and his stepbrother might be falsely charged with the murder of the girl. The confession being in our opinion a true confession is sufficient without any corroborative evidence even for the conviction of Bachchu. This view of the law has been taken by the Allahabad High Court and by the Chief Court on many occasions. It was held in the case of Queen Empress v. Maiku Lal (1) that such a confession, namely a retracted confession, was sufficient evidence, if the Court believed it to be true, for convicting the person who made it. This view was carried further in the case of Emperor v. Kehri (2). It is there expressly laid down that as regards the person making it, the retracted confession may even without any corroborative evidence form the basis of conviction. This view has been recently confirmed by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ragha v. Emperor (3). The decision in Ragha's case (3) has been followed by this Court in several cases in particular in the case of Raj Bahadur Singh v. Emperor (4). A man of sound mind and full age who makes a statement in ordinary simple language must be bound by the language of the statement and by its ordinary plain meaning. As regards his co-accused corroborative evidence is of course necessary. Thus even if there was no corroborative evidence we would feel ourselves justified in upholding the conviction of the accused Bachchu on the basis of his confession alone. His appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed.

(1) [1897] 20 All. 183 = (1897) A.W.N. 224.

(3) A. I. R. 1925 All. 627 = 89 I.C. 908 = 28 Cr. L. J. 1481 (F.B.).

2. Wajid—The evidence on record shows that this man is on inimical terms with Abdul. There has been criminal litigation between him and Abdul and Abdul had given evidence against him in the badmashi case recently. It appears that when ill-feeling between Bachchu and his father became more acute, he (Wajid) and Bachchu became friends of each other and made a common cause against their common enemy. Bachchu's confession though retracted is admissible in evidence against this man. There is sufficient circumstantial evidence in corroboration of the confession. This man was seen with the other accused sitting at the nala at about noon by Asad Ali P. W. 7. Rahmat, P. W. 4 had seen the girl Hadisul with this accused and others under a babul tree at the nala in the evening. This man had the mark of an injury on his left knee which had healed up on 11th February when he was examined in jail. The medical evidence shows that the injury could be due to friction against a kankar soil, and was about a fortnight old at the time he was examined by the Civil Surgeon on 11th February 1930. It appears that he had incurred the injury while committing murder on the kankar soil. The accused has not suggested any enmity with Asid Ali or Rahmat. There is no reason why they should have given false evidence against this man. We think the learned Sessions Judge was perfectly right in holding that Bachchu's confession implicating this man is true and that he was concerned in the crime. His appeal also fails and must be dismissed.

3. Bachchu. — Bachchu's confession

shows that this man was also concerned in the crime. He produced the ornaments of Hadisul by digging them out from his own gramfield. The evidence given by Asad Ali, P. W. 7 and Rahmat, P. W. 4 shows that this man also was seen with the other accused at the nala at noon and that the girl was with them in the evening. This man had also an injury on the knee as old as the time of the occurrence. He says that he has been falsely implicated by Bachchu as he had refused to give evidence for him, but he admits at the same time that he has no enmity with Bachchu. As pointed out in the case of Sheoratan v. Emperor (5) retracted confession alone of an accused is not sufficient to justify a conviction of a co-accused, but where such confession stands unrebutted and there is nothing to show that the accused had any reasons for naming other men falsely, and his story fits in exactly with the facts known and is corroborated sufficiently by material evidence against the co-accused, the evidence is admissible and is strong piece of evidence against the co-accused. We find in this case that there is sufficient circumstantial evidence in corroboration of Bachchu's confession. We think the learned Sessions Judge was perfectly right in finding that this man also was concerned in the crime. His appeal also must be dismissed.

The appellants have been rightly sentenced to death. As observed by the learned Judge the offence is so heinous, inhuman and cold-blooded that the accused amply deserve the extreme penalty of the law. The result is that we dismiss these appeals, uphold the convictions, confirm the sentences and direct that Bachchu, Wajid and Bachchu each be hanged by the neck till he be dead.

PULLAN, J.

Ganga Prasad—Accused—Applicant.

v.

Emperor — Complainant — Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 25 of 1930, Decided on 19th May 1930.

Penal Code, S. 182 — False report of dacoity by A — Police did proceed on A's complaint but prosecuted some persons under S. 326 who were acquitted — Prosecution and conviction of A under S. 182 — Conviction held to be legal — Police held to be only person who could take action and not the Court.

A made a false report of dacoity. The police did not proceed on his complaint but prosecuted certain persons under S. 324. This offence also was not brought home to them and the police made a complaint against A requesting his prosecution under S. 182 for making a false report of dacoity. A was convicted.

Held: that the conviction was legal. The complaint was properly made under S. 182. The only persons who could take action in the case were the police and not the Court which not having tried any case of dacoity was not in a position of being able to say a false complaint had been made of dacoity before it: A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 254, Dist. [P 955 C 1, 2]

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference made by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Unao requesting this Court to set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon one Ganga Prasad under S. 182, I. P. C.

It appears that this man made a false report of a dacoity at a police station. The police did not proceed on his complaint of dacoity but prosecuted certain persons under S. 324, I. P. C. That offence also was not brought home to them and the police made a complaint requesting the prosecution of this man Ganga Prasad under S. 182, I. P. C., for making a false report of dacoity. He was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge has found difficulties where none exist. He thinks that because the matter came into Court and the Court passed an order of acquittal, no proceedings could be instituted by the police, but that a complaint should have been made by the Magistrate who passed the order of acquittal. He bases his view upon a judgment of the Rangoon High Court recently, in Rambrose v. Emperor (1) reported but he failed to observe that in the present case no case of dacoity was tried by the Magistrate. Indeed no action was taken on that charge. Consequently the Court was not in the position of being able to say that a false complaint had been made of dacoity before the Court. The only persons who could take action were the police in respect of the false report of dacoity. The complaint was properly made of an offence under S. 182. The conviction is legal and there is no reason to interfere with the sentence.

Let the record be returned.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 51 of 1930, Decided on 21st May 1930, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Gonda, D/- 22nd April 1930.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 437—Dictum that further inquiry after discharge is improper unless order of discharge is perverse does not apply to Magistrate acting as Court of inquiry.

The dictum that "further inquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish" does not apply to a case in which the Magistrate is acting as a Court of enquiry and not a trial Court: 10 P. R. 1911 Cr. (F.B.), Expl.

[P 956 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 437—Order of discharge by Committing Magistrate set aside by District Magistrate and case exclusively triable by Court of Sessions committed to Sessions — High Court will not interfere unless order of District Magistrate is unjustifiable.

There is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which suggests that the District Magistrate should go further in case where the accused is charged by the trial Court than find that the order of discharge was improper.

But, where a District Magistrate sets aside the order of discharge passed by a Committing Magistrate and orders a case to be committed to Sessions which is exclusively triable by a Court of Sessions, the High Court will not interfere in revision unless the District Magistrate's order is, in the circumstances of the case, shown to be unjustifiable: 19 O. Haider Husain—for Appellant.

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision of an order passed by the learned District Magistrate of Gonda under S. 437, Criminal P. C., directing the commitment to Sessions of one Aulad Husain for an offence under S. 376, I. P. C.

The applicant was put before a Magistrate of the First Class who wrote a lengthy order of discharge. The District Magistrate considered the reasons for discharge given by that Magistrate were insufficient. In his opinion there was sufficient evidence for the case to go to Sessions.

I have been asked to consider that the District Magistrate should not have taken action in this case unless he was satisfied that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was perverse or foolish, and I have been referred to a judgment of a Full Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab reported in Emperor v. Kiri (1) which was followed by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in the case of Emperor v. Jagadamba Singh (2). There is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which suggests that the District Magistrate should go further in a case of this nature than find that the order of discharge was improper, but it is clearly within the powers of this Court to consider whether the District Magistrate himself has or has not acted properly in the discharge of his own duties in committing the case to the Sessions. The authorities to which I have referred do not lay down any definite rule for guidance in such matters. The Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court, after saying that generally speaking further enquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish or based upon an incomplete record of evidence, go on to observe:

"We cannot say more by way of general guidance as so much depends on the particular circumstances under which an order of discharge has been given, but if Magistrates use the discretion vested in them by law they are expected to do so with common sense and with due regard to the general consideration that an accused should not be unduly harassed by further proceedings undertaken without good cause."

It cannot be said in the present case that the District Magistrate has acted contrary to common sense or that he has unnecessarily harassed the accused and I am not prepared to accept the dictum of the Chief Court of the Punjab that as applying to a case in which the Magistrate was acting only as a Court of enquiry and not a trial Court. The cases to which I have been referred are cases in which the Magistrate had power to try the case finally and two of those cases were cases taken under the preventive sections of the Criminal Procedure Code. I have been referred to one case only in which the case was exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, and in that case the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh refused to interfere with the order of the Sessions Judge setting aside the Magistrate's order of discharge and ordering commitment to Sessions: Harkaran Singh v. Harnam Singh (3). In my opinion, where a District Magistrate sets aside the order of discharge passed by a Committing Magistrate and orders a case to be committed to Sessions which is exclusively triable by a Court of Session, this Court will not interfere in revision unless the District Magistrate's order is in the circumstances of the case shown to be unjustifiable.

In the present case it has been found that a young girl has been raped. She has named the accused as her assailant. The District Magistrate has in his order pointed out the nature of the defence, but he is still of opinion that the case is one in which there is sufficient evidence to justify a commitment to Sessions. I consider that the District Magistrate was acting justifiably and within his powers in making the commitment. All that I can do is to direct that the case having been committed shall be tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Gonda in person and not made over to a less experienced Judge. Subject to this direction I dismiss the application.

MEARS, C. J.

Ram Dulare Lal—Plaintiff.

v.

Chhanganamal and others—Defendants.

Appln. in Civil Suit No. 17 of 1929,

Decided on 19th April 1929, pending in Court of Sub-Judge, Farrukhabad.

Legal Practitioner—Lawyer in his profession has to do his duty—He cannot refuse to accept party's case though other party is lawyer if all conditions are fulfilled and no honest excuse exists: see A. I. R. 1929 All. 367.

The lawyers in their profession have got to do their duty and they cannot refuse to take up a party's case even if the other party is also a lawyer, when all the conditions are fulfilled, viz. the tender of a proper fee, the willingness to give complete instructions and the case of the character that the pleader is accustomed to take, and when no allowable, reasonable and honest excuse exists.

Nizam Uddin Ahmed Siddiqui—for Defendants.

Judgment.—This is another application in which professional misconduct is alleged generally against a local counsel at Farrukhabad, that is to say, the defendant having had a suit brought against him by a plaintiff, who is a legal practitioner, says that he could not secure the services of local counsel even for writing a petition for adjournment and had got it drawn up by a petitioner-writer and they have all refused to accept his case on one ground or the other. Apparently the valuation of the case is considerable, being Rs. 29,705-5-0. Changamal must adopt the same procedure as I have indicated before, that is to say, he should write a letter to a local vakil expressing his readiness to pay him a fee, appropriate and proper for the case. He should at the same time offer to furnish him with all the instructions necessary to defend the case and he should keep a copy of that letter. If the vakil is not willing to accept the case and makes excuses of a dubious character a copy of the letter sent by Changamal to the lawyer and the letter of the lawyer should be sent to me and I will deal with the matter.

Again, there has been made the surprising suggestion in this Court that the result of requiring lawyers to do their public duty may be that a lawyer may accept the case and will deliberately refrain from putting up a good fight. Whether a lawyer puts up a good fight or not is a matter that can be ascertained from the record, when the case is completed. It can then be seen, if he asked proper questions and if he examined his witnesses with care and cross-examined the witness of the opposite party on material matters with discretion. If on enquiry it comes to light that a lawyer deliberately refrained from doing his duty, one step alone must be taken and that is to remove him from profession, which he has so manifestly disgraced by his conduct. In Farrukhabad, as elsewhere, lawyers have got to learn that in this profession they have got to do their duty, and if Changamal can bring to my notice a clear case of a pleader refusing to take his brief, when all the conditions are fulfilled, namely, the tender of a proper fee, the willingness to give complete instructions and the case of the character that the pleader is accustomed to take and no allowable, reasonable and honest excuse is put forward I will see that justice is done in the matter.

A copy of this order is to be sent to Changamal and to the Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad and let all proceedings in the case be stayed until one hears with what success Changamal has met.

MISRA, J.

Saktay Sah and others—Appellants.

v.

Mahadin and others—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 321 of 1928, Decided on 13th February 1929, against decree of Sub-Judge, Hardoi, D/- 6th August 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 345—Determination of whether or not offence is compoundable depends on offence directly charged in complaint.

In order to determine whether a case can be considered to be compoundable or not the Court has to look to the offence with the commission of which the accused is charged in the complaint, or in any case with which the Court charges him; and, therefore, it cannot be pleaded that though the offence with which the accused is charged is an offence under S. 325, Penal Code, yet the facts in the complaint are such that the accused might well have been charged with an offence under S. 147, Penal Code, which is an offence which could not be compounded, and that, therefore, the settlement between the prosecutor and the accused cannot be arrived at: 20 C. W. N. 946, Rel. on. [P 959 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 345—It is lawful to compound offence allowed by law—Such composition does not stifle prosecution and is not illegal within Contract Act, S. 23.

Where an offence with which a particular person is charged is compoundable, he is at liberty to come to a settlement with the prosecutor and the settlement so arrived at cannot be considered to be one, the consideration of which might be considered to be illegal. Where the offence charged is non-compoundable the settlement must be deemed to be invalid, but where the offence charged is compoundable the settlement cannot be deemed to be invalid, because the legislature itself allows a settlement of such case and it cannot, therefore, be said that the object of such an agreement is opposed to public policy: 8 A. L. J. 498, Foll.; 3 C. W. N. 5; A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 305, Rel. on. and 17 O. C. 213, Ref. [P 959 C 2, P 960 C 1]

(c) Contract Act, S. 23—Court will not assist enforcement of illegal contracts—If parties to contract are in pari delicto Court will not help any one of them.

A Court of law will not assist persons in enforcing the performance of an illegal contract, or assist them to recover back the property which they have given away under such an illegal contract. When the parties to a contract are themselves in pari delicto the Court will not help any one of them. The person in whose favour the agreement has been executed will not be allowed to enforce it, nor will the person, who has paid the money in pursuance of that agreement, be allowed to recover the sum paid thereunder. There can be no distinction in principle between the granting of a relief by way of declaration and the restoring of property given away under an illegal contract: 1 Pat. L. J. 48, Rel. on. [P 960 C 2]

Hyder Husain and Ghulam Husain—for Appellants.

M. Wasim—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The present appeal arises out of a suit for cancellation of two deeds and for recovery of Rs. 366 cash, brought by the plaintiffs appellants against the defendants-respondents, which has been dismissed by both the Courts below.

The facts of the case are that there were certain criminal proceedings taken by the defendants-respondents, who are father and son against the plaintiffs-appellants. The respondents had lodged a complaint under S. 325, I. P. C., against the appellants and two others. The counter-complaint under S. 323, I. P. C., was also brought by the appellants against the respondents. A mutual settlement was, however, subsequently arrived at between the parties to this case, under which the appellants agreed to execute two deeds in favour of the respondents, under one of which they agreed to sell a plot of land to the respondents and under the other to remove a latrine from the vicinity of the respondents' house. They also agreed to pay to the respondents a sum of Rs. 366 in cash. In consequence of this settlement applications were filed by both the parties in the criminal Court to get their respective cases dismissed and consigned to records. The appellants' case under S. 323, I. P. C., was dismissed without any difficulty, but there was at first some hesitation on the part of the criminal Court to give permission to the respondents to compound the case, which they have brought against the appellants. The Courts, however, subsequently agreed to give the parties permission to compound the case and the complaint was after such permission allowed to be ultimately withdrawn, and the plaintiffs-appellants discharged of the offence. After they had been so discharged the two deeds of agreement executed by them were handed over to the respondents and the sum of Rs. 366 mentioned above was also paid. It may be mentioned that the two deeds and the money had remained in the custody of one of the pleaders of Bilgram named Babu Baldeo Prasad and had been handed over to the respondents only when the Court had granted permission and the compromise was effected as a result of which they were discharged from the criminal Court. The appellants seem to have backed out of the agreement since they refused to get the two deeds registered and the respondents had to apply against them for compulsory registration of the said two deeds, which were registered only under the orders of the District Registrar. After this was done the appellants brought the present suit for cancellation of the two deeds mentioned above and for recovery of the sum of Rs. 366, which had been paid by them to the respondents.

The main allegations on which the appellants brought their present suit were to the effect that they had been compelled to execute the two deeds and to pay the amount in cash under fraud and undue influence, that no consideration had passed to the appellants in respect of the two deeds of agreement and that they were also void on the ground that they were executed with the object of stifling the criminal prosecution and were, therefore, void in law. The defendants-respondents contested the suit on the ground that the two deeds had been executed by the appellants out of their own free will and the money had also been paid by them willingly in order to save themselves from the consequences of the criminal proceedings which had been instituted by them against the plaintiff, that the said deeds were executed for consideration and were quite binding on the plaintiffs and that they were estopped from maintaining the present suit.

The learned Munsif of Bilgram who tried the suit came to the finding that the two deeds had been executed and the money paid by the plaintiffs-appellants without any fraud or undue influence having been exercised upon them and that they had done so out of their free will and pleasure. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Hardoi has confirmed those findings and dismissed the appeal. In second appeal it is contended before me that the two agreements and the payment in cash were transactions void in law, they being in pursuance of an agreement, the object of which was to stifle the criminal prosecution and the plaintiffs-appellants were entitled in law to obtain the declaration which they had sought for in the present suit.

In my opinion there is no force in either of these two contentions and I proceed to give my reasons for the same.

As to the contention that the transaction was void being for an illegal consideration, the argument advanced was to the effect that though the offence with which the appellants were charged was an offence under S. 325, I. P. C., yet the facts in the complaint were such that the accused might well have been charged with an offence under S. 147 of the said Code also, which was an offence, which could not be compounded, and that, therefore, the settlement arrived at being for an illegal consideration was void under S. 23, Contract Act 9 of 1872. I regret I cannot accept this contention. In order to determine whether the case could be considered to be compoundable or not we have to look to the offence with the commission of which the appellants were charged in the complaint or in any case with which the Court charged them. In this case it is admitted that the respondents charged the appellants only with an offence under S. 325, I. P. C., and not with an offence under S. 147 of the Code. The Magistrate also did not charge them with an offence under S. 147, I. P. C. In such a case I am of opinion that it should not be held that the offence with which the appellants had been charged was one which could not be compounded even with the permission of the Court. I am supported in this view by a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Mahomed Ismail v. Samad Ali (1). The facts of that case were that the Magistrate had, after examining the complainant, summoned the accused under S. 325, I. P. C., although the allegations were made in the petition of the complaint as to an offence under S. 147 of the said Code also. An agreement was in that case entered into between the parties, and with the leave of the Court the case was compromised. It was held that it being a case under S. 325, I. P. C., it was compoundable with the leave of the Court, and the Magistrate having given permission to compound the case, the agreement as to the settlement was not opposed to public policy. Similarly in the case before me it may have been possible for the respondents to charge the appellants with an offence under S. 147, I. P. C., and also for the Magistrate to charge them with that offence, yet the appellants cannot be considered as having been charged with that offence, when the Magistrate issued summons only on S. 325, I. P. C., and gave them permission to compound for that offence. I am therefore of opinion that the object of the settlement was not to stifle the prosecution.

It has been held in a large number of cases that where an offence with which a particular person is charged is compoundable he is at liberty to come to a settlement with the prosecutor, and the settlement so arrived at cannot be considered to be one, the consideration of which might be considered to be illegal.

(1) [1916] 20 C. W. N. 946=32 I. C. 237.

In Amir Khan v. Amir Jan (2) it was held that where the defendant agreed to execute a kabala (lease) of certain lands in favour of the plaintiffs in consideration of the latter's abstaining from taking criminal proceedings against the former with respect to an offence which is compoundable, the contract could not be regarded as forbidden by law or as against public policy, and the same could be enforced.

The same view was held in Chetan Das v. Hari Ram (3). It was held in that case that the compounding of an offence which the law permits to be compounded is not opposed to public policy within the meaning of S. 23, Contract Act, 1872, and where such a compromise is entered into the consideration of the agreement could not be considered as illegal, and it was not void. The Bombay High Court has also taken the same view recently in Ahmad Hasan v. Hasan Md. (4). In Lachman Das v. Narain (5) it was pointed out that an agreement to stifle a prosecution in respect of an offence of a public nature was against public policy and illegal, and where the consideration for a compromise was to withdraw a criminal prosecution for a non-compoundable offence the compromise could not be enforced.

It therefore appears to me to be a settled rule of law that where the offence charged is non-compoundable the settlement must be deemed to be invalid, but where the offence charged is compoundable the settlement cannot be deemed to be invalid, because the legislature itself allows a settlement of such case and it cannot, therefore, be said that the object of such an agreement is opposed to public policy. I therefore hold that the settlement arrived at in this case was valid and the cash paid, and the agreements executed by the appellants in pursuance of such settlement cannot be treated in law to be void.

Apart from this it appears to me to be equally clear that even if the agreement had been held to be void the appellants themselves could not be allowed to take advantage of their own action and to seek the assistance of the Court in obtaining a declaration which they desire to obtain in this case. The settled rule of law with regard to illegal contracts is that a Court of law will not assist persons in enforcing the performance of an illegal contract or assist them to recover back the property which they have given away under such an illegal contract. The principle is that when the parties to a contract are themselves in pari delicto the Courts will not help any one of them. The person in whose favour the agreement has been executed will not be allowed to enforce it, nor will the person who has paid the money in pursuance of that agreement be allowed to recover the sum paid thereunder. I am also of opinion that there can be no distinction in principle between the granting of a relief by way of declaration and the restoring of property given away under an illegal contract. I am supported in this view by a decision of the Patna High Court reported in Bindeshwari Prasad v. Lekh Raj Sahu (6). Chapman, J., observed in that case as follows:

"Where an illegal portion of an agreement has been carried into effect the whole matter is outlawed and the Court will not aid either party to retrieve his position if he is not able to show that he has been less to blame than the other. The Courts will not assist an illegal transaction: Taylor v. Chester (7). It is a scandal to assist a plaintiff to recover upon the ground that he has joined in breaking the law, but this will not prevent the Court from intervening to frustrate the illegal purpose before it has been effected, or, in any event, from giving relief to the innocent. In particular the Court will not in any case allow a defendant to retain the proceeds of fraud or oppression and the Court cannot refuse protection to those classes of persons whom the law seeks to protect. But in a case in which no such considerations arise, if the illegal purpose has already been executed in whole or in material part, the law leaves both parties to their fate: Kearly v. Thomson (8). In the present case the illegal portion of the agreement was the undertaking to withdraw from the prosecution certain charges which the law says shall not be compounded. This illegal promise had been carried into effect beyond possibility of recall. One side now seeks a relief from the act done in consideration for the illegal promise. All that they can say in excuse of their breach of the law is that they were persons accused in those criminal cases. But executio juris non habet injuriam, and in the absence of any evidence to suggest that the criminal proceedings were improper it cannot be held that there was any fraud or oppression or that the accused took a more innocent part in the illegal compromise than the complainant. The authorities make it clear that a suit for the recovery of property transferred in consideration for such an illegal promise would not have lain. There is no direct authority that the principle would also defeat a suit which is not for the recovery of property, but merely for a declaration that a sale deed executed in consideration for the illegal promise is void; and in America it has been apparently held that a declaratory suit would not be defeated (Keenener on Quasi Contracts, p. 441). But if it is the scandal involved that defeats suits of this class, then the principle is clearly applicable to a suit for a declaratory decree. For so far as the scandal is concerned there is no difference between a suit for the recovery of property and a suit for a declaration."

I am in full agreement with the observations quoted above. The same view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Amjadunnissa Bibi v. Rahim Buksh (9) and by the Allahabad High Court in Filayat Hussain v. Misran (10). I am therefore of opinion that the appellants cannot be allowed the relief claimed for by them in the present suit and that it has been rightly dismissed by the Courts below. I therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Beasley, C. J.—This case comes before us on a reference made by our learned brother Jackson, J. The facts of the case are that a complaint was made against eight persons on a charge of dacoity and came before the Second Class Sub-Magistrate of Tirupattur. The Sub-Magistrate thought that there was no basis for that charge, but as of the eight persons accused before him one was alleged to have been armed with a stick and a deadly weapon, he thought that the charge was one under S. 148, I. P. C., namely rioting armed with deadly weapons, and accordingly sent the case on under S. 346 (1), Criminal P. C. to the Joint First Class Magistrate for disposal. The Joint First Class Magistrate, after going into the case, differed from the view taken by the Second Class Sub-Magistrate and thought that the evidence disclosed that the accused might be guilty of some lesser offence. In dealing with the matter he pointed out that accused 5 who was the only accused stated to have been there armed with deadly weapons and having taken part in the riot was merely a spectator and took no part whatever in the rioting, and dismissed the complaint against him. He referred the case back under S. 346 (2), Criminal P. C. to the Second Class Magistrate on 30th May 1929. The complainant in the case feeling aggrieved at this order preferred a revision petition to the District Magistrate and he dismissed it as he came to the conclusion that the case had been properly dealt with by the Joint Magistrate. Against this order the complainant presented a revision petition to the High Court. Jackson, J., before whom it came, while strongly holding the view that the Joint First Class Magistrate was acting within his jurisdiction when he referred the case back to the Second Class Sub-Magistrate, felt himself very much embarrassed by a decision in In re, Kothur Hampanna (1). This decision he took to be one holding that the question of jurisdiction is irrevocably fixed by the lower Court when it submits the case under S. 346 (1) to the superior Magistrate. S. 346 (2) reads as follows:

"The Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may, if so empowered, either try the case himself, or refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction, or commit the accused for trial."

If our learned brother Jackson, J., is right in his interpretation of the judgment, in In re. Kothur Hampanna (1) then we are clearly of the view that that case was wrongly decided. But, first of all, we have got to see whether the interpretation placed upon that judgment by our learned brother is correct or not. He has taken the last paragraph of that judgment on p. 848 to mean that the Magistrate therein referred to is the Magistrate who makes the submission under S. 346 (1) and not the Magistrate who refers the case under S. 346 (2). In that view of the judgment, that case does decide that it is the charge which the Magistrate who submits the case under S. 346 (1) thinks is the right one that the Magistrate to whom he submits the case has to deal with and that charge alone. He has got to try it and dispose of it himself or commit the accused for trial. If that is the correct understanding of that judgment then, as before stated, we are clearly of the opinion that that judgment is wrong. Sub-S. (2), S. 346, is perfectly clear, definite and wide and the Magistrate to whom the case is submitted has got to do three things. He has either got to try the case himself, or after having heard it to a certain point, refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him who has got jurisdiction to try the case or to commit the accused for trial. We think that that is really what was meant in In re, Kothur Hampanna (1), and that the Magistrate therein referred to is the Magistrate making a reference under S. 346 (2). Although the section alone is referred to and no subsections are referred to, we think, having regard to the facts of the case and the observations made at p. 847, that the Magistrate to whom the case has been submitted was intended to be referred to. At p. 847 it is stated as follows:

"It may be urged that the Sub-Magistrate who sent up the case was subordinate to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and that his order was in effect a reference to him. If so the reference should have been made explicitly and with some distinct indication of what action the Sub-Magistrate was to take, not with an obscure injunction which could afford no real guidance."

What happened in that case was that the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate to whom the case had been submitted by the Sub-Magistrate made an order as follows:

"The Sub-Divisional Magistrate declines to transfer the case to the file of another Sub-Magistrate," and then later on:

"As regards the section under which the offence, if proved, is likely to fall, the Sub-Magistrate is requested to study the commentary carefully under S. 379, I. P. C."

In the opinion of the Bench that was not the proper way to deal with the case submitted to him. Reference was made in that case to two unreported cases, Queen-Empress v. Fakira (2) and Queen-Empress v. Purushotam (3), as authority for the position that a superior Magistrate cannot simply return a case to the subordinate Magistrate from whom it comes but must refer it to some other Magistrate or dispose of it himself. But these cases on examination do not seem to go to that length. If they do we are clearly of the opinion that those cases were wrongly decided, because the terms of sub-S. (2), S. 346, are quite clear and sufficiently wide to embrace a reference back of the case to the Magistrate who originally submitted it. In our view therefore there is no warrant for saying that the Magistrate who acted under S. 346 (2) had no jurisdiction in this case so to act. The question argued before our learned brother Jackson, J., was merely a question of jurisdiction. No argument was addressed to him upon the merits. We have heard a brief argument upon the merits of the case, and in view of the order of the Magistrate in which he states that the evidence points to the fact that accused 5, who is the only person alleged to have been present armed with deadly weapons was merely a spectator, we think that the view he took with regard to the offence possibly committed by the accused persons was correct. As soon as accused 5 was eliminated from the charge obviously no charge against the other accused persons of rioting armed with deadly weapons could possibly lie.

Curgenven, J.—This criminal revision case comes before this Full Bench in the following circumstances. Under sub-S. (1), S. 164, Madras Local Boards Act, the Taluk Board of Tadepalligudam imposed a penalty of Rs. 50 upon the petitioner in respect of an alleged encroachment in the village of Tadepalligudam. He is said to have erected a shed without permission upon ground belonging to the Taluk Board. The petitioner did not pay the penalty and accordingly the matter was referred to the Magistrate's Court under S. 221 which provides that, in default of payment of such a sum, it may be levied under the warrant of a Magistrate. At the hearing of the case the point arose whether the Magistrate was competent to go into the question whether the alleged encroachment was true and therefore justified the imposition of the penalty and following certain decisions the Court came to the conclusion that it was not open to it to enquire into an issue of this character and accordingly although it recorded the evidence, it refused to give an opinion upon the matter and directed that a warrant should issue for recovery of Rs. 50 together with Rs. 10 as costs. The petitioner thereupon presented this criminal revision case, which came in the first instance before Jackson, J. That learned Judge found that there were conflicting decisions with regard to the question at issue, and, deeming it to be an important point which frequently arises, directed that the matter should be placed before the Chief Justice for orders.

The case law upon this subject has been laid before us and opens with the case of Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi (1) decided by Wallace and Devadoss, JJ. They were of the opinion that, if a contention of this kind were allowed to prevail, the Magistrate would be constituted as a sort of appellate authority over the Local Board in the matter of deciding whether or not there had been in fact an encroachment; and they pointed out what inconvenience would arise from such a situation. Nor did they think that the language of S. 221 would justify such a construction. This case was followed by Devadoss, J., sitting alone, in Rangesa Rao v. Swaminatha Ayyar (2) and again by myself in Narayana Ayyar v. Subramania Chetty, A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 1113. So far as my recollection of that cases goes, no cases contra were cited before me and, sitting singly, I was of course bound to follow the ruling of a Bench. In the (1926) Madras Weekly Notes volume will be found two succeeding cases, Union Board, Paramakudi v. Chellasami Tevar (3) and Syid Mustapha Saheb v. Union Board of Kaveripatnam (4) decided by Devadoss and Waller, JJ. In the judgments delivered by Waller, J. he was of opinion that under the parallel procedure by which a prosecution is instituted for breach of the law regarding encroachments and which is provided for in S. 164 (2) and 207 of the Act, it was open to an accused person to raise this question of whether the alleged encroachment was indeed an encroachment or not. But he was of opinion also that anomalous though it might be when the case came before the Court under S. 221 the decision in Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi (1), was right and should be followed.

The first Bench which seems to have taken a contrary view was in Emperor v. Gopayya (5), where Phillips and Madhavan Nair, JJ. had to deal with circumstances which gave rise to proceedings under S. 221, the petitioner in that case having erected a pandal without the permission of the Union Board. The decision proceeded substantially upon other grounds but both the learned Judges, while acknowledging that this point did not really have to be decided, expressed their inability to follow Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi (1). Phillips, J. observes with reference to the alleged inconvenience mentioned by Wallace and Devadoss JJ. in that decision :

"The anomaly pointed out by Wallace, J. is that such a view would amount to the Magistrate being set up as a final Judge over the Local Board. When, however, it is remembered that the Board has applied to the Magistrate for the recovery of the dues, it is not open to the Magistrate to decide summarily and recover the amount without enquiry; and he must be satisfied before he issues the order that such order is correct. If the offender had been prosecuted under S. 219 he would be able to plead that no offence had been committed by him and therefore on the facts of this case it is difficult to hold that he must be precluded from such a defence because a different form of procedure has been taken against him."

That in other words, of course, is the anomaly detected by Waller J. in Syid Mustafa Saheb v. Union Board, Kaveripattam (4). A similar case came before Waller and Pandalai, JJ. in In re, Rahim Sahib, (6) and there, after referring to all the previous decisions, the conclusion was come to that Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi (1) had been wrongly decided and the view was expressed that a Magistrate should go into the question of the merits of the Board's action before enforcing the payment of the penalty. The same point has been decided in the same sense by Waller and Anantakrishna Ayyar, JJ., in Criminal Revision Case No. 1089 of 1928. As I have already said it has not been disputed before us that, where a prosecution has been instituted for failure to comply with the terms of a notice, it is competent to the Court in disposing of the case under S. 207 to undertake an enquiry of this character. This has been recently decided by a Bench composed of the learned Chief Justice and Cornish, JJ., in a case so far unreported: Criminal Revision Case No. 247 of 1929.

It appears then that the recent trend of authority has been distinctly in the direction of holding that the nature of an alleged encroachment may be investigated. Mr. Mani, however, for the Crown has asked us to hold on the language of the Act itself that this view of the matter is incorrect. Under S. 164 (1) the land which is occupied must be vested in or belong to a Local Board. It is only then that the occupant shall be bound to pay such sum as may be demanded of him by the local authority by way of penalty and, "such sum," the section goes on, "may be recovered in the manner hereinafter provided." This seems clearly to mean that the recovery of the sum must be contingent upon satisfaction of the conditions which the section lays down, namely that the land must be vested in or belong to a Local Board and accordingly it would be illegal for the Board to levy a penalty in respect of a so-called encroachment upon any land which does not satisfy that condition. Whether or not, however, it is open to the Court which has to enforce this order under S. 221 to enquire into whether the land was so vested or not must of course depend upon the terms of that section. It may be conceded that they are not very clear. The last sentence of sub-S. (1) provides that :

"the amount of apportionment of any such sum shall in case of dispute be ascertained by such Magistrate."

It is possible to give a narrow and also a broad meaning to that direction. But we think that it would be very reasonable to give it the construction which has been adopted by the learned Judges who decided Emperor v. Gopayya (5), namely that where the Court has power to decide upon the amount or the apportionment of the sum :

(5) A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 682=110 I. C. 223=29 Cr. L. J. 681=51 Mad. 866.

(6) A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 600=1929 Cr. C. 56=118 I. C. 278=30 Cr. L. J. 911=52 Mad. 714.

"It is difficult to understand why it should not be open to it to decide that the amount is nil."

It seems undesirable to go into the relative advantages and disadvantages of the two constructions. In the one case it has been suggested that the Magistrate would be converted into a civil Court if he had to go into the difficult questions of title upon which many of those encroachment cases are founded. On the other hand there is the disadvantage that under S. 164 a Local Board may, perhaps without due enquiry, impose and demand a penalty in respect of an alleged encroachment and that, if the power of the Magistrate to enquire into the truth of the prosecution allegations is withheld, the party has no remedy except that of a slow and troublesome civil suit. The clear preponderance of opinion is in favour of the view that the Magistrate has such a power and we are of the opinion that it is the correct view. In these circumstances, we set aside the order of the trial Court and remand the case for a finding on the evidence whether the alleged encroachment is true, and for disposal, accordingly. Meanwhile the fine and costs paid, if any, will be refunded.

Order.—The Additional Sessions Judge of Lahore has referred three cases Cr. Rev. 618-29, Cr. Rev. 619-29, Cr. Rev. 900-29, of orders passed under 1930 Cr. C. 121 b/4

S. 133, Criminal P. C., by a First Class Magistrate to this Court in order that the orders should be quashed.

What happened was that the Municipal Committee gave sanction to three persons to construct tharas in front of their doors on the Lytton Road. These tharas were constructed on land between the houses and a drain running alongside the road but at some distance from the houses. Permission was given in the case of two persons in the year 1911 and in the case of the third in the year 1921. The Public Works Department of Government are the complainants. It has been held established that the whole road right upto the houses and beyond the drain belongs to Government. Apparently up to 1924 or 1925 the road was shown in possession of the Municipal Committee though undoubtedly the true owners are Government. It is obvious, however, that the Municipality bona fide thought that it could give permission to build on the land as it seems to have considered that the land belonged to itself.

In a case reported in A. I. R. 1926 All. 157 (1) an order similar to the present orders was set aside. It was pointed out that the alleged obstruction was at least 15 or 16 years old, and it was held that S. 133, Criminal P. C., was not intended to be employed to avoid the necessity of filing a civil suit in regard to a construction which had been in existence for some 15 years. My view is the same as that taken by Daniels, J. S. 133, Criminal P. C., is not intended for long standing obstructions but for an unlawful obstruction lately built in a public place.

I therefore accept all three petitions, and set aside the three orders of the Magistrate First Class ordering the tharas to be demolished.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 63 of 1930, Decided on 11th July 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 22nd March 1930.

Criminal Trial—Court's duty—Mere fact that accused is young does not justify not passing of death sentence—Persons understanding nature of act are liable to extreme penalty of law—Penal Code, S. 302.

There is no law which justifies a Court in not passing a sentence of death on any person merely because he is young. All persons who can understand the nature of their act are liable to the extreme penalty of law. Youth may be a circumstance to be taken into consideration when the accused person is not fully able to understand the nature of his act or has been influenced by older persons. The consideration that the accused may reform should be excluded in all questions where a capital sentence can be inflicted. It is not for legislature to reform murderers. [P 966 O 1, 2]

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

M. H. Kidwai—for Accused.

Judgment.—This is an application filed on behalf of the Local Government for revision of the sentence of transportation for life passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad on one Bhagwandin Lonia. The accused was found guilty of the offence of murdering a small boy of six for his ornaments. We have heard counsel on behalf of the accused as to whether the conviction is or is not justified. In our opinion the case was clearly proved. Not only was there ample evidence that the accused committed the crime, but there is on the record a long and detailed confession made by him to the Magistrate after he had been given ample time for reflection. We are satisfied that the conviction was a proper conviction. In such cases it is the duty of the Judge to give reasons for not inflicting the death penalty under S. 367, Cl. 5, Criminal P. C. In the present case the Judge has given the following reasons: (1) That the accused is a young lad of about 18. (2) That he may still reform. (3) That the murder was committed without premeditation.

As to the third finding we do not consider that it is justified by the evidence. The accused decoyed this little boy into a sugarcane field, gave him sugarcane to eat, removed his ornaments and when he cried and said that he would tell his parents, he strangled him. This does not in our opinion bespeak an unpremeditated crime. As to the age of the accused he is said to have been either 18 or 19 years of age. He is an adult and has reached years of discretion. There is no law which justifies a Court in not passing a sentence of death on any person merely because he is young. All persons who can understand the nature of their act are liable to the extreme penalty of the law. Youth may be a circumstance to be taken into consideration in offences where the accused person is not fully able to understand the nature of his act, or has been influenced by older persons. But this is a case in which a youth has deliberately murdered a small boy for motives of greed and there is no suggestion that he was prompted to the crime, by any motive except his own base nature. There remains the second consideration, and this is one which should be excluded entirely in all questions where a capital sentence can be inflicted. It is not for the legislature to reform murderers. The sentence of transportation for life is imposed in cases where there are in the opinion of the Court some extenuating circumstances, and it is not necessary in the interests of the public at large that the sentence of death, which is primarily a deterrent sentence, should be inflicted. There is no question of the reform of criminals who are sentenced to transportation for life. In our opinion this was a brutal murder. We do not consider that the accused was so young that he did not understand the full nature of the act. He rendered himself liable to the full penalty prescribed by the law and we can find no extenuating circumstances. We, therefore, allow this application and impose the sentence of death on Bhagwandin Lonia. The order of the Court is that he be hanged by the neck till he be dead.

R.M./R.K.

Order accordingly.

DALIP SINGH, J.

Sita Ram—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Ram Lal and another—Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 189 of 1929, Decided on 3rd April 1929.

Legal Practitioner—Counsel intending to appear as witness should not conduct case.

It is improper for a counsel who is intending to appear as a witness for a party to conduct the case on his behalf. [P 967 O 1]

Ram Lal Anand—for Appellant.

Shamair Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The only point that arises for decision in this appeal is whether certain evidence should be allowed to be led on behalf of the plaintiff whose case has been dismissed in both the Courts below, and rightly so on the record as it stands. As regards the refusal of the Courts to admit further evidence, the facts are that the plaintiff on 9th January 1925, applied for sending for a municipal file which was duly sent for and kept along with the Court's record. Later, a clerk was summoned with the same file. The clerk appeared on 27th October 1925, naturally without the file which was already in Court and the clerk stated that he could not trace it in the Municipal Office. Nobody seems to have remembered that the file had been previously sent for. The plaintiff then proceeded on the assumption that the file was not traceable and closed his case. The case was postponed on account of the plaintiff going on active service. On 16th March, after the plaintiff had closed his case on 14th March 1928, an application was put in on behalf of the plaintiff to summon two new witnesses, Ghulam Mohammad Mistri and Lala Lal Chand, to prove the municipal file which had been discovered on that very day by plaintiff's counsel when he was inspecting the record for the purpose of argument, the date for which was fixed on the 19th. I am informed by counsel for the appellant before me that Ghulam Mohammad Mistri was to prove a plan which had been prepared by him and which was on the said municipal file and Lala Lal Chand, Pleader, who had been one of the plaintiff's counsel in the case was to prove the report made by Lala Lal Chand as Municipal Commissioner with reference to this very house at the time when the said house was rebuilt.

Counsel for the appellant did not contest before me that it was improper for Lala Lal Chand, who evidently intended all along to appear as a witness for the plaintiff, to have conducted the case on his behalf and it seems to me that it would be improper for this Court to sanction any such procedure. Apart from this two Courts have considered whether the prayer of the plaintiff should be granted or not. It is obvious that it was the neglect of plaintiff's counsel which caused the initial error. Further I agree generally with the learned District Judge's observations as to the effect of the admissions of the plaintiff and the plaintiff's mukhtar, who is plaintiff's own father, that the easement they claimed had been enjoyed by the permission of the defendant's counsel, for the appellant contends that the admission could not be fatal to the case. No doubt this is so but repeated admissions would certainly throw a very heavy onus on the plaintiff which, in my opinion, would not be discharged by the evidence which at the time was ex parte.

I, therefore, see no force in the present appeal and I dismiss it with costs.

Kapoor Chand Jain—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 37 of 1929, Decided on 25th April 1930, against order of Collector, Agra, D/- 15th October 1928.

(a) High Courts Act, S. 15—Revision lies from order including person in list of touts—Legal Practitioners Act, S. 36.

High Court can entertain in exercise of general powers of superintendence an application in revision from an order of District Magistrate including the name of a person in a list of touts under S. 86, Legal Practitioners Act: 21 All. 181 and A. I. R. 1928 All. 384, Rel. on. [P 968 C 1]

(b) Legal Practitioners Amended Act (15 of 1926), S. 2 (A)—Enquiry entrusted to Subordinate Court—Superior Court cannot include name of person in list of touts contrary to recommendation.

If the enquiry is entrusted to a subordinate Court it is the subordinate Court which must be satisfied that the person is proved to be a tout. If that authority is not satisfied and does not send up his name, the superior authority which itself made no enquiries cannot include the name of a person who has not been so recommended. [P 968 C 2]

Baleshari Prasad—for Applicant.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Sulaiman, J.—This is an application in revision from an order of the District Magistrate and Collector of Agra including the name of Kapoor Chand in a list of touts under S. 86, Legal Practitioners Act, framed and published by him. A preliminary objection is taken that no revision lies. We think that this question is now concluded by the opinion expressed in Kashi Nath v.

Emperor (1), where following an earlier case in the matter of the petition of Madho Ram (2), it was remarked that this Court could interfere in the exercise of the general powers of superintendence conferred upon it by S. 15, High Courts Act, 1871 and S. 107, Government of India Act. We may point out that although this objection was not raised, another Bench also did entertain the application in Ghafoor Khan v. Emperor (3).

On the merits we find that the order of the District Magistrate and Collector cannot be supported. Instead of making an enquiry into the complaint himself he thought it fit to entrust the enquiry to the Joint Magistrate under him. The Joint Magistrate took evidence and drew a report in which, so far as Kapoor Chand was concerned, his opinion was that there was a possibility that this man's name had been included in the list on account of party intrigues against him owing to his association with the police. The Joint Magistrate noted that a pleader supported another witness who said that Kapoor Chand was a man of respectable status. The actual recommendation was in the following words:

"At any rate the case against this man is doubtful, of which he should be given the benefit."

This report bears the date 12th October 1928. On 15th October the District Magistrate and Collector passed the order which is the subject of revision. He started by saying: "I accept the report" and then went on to declare that all the persons including Kapoor Chand were declared touts and remarked:

"All these persons were given an opportunity to explain their activities in and about Court and all failed."

Although the report of the Joint Magistrate was in favour of Kapoor Chand, the District Magistrate did not give him any opportunity to appear and to be allowed to be heard, it is not correct to say that he had failed to explain his activities because the Joint Magistrate, who enquired into his case did not feel satisfied that the case had been made out against him without any reasonable doubt. It is also extraordinary that although the learned District Magistrate and Collector said that he accepted the report he actually differed from the recommendation of the Joint Magistrate so far as Kapoor Chand was concerned. Apart from these irregularities we think that the District Magistrate has acted illegally in declaring Kapoor Chand a tout.

Under S. 2 (A), Legal Practitioners Amended Act (Act 15 of 1926), if the District Magistrate sends the names of persons suspected to be touts to a Subordinate Court and that Court holds an enquiry and reports to the authority which has ordered the enquiry the name of such person who has been "proved to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Court to be a tout" that authority may include the name of such person in the list of touts. It is therefore quite clear that if the enquiry is entrusted to a subordinate Court it is the subordinate Court which must be satisfied that the person is proved to be a tout. If that authority is not satisfied and does not send up his name, the superior authority which itself made no enquiries cannot include the name of a person who has not been so recommended. The District Magistrate did not make any additional enquiry himself, but merely acted on the report submitted to him. We think that he acted illegally in going contrary to the report.

We have already pointed out that no opportunity was given by the District Magistrate and Collector to Kapoor Chand to appear and show cause, particularly when the report of the Joint Magistrate was in his favour. This was in contravention of the proviso to that section. We accordingly allow this revision and set aside the order of the District Magistrate and Collector dated 15th October 1928 so far as it concerns Kapoor Chand and direct that his name be not included in the list of touts. We direct that the parties should bear their own costs of this revision.

Kutub Bux—Accused.

Jury Ref. No. 11 of 1929, Decided on 2nd May 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Rajshahi and Malda.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 24—Co-villager exercising no influence or authority is not "person in authority."

It would be doing violence to the terms of S. 24, to hold that a co-villager who does not exercise any influence of authority in the village is a person in authority, although the accused might have thought him to be such a person: A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 458; 11 C. W. N. 904 and A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 268, Rel. on.

(b) Evidence Act, S. 24—Prisoner may be convicted on his own confession without any corroborative evidence and even when confession is retracted he may be convicted if jury believe that confession contains true account of prisoner's connexion with crime.

It is a rule of practice not to rely on a retracted confession unless it is corroborated by some evidence to show that the confession is true. As a matter of law it cannot be laid down that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence, and a prisoner may be convicted on his own confession without any corroborative evidence and even when a confession has been retracted, if the jury believe that the confession contains a true account of the prisoner's connexion with the crime.

Mrityunjay Chattopadhyay and Sukumar Hazra—for Accused.

C. C. Ghose, J.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Rajshahi and Malda under S. 307, Criminal P. O., arising out of a case, in which the accused Bandhu and Kutub were charged with having committed an offence punishable under S. 302, I. P. O. The jury brought in a unanimous verdict of not guilty against both the accused. The learned Judge disagreed with the verdict of the jury and, being of opinion that, in the ends of justice, it was necessary that the entire case should be laid before this Court, has made this present reference.

The case for the prosecution, shortly stated, is as follows: On 1st January 1928, which was a Sunday, the deceased Paltu left his home, after taking his meals in the evening, to look after his kalai in a field, which was at a little distance off to the west of his house.

There was a hut in the kalai field. It appears that three persons, named Chhota Uniad, Makbul and Kutub, went later in the evening to the house of Paltu and made enquiries about him. Salikhan Bewa, the mother, told them that he had gone to the field. They called Bandhu, brother of the deceased Paltu, and persuaded him to accompany them. The next morning, Bandhu returned home alone. The mother, Salikhan Bewa, asked him what had happened to Paltu. Bandhu replied that Paltu had gone to Panchananpur. Paltu did not however return on the next day, namely Tuesday, and Salikhan Bewa, feeling worried went to two co-villagers, Paigambar and Hamid. She told them that Paltu had been absent since Sunday night. Paigambar thereupon questioned Bandhu and the latter promised to go and enquire at Panchananpur. As a matter of fact, Bandhu did not go to Panchananpur. In the evening, at about 10 p. m., Hamid, on his return home from Paigambar's house, heard voices in the adjacent house. He heard Bandhu and Chhota Uniad talking. Chhota Uniad was saying that "the dead body must be removed or else there will be great trouble." Hamid overheard this and went over at once to Paigambar's house and told him what he had heard. Barha Uniad was then present at Paigambar's house and the three went together to Chota Uniad's house. They saw Bandhu come out and Paigambar caught him and brought him to his house. Bandhu asked Paigambar to save him. Paigambar promised to do so; Bandhu said that he, Makbul, Chhota Uniad and Kutub had killed Paltu and had kept his body concealed in the Kalindri river.

A number of villagers were then called and, in the presence of them all, Bandhu repeated what he had already said to Paigambar. Kutub, who is a servant of Paigambar, was present at the time at the house of Paigambar and was immediately arrested by the villagers. The chaukidar was informed and both the accused were kept under the custody of the chaukidar during the night. Next morning, Bandhu showed the villagers the spot where the dead body had been concealed. The barley field, where Paltu had been killed, was pointed out by Bandhu. The villagers went to the barley field mentioned by Bandhu and found that the barley plants were damaged, that there were marks of struggle and also marks of blood on the ground. Information was then lodged at the thana; investigation followed and, after the necessary enquiries, Bandhu and Kutub were committed to take their trial in the Sessions Court on a charge of murder. Makhul and Chhota Unaid could not be traced and it is said that they are still absconding.

We have been taken through the entire record by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer and by Mr. Chatterji and it would appear that the evidence of Paigambar, Hamid, Hazrat, Gahar, Aujal and Jagir, if believed, would tend to show that Bandhu made a confession before them on the night of Tuesday, implicating himself and Kutub and two other persons. It is not necessary to go through the evidence in detail of these witnesses; it will be sufficient if a few extracts from the evidence of Paigambar are set out herein. Paigambar stated as follows:

"At about 9 or 10 p. m., Hamid and other persons left for home. I was about to go to my inner apartments, when Barha Unaid came. We had talk about missing Paltu. Soon after this, Hamid returned. I asked him why he returned. Hamid told me that he sat down to pass water on the outer yard, when he heard Chhota Unaid speaking to Bandhu 'the dead body will have to be removed, otherwise there will be great danger.'"

"Then I, Barha Unaid and Hamid went to the house of Chhota Unaid. Just when we arrived at the house of Chhota Unaid, Bandhu was coming out of Chhota Unaid's house. I at once caught hold of Bandhu and brought him to my house. At my house, I questioned, as to what he was talking to Chhota Unaid, and why he did not go to Panchananpur to search for Paltu. At first he kept quiet. I then asked him to tell the truth and that I would help him in saving him. He fell into my feet and stated that he, Chhota Unaid, Makhul and Kutub—these four persons—had killed Paltu.

"When Bandhu made this statement, Barha Unaid and Bandhu were also present. Barha Unaid then cried out very loudly."

"Barha Unaid is cousin of Paltu. Barha Unaid is dead. On hearing Barha Unaid's cry Nasiruddin, brother of Barha Unaid, came. I, sent Nasiruddin to call Hasrath Mandal, Gahar Ali, Mir Waresali, Asgar Mandal and others. They all came. I then made over Bandhu to Hasrath, as he is the pradhan of the village and asked him to question Bandhu about Paltu. Bandhu questioned Bandhu about Paltu. Bandhu stated to him also that he, Kutub, Makhul and Chhota Unaid killed Paltu."

"Hasrath asked Bandhu, as to wherefrom he was called away. He stated that he, Chhota Unaid and Makhul were lying in wait at the jala 'low land' to the west of Sangu's mango garden; and Kutub went and called Paltu from his kuria (hut). After Paltu came, Chhota Unaid and Kutub knocked him down and sat on his chest, Bandhu caught hold of his legs and Makhul cut his throat with a knife. Hasrath then asked him, 'Where have you kept the dead body?' He replied, 'The dead body has been concealed in the Patia jungle in the Hilsamari dhab.'"

"Hilsamari is about three miles from our village. We did not believe that the dead body was carried so far. We then pressed Bandhu to tell the truth about it. Then Bandhu said: 'The dead body has been kept under water in the Kailindri river near the Usir. The body has been tied to a post.'"

The evidence of the other witnesses is, as indicated above, on the same lines, and there can be no doubt whatsoever that Bandhu did make a confession before these villagers on Tuesday night. That the confession was of a voluntary character and was true, there cannot be much doubt. The learned Sessions Judge points out in his charge to the jury and, in his letter of reference, that the confession of Bandhu has been amply corroborated in various material particulars. On this point, I accept the statement of facts, as set out by the learned Sessions Judge, and will not, therefore, repeat the same here. It has, however, been strenuously argued before us that the confession of Bandhu is inadmissible in evidence, having regard to the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act. It is said that Paigambar was a person in authority within the meaning of S. 24 and that he held out an inducement to Bandhu before he made the confession and that such inducement was sufficient to give Bandhu grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that, by making the confession, he was going to gain an advantage or avoid evil. Therefore, the real point for determination is whether Paigambar was a "person in authority." The mere fact that the accused Bandhu thought that Paigambar was a person in authority is clearly not sufficient: Emperor v. Ganesh Chandra Golder (1). It has no doubt been held from time to time that too restricted a meaning should not be given to the expression, but the test has always been: Had the person authority to interfere with the matter? and any concern or interest in it would appear to be held sufficient to give him that authority: see for an illustrative case Regina v. Warringham (2). Now, Paigambar was not a panchayat as in Emperor v. Jasha Rewa (3), nor a lambardar as in Mahammad Yur v. Emperor (4), nor a pradhan or village matbar. It does not appear from the evidence on record that Paigambar was a person who exercised any influence or authority in the village. In other words, the evidence does not show that he can be described as being a person whose word was accepted by the villagers. In these circumstances, in my opinion, it would be doing violence to the terms of S. 24, Evidence Act, if I were to hold that Paigambar was a person in authority within the meaning of that section. I am, therefore, of opinion that S. 24, Evidence Act, has no application and that the confession of Bandhu was admissible in evidence.

I am not unmindful of the fact that the confession was retracted. It is a rule of practice not to rely on a retracted confession unless it is corroborated by some evidence to show that the confession is true. As a matter of law it cannot be laid down that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence; and a prisoner may be convicted, on his own confession, without any corroborative evidence and even when a confession has been retracted, if the jury believe that the confession contains a true account of the prisoner's connexion with the crime. As referred to above, the confession, in this case, has been corroborated by reliable evidence to a material extent and in material particulars. Therefore, in my opinion, so far as Bandhu is concerned, the evidence on record is such that the conclusion may safely be drawn therefrom that Bandhu was guilty of murder.*

I have not gone into the question of motive. The motive alleged, in this case, is that Paltu objected to the marriage of Bandhu with the daughter of one Guruji. There is some evidence on this point, but, after all, the guilt or otherwise of Bandhu must be determined upon the circumstances related by the witnesses.

The case against Kutub stands on a different footing. The main evidence against him is the retracted confession of the co-accused. The learned Sessions Judge is of opinion that the confession of Bandhu, so far as Kutub is concerned is also true. It is said that the confession of Bandhu, as against Kutub, derives corroboration from the fact that blood-stains were found on the vest that he was wearing and that several injuries were found on his right hand, namely, three scratch marks, one cut and one abrasion. On behalf of Kutub, it was sought to be suggested that the injuries referred to above were caused by a fall with a tin canister. No doubt, the Imperial Serologist is of opinion that the blood that was detected in the stains on the vest was human blood, but it is by no means clear, on the evidence on record, that the vest in question had not been stained with blood due to the fact that Kutub had several injuries on his person. At any rate, after examining the entire record, I am unable to say that the case against Kutub is of such a clear character that I have no other alternative but to come to a conclusion adverse to him. In my view Kutub should be given the benefit of the doubt and forthwith discharged.

The result is that I find Bandhu guilty under S. 302, I. P. C. I have examined the record carefully to find out if there are any circumstances present, which would justify me in inflicting the lesser penalty indicated in S. 302. Bandhu is aged 18 or 19: see p. 44 of the paper book. It is clear from the record that Paltu objected and strenuously objected to his marrying the daughter of Guruji. This is spoken to by several witnesses. It is, therefore, possible that he was led to commit the crime in question, because of the opposition of Paltu to his marriage. In these circumstances, I think the ends of justice will be sufficiently met if, instead of passing the extreme penalty of the law on Bandhu, I direct that he do undergo transportation for life. I order accordingly.

Judgment.—In the case out of which this Rule has arisen the petitioner has been convicted of theft and also of being a member of an unlawful assembly. The case for the prosecution was that the complainant was in possession of a certain piece of land and that the present petitioner with a large number of persons trespassed upon the complainant's land and dug up potatoes which he had grown on the land. The defence was that it was the petitioner who owned the land and who had grown the potatoes and removed them. Both Courts below have found that it was the complainant who was in possession and had grown the potatoes and hence the petitioner was convicted and fined.

The first ground on which the Rule has been granted is that the judgment of the Court of appeal below does not indicate the defence evidence in the case and contains no independent discussion of the same. It is perfectly clear from a perusal of the judgment what the defence evidence was, namely the testimony of certain persons who stated that they saw the petitioner cultivating the land and growing potatoes. The learned Court of appeal below has discussed this evidence and has come to the conclusion that he prefers on this question of possession the evidence of the complainant's witness.
Anyone familiar with cases of this nature realizes that the evidence which was given in this case was of persons who said that they saw the complainant or they saw the accused person cultivating the land and growing potatoes.

There is no substance whatever in this ground. The next ground on which the Rule has been granted is that on the findings of the Court of appeal below the conviction of the petitioner under S. 379, I. P. C., is not sustainable.
It is somewhat difficult to realize how the petitioner has obtained the Rule on this ground for is it perfectly clear from a perusal of the judgment of the lower appellate Court that that Court finds that it was the complainant who was in possession of the land and who grew the potatoes and the petitioner removed the potatoes from the land.
Clearly therefore on the facts found the conviction of the petitioner under S.
379 was right.

The last ground on which the Rule has been obtained is that the Court of appeal below ought to have held that the complainant's vendor had no right to convey the property to him on the day he did in view of the only evidence in the case, viz. the death register which the said Court of appeal below was not justified in rejecting on mere suspicion. The question before the Court apparently was whether a certain person was or was not dead on a certain date when the sale deed was executed. The lower appellate Court came to the conclusion that he could not place any reliance on the death register which would apparently show that on the date when this sale deed was executed the father of the person executing the deed was not dead. It was obviously open to the Court to reject or accept any piece of evidence.
In the present case the Magistrate was not prepared to place any reliance on the death register in view of the somewhat casual way in which the death register was prepared and it is impossible to say that the lower appellate Court was wrong in so dealing with the death register. There is no substance in this ground either. The Rule is therefore discharged.

V.B./R.K.

Rule discharged.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

• Criminal Revn. No: 670 of 1929, Decided on 3rd January 1930, from order of Chief Presy. Magistrate, Calcutta, D/- 30th April 1929.

Calcutta Police Act (Bengal Act 4 of 1866). S. 44—Members of association alleged to carry on business for purchase and sale of jute for future delivery — No delivery intended—Accused are guilty under S. 44.

Certain persons were members of an association called the Bengal Jute Association which carried on business at particular premises in respect of transactions for purchase and sale of jute for future delivery. It was found that there was no intention between the parties either to take or give delivery.

Held: that the accused were guilty under S. 44 their intention being to gamble and not to deal in jute. [P 973 C 2]

Narendra Kumar Basu, K. C. Gupta and Satindra Nath Mukerjee—for Petitioners.

Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for Diben-dra Narain Bhattacharjee — for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the Chief Presidency Magistrate has found 25 men guilty of an offence under S. 44, Calcutta Police Act (Bengal Act 4, 1866), that is, of the offence of keeping a certain house, room or place, to wit 2/1 Royal Exchange Place, as a common gaming house. It appears that the police raided the premises 2/1 Royal Exchange Place on 27th February 1929, and out of a large number of persons then and there arrested, the present accused were prosecuted. The accused are all modis or members of a limited company called the Bengal Jute Association Limited which carried on business at the address mentioned, and the sole question in the case is whether or not the transactions which were entered into or arranged by members of the association were wagering transactions or were in truth, as they purported to be in form transactions for the purchase and sale of jute for future delivery. This question is one of fact and it is for the prosecution to show that in these transactions the intention of the parties was in no circumstances either to take or give delivery. If it be shown that the intention of both parties to each contract was merely that according as the prices of jute should rise or fall payment of differences should be made, then it is proved that the true intention of the parties was to gamble and not to deal in jute. The Court has to arrive at the true intention of the parties upon a consideration of all the facts. I know of no special rules of proof or presumption which affect this question. If however it be first found that the transactions entered into at this place were transactions by way of wager or gaming, then no doubt the books and contract forms which were kept upon the premises must be regarded as instruments of gaming and, in the circumstances of this case, the accused have no defence to a charge under S. 44.

It appears that the Bengal Jute Association Limited was registered under the Companies Act in October 1928. The case of the accused is that this association was incorporated for the purpose of dealings in "futures," that is to say, dealings in jute for delivery in certain specified months of the year namely, September, December and March and that in February 1929, when the business was brought to an end by the police raid, only one delivery month, namely December 1928, had elapsed and the dealings then taking place were dealings for delivery in March. It appears from the evidence that these dealings were of two classes according as they were made by and between modis who were members of the association, that is between modi and modi, or were made by the agency of modis between third parties or beparis. A printed form was kept for each class of contract. The form for use between modi and modi is a very short one and purports merely to record a sale subject to the bye-laws of the Bengal Jute Association. The contract form for the latter class of contract is more elaborate and has all the appearance in many of its clauses of a real sale of jute. It provides that the sellers between the 1st and 20th of the delivery month shall tender a delivery instruction form and that the buyers within three days thereafter are to send shipping instructions. It contains however, certain remarkable terms, in particular the terms providing for the periodical payment of margin namely that a party shall pay to or receive from the other the difference between the contract rate and the market rate on Saturday as quoted by the association. It provides that interest on all margin will be calculated at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of payment on the due date of the contract, but that any failure to pay margin is to entitle the other party to terminate the contract and to claim difference on the basis of the rate prevailing on the date of default. The contract also provides that no contractual privity is established with the persons with whom a corresponding contract is entered into; that is to say that while the modi acts in form as a broker he is in reality alone responsible to his principal for the performance of the contract.

The contention of the accused is that the provision for payment of margins was intended to minimize the chance of loss by reason of failure on the part of the buyer or seller to make payment of to give delivery as the case may be. It is further contended that although the accused or the persons with whom they dealt were not possessed of any stock of jute, or godowns for the storage thereof, delivery could be and was intended to be effected by means of delivery orders which enabled the holder to obtain delivery from jute balers or other persons who were possessed of stocks of jute. They further contend that several deliveries had in fact been made in this manner; that owing to the cornering of jute by a certain dealer many transactions had to be settled in December by the payment of differences; but that there is no proof, or no sufficient proof, that the transactions which were for delivery in March would not have been completed in some cases at least by delivery.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate is in my judgment right in saying that the only question in the case is as to the real nature of the business done. On this question it is quite true that the defence have done nothing to prove the genuineness of such business. They have not produced their books or customers to speak to any particular transactions and give evidence of their genuine character. They are entitled however, to say that it is for the prosecution to prove the offence. In the first place it is clear, both from the contract itself and from the evidence, that the business was to be done according to certain clearing house procedure: the delivery order for example, by Cl. 23 of the contract between modi and bepari was to be obtained by the modi from the clearing house. Now the association kept a delivery book as under this system it would have to do. In spite of evidence which shows that a very large volume of business—the exact amount is of small importance—was being transacted by members of the association, the records of the association disclose, as the Magistrate has conclusively shown in his judgment, that delivery orders for 250 bales from each of three jute balers represent the only cases in which there can have been any question of delivery. In no single one of these cases was delivery ever given in fact. It appears that two orders were paid for by the secretary of the association. They were sold and then resold to the sellers who got them back with a substantial profit in a few days. One of the balers from whom a delivery order was obtained is shown to have been in liquidation and to have had no godowns for months, and there is no evidence of money having been paid for this delivery order. There is no evidence of any delivery order having been taken or given in connexion with any transaction conducted at this place. The conclusion of the Magistrate is that these delivery orders are not genuine but were a mere “blind,” the possession of them being intended to conceal the fact that delivery was not intended at all.

Upon a careful consideration of the evidence I am of opinion that the Magistrate was right in thinking that the case against the accused was proved and in my judgment the rule must be discharged.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1453 of 1929, Decided on 21st January 1930, from an order of Sub-Divl. Mag., Pabna, D/-24th April 1929.

Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act (2 of 1907), Ss. 2 and 3—Order to discontinue use of house as disorderly house and not to vacate it can be made—Order imposing fine on non-compliance of order vacating house is ultra vires.

Under the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act the owner or occupier of disorderly houses may be ordered to discontinue the use of a house as a disorderly house but not to vacate it. An order imposing daily fine on prostitutes for non-compliance with an order to vacate their houses is therefore not competent under Ss. 2 and 3 and is ultra vires.

Dinesh Chandra Roy—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application by four persons who have been sentenced to pay a daily fine of Rs. 2 a day each for not carrying out the orders passed against them under S. 3, Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act of 1907. The grounds on which the rule has been issued are : first, that the notices upon which the present order is based being ultra vires and without jurisdiction the order itself is not maintainable; and secondly, that the judgment is not in accordance with law since the cases of the individual accused have not been separately considered. As far as I can see, the ground stated first is well founded. These persons were ordered to vacate the houses. S. 2 of the Act provides that a Magistrate may summon the owner, tenant, manager or occupier of the house to appear before him to show cause why the use of such house should not be discontinued for any of the purposes or in any of the ways described in the section. Admittedly notices on these persons were to show cause why they should not vacate the house, an order which could not obviously be passed under the section. Apparently some order was passed on 9th October 1928 which directed the petitioners not to use the houses as brothels and allowed them eight weeks' time to discontinue such use. Against this order an application was made to the District Judge which was rejected on 28th March 1929. On 4th April 1929 the following order was passed :

"The Judge has rejected their motion on 28th March 1929. Prostitutes have not vacated the quarters up to this time. They had sufficient time to vacate the houses used by them as brothels. They are directed to carry out the orders under S. 3, Act 2 of 1907, within seven days".

Apparently therefore at that time the order was to vacate the house. On 24th April 1929 the Magistrate passed the following order :

"Prostitutes are still occupying the houses and they are still using the same as brothels. Thus it will appear that they have not carried out orders passed on them under S. 2 (b), Act 2 of 1907 on 9th October 1928 and upheld by District Judge. They were given six weeks' time by this Court and after the Judge's confirmation of the order on 28th March 1929 owners and prostitutes were given further time from 4th April 1929 to 24th April 1929 to close down the brothels, but neither the owners of the houses nor the prostitutes living in the brothels have taken any notice of the said order."

For these reasons he imposed the fine which is now the subject of the rule. It seems to me, as far as I can understand these somewhat contradictory orders of the Magistrate, that he directed that the prostitutes were to vacate the houses, and as they did not vacate the houses they were fined Rs. 2 per diem until they carried out the order. That order was obviously ultra vires. The Act does not provide that they should be ordered to vacate the houses but merely they should discontinue the use of the houses as brothels. The order of the Magistrate therefore seems to be ultra vires. The order inflicting fines in the present case is accordingly set aside.

It will be open of course to the Magistrate to take proper proceedings against the petitioners under the Act if he thinks necessary.

The fines if paid must be refunded.

Criminal Revn. No. 22 of 1929, Decided on 19th May 1930.

* Civil P. C., S. 115, and O. 8, R. 2—Something put in written statement which is not true and something omitted which ought to have been there—Court holding that such action constituted offence under S. 193, Penal Code—Order is so misconceived that High Court is bound in revision to set it aside.

In many cases persons in verifying the pleadings, defendants their written statements, or plaintiffs their plaints, are often found to say something which is not strictly true; for example a defendant may deny the making of a contract or deny that a certain transaction took place in order to force the plaintiff to give evidence and be subjected to cross-examination in the matter or to put the matter raised in issue. But by such action he does not render himself liable for prosecution for perjury for making false statement. Where the Judge so misconceives the operation and function of a written statement as to imagine that because something is put in in a written statement which is in a sense not true and something is omitted from the written statement, that of itself constitutes offence under S. 193, Penal Code, the High Court is not only justified in exercising but is bound to exercise its power in revision to set aside the order.

Debendra Nath Bhattacharjee and Bikash Chandra Ghose—for Petitioners.

Narendra Kumar Basu and Jatindra Nath Mitter—for the Crown.

Costello, J.—The only possible point which could be taken is that this is not a matter which can properly be said to fall within the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C. But in this particular case the learned Judge has taken such a fantastic view of the law and has made an order in circumstances where it is quite impossible for this Court to make any order than that we feel not only justified in exercising but bound to exercise our power in revision to set this order aside. We can only express astonishment that a Judge of the experience of the learned Judge should have so misconceived the operation and function of a written statement as to imagine that because something is put in in a written statement which in a sense is not true, and something is omitted from the written statement that of itself constitutes an offence under S. 193, I. P. C. It is obvious that written statement in a civil suit corresponds to the pleading which in England is called the defence, and that being so it is competent to the defendants to a suit to raise such pleas in their written statements as they think fit or to abstain from raising things which appear to the defendants not to be of advantage to them. In the present instance the matter, as I have said, is so fantastic as to be utterly ridiculous because these persons were charged, not with having made statements in their written statement which are not true but simply with omitting to say something which the learned Judge, by reason of the terms of O. 8, R. 2, Civil P. C., thought that they ought to have included. O. 8, R. 2 which corresponds to O. 9, R. 15, of the English rules provides that the defendant must raise by his pleading all matters which show the suit not to be maintainable, or that the transaction is either void or voidable in point of law, and all such grounds of defence as, if not raised, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the plaint, as for instance fraud, humiliation, release, payment, performance or facts showing illegality. Of course all matters of the nature of those mentioned in that rule, if the defendant desires to take advantage of them, must be mentioned or raised in his written statement as otherwise he would be debarred from raising those matters at the trial. The word "must" means such an obligation, that if he fails to do so he would be restrained from raising those matters later except under R. 9 of that order. The learned Judge has wholly misunderstood the purpose and intent of the rule to which he has referred. It is perhaps a little unfortunate that by reason of the provisions of the Code pleadings, such as written statements, have to be verified because in many cases persons in verifying their pleadings, defendants their written statements or plaintiffs their complaints, are often found to say something which is not strictly true; for example, a defendant may deny the making of a contract or deny that a certain transaction took place, in order to force that plaintiff to give evidence and be subjected to cross-examination in the matter or to put the matters raised in issue. But I do not think that he renders himself liable for prosecution for perjury for making false statements. It is obvious that there is no justification for the order passed by the learned Judge in this case, which must be set aside. The rule is therefore made absolute.

Mrs. Donlea—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 515 of 1930, Decided on 2nd June 1930, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Ambala:

 Criminal P. C., S. 439—High Court does not interfere in case pending in subordinate Court unless it is of exceptional nature—Test for determining exceptional nature laid down—Criminal P. C., S. 488.

The High Court does not interfere in a case pending in a subordinate Court unless it is of an exceptional nature. One test of its being of exceptional nature is that a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince the High Court that the case is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage.

Where in a proceeding under S. 488, Criminal P. C. by a wife against her husband the trial Magistrate passed an order that certain letters from his wife produced by the husband were inadmissible under S. 122, Evidence Act, the case was forwarded to the High Court for setting aside the order.

Held: that the order being purely an interlocutory order the High Court could not interfere, it being not convinced that the case was of any exceptional nature and a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage: 25 Cal. 233, Rel'on. [P 978 C 1]

Chiranji Lal—for Petitioner.

Ananth Ram Khosla—for Respondent.

Facts.—The facts of this case are as follows:

Mrs. Donlea filed a complaint under S. 488, Criminal P. C., against her husband Mr. Donlea. The trying Magistrate held on 1st March 1930, that he had jurisdiction to try this case and on 24th March 1930, the trying Magistrate held that the three letters produced by the accused being communications from a wife to a husband were inadmissible in evidence under S. 122, Evidence Act. Against both these orders Mr. Donlea filed a revision petition to the District Magistrate.

Report.—The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds:

This is an application for revision of an order of the Cantonment Magistrate, Ambala Cantonment. Two grounds have been put forward for this application. The first is that the lower Court wrongly decided that it had jurisdiction and the second is that the lower Court improperly refused to admit certain evidence. The case is as follows:

Mrs. Donlea has filed an application under S. 488, Criminal P. C. Mr. Donlea in his reply stated that he had never resided with his wife in Ambala and also alleged that he had never neglected or refused to maintain her. As regards the first point Mr. Donlea admitted that two years ago he came to Ambala on casual leave and resided for 10 days (Mrs. Donlea says 14) with Mrs. Donlea who lives with her mother in a boarding house in Ambala Cantonment. Mr. Donlea asserts that this does not constitute residence within the meaning of S. 488. In reply counsel for Mrs. Donlea has quoted A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 853, in which the facts were almost exactly similar to the facts in the present case, the only difference being that in that case the husband had visited his wife more than once and that she was living in her father's house. I do not think these differences are sufficient to take the present case outside the scope of that ruling. Counsel for Mr. Donlea has quoted a Bombay ruling and an Oudh ruling, but these have no force in face of a Lahore ruling. I accordingly hold that the Cantonment Magistrate has jurisdiction and I reject this ground of revision. The second ground is a very much more difficult one and in my opinion the lower Court was wrong. The evidence which the applicant wished to put in consisted of three letters written to him by his wife. These letters prove that the applicant has not in fact neglected or refused to maintain his wife and also tend to prove other facts which will constitute a good defence by the husband. The lower Court held that being communications from a wife to a husband they were inadmissible in evidence under S. 122, Evidence Act. The difficulty lies in this: that proceedings under S. 488, Criminal P. C., are of a peculiar nature. They apparently do not constitute a crime or offence, and at the same time they are not a regular civil suit, so as to be covered by the exception to S. 122. Nevertheless they do constitute a kind of a suit and are in any case judicial proceedings in which evidence has to be taken. It is obviously open to a husband against whom proceedings are taken under this section to produce evidence to show that he has not in fact neglected or refused to support his wife, and he could certainly give oral evidence to this effect, but under the general rule that in all cases the best available evidence should be produced, I consider that the husband is entitled in such a case as this and in the circumstances mentioned to produce in evidence letters written to him by his wife admitting quite clearly that he has been maintaining her, which is the case here. Such letters disclose no secrets which it is advisable on grounds of general public interest to keep secret. I therefore forward this case to the High Court, Lahore, with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate declaring these letters to be inadmissible be set aside.

Order.—The question whether the letters written by the wife to the husband are admissible in evidence would require a very careful consideration, but this is not the stage at which the matter can be decided by the High Court. The order passed by the trial Magistrate is purely an interlocutory one, and the High Court does not interfere in a case pending in a subordinate Court unless it is of an exceptional nature. As pointed out in Choa Lal Dass v. Anant Parshad Misser (1) one test of its being of exceptional nature is that a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince the High Court that the case is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage. Without expressing any opinion on the merits, I must say that this test is not fulfilled in the present case. I accordingly decline to express any opinion on the correctness or otherwise of the order of the Magistrate.

Decided on 1st July 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 526—Directions of appellate Court with regard to trial disregard—ded—Application under S. 526 by accused ignored and proceedings continued—Matter not irrelevant expunged from written statement of accused by Magistrate—Held these incidents were sufficient to justify transfer case to another Magistrate.

A Magistrate did not adopt the suggestions of the Sessions Judge with regard to trial of two cases in which the accused was involved. He further ignored the application of the accused under S. 526, Criminal P.C., asking him to stay the proceedings as it was intended to move the High Court but continued the proceedings contrary to the specific provisions of the Code. Again, the Magistrate summarily expunged certain passages from the written statement by the accused, which could not be and ought not to have been struck off, not being irrelevant to the defence of the accused.

Held: these incidents were sufficient to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court of the Magistrate and transfer of the case to another Magistrate was necessary. There was, however, no adequate ground for transfer of the case from the district. [P 979 C 2]

M. L. Batra—for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner along with a number of other persons, is being tried in the Court of Sheikh Allah-ud-din Arshad, Magistrate, 1st Class, Sargodha, for having committed offences under Ss. 147, 152 and 427, I. P. C., arising out of certain incidents, which are alleged to have occurred on the occasion of the visit of His Excellency the Governor to Sargodha on 9th and 10th April. He has applied under S. 526 for transfer of the aforesaid case to another District, and failing that, to the Court of another Magistrate in the Shahpur District.

The grounds on which transfer is sought are set out in detail in the lengthy and somewhat prolix application filed by him and the affidavit which accompanies it. Some of the incidents narrated in the application are of little or no significance and do not afford any ground for transfer. There are, however, certain important matters, which clearly indicate that the learned Magistrate has not approached the case from a proper judicial standpoint and, in my opinion, they are sufficient to raise a reasonable apprehension in his mind that he will not have a fair and impartial trial in that Court.

It appears that on 11th April, i. e. three days before the chalan was presented, the petitioner had filed a complaint against some of the persons, who have now appeared, or have been cited as witnesses for the prosecution in the chalan case. In this complaint he gave a totally different version of the incidents, in connexion with which he is being prosecuted. This complaint was also assigned to Mr. Allah-ud-din Arshad for disposal. The learned Magistrate having refused to grant bail to the petitioner and his co-accused in the chalan case, they moved the Sessions Judge who by his order dated 29th April 1930, ordered their release on bail. In this order the learned Sessions Judge pointed out very clearly that the procedure followed by the learned Magistrate in trying the two cases had been distinctly prejudicial to the accused, and he gave certain directions as to how the trial of the cases should proceed. The subsequent proceedings before the Magistrate show, however, that he did not adopt these suggestions.

On 12th May, when the case came up for hearing before the Magistrate an application under S. 526, Criminal P.C., was filed by the petitioner asking him to stay further proceedings as it was intended to move this Court. The learned Magistrate seems to have ignored the application for the time being and continued the proceedings contrary to the specific provisions of the Code. The explanation which the learned Magistrate has submitted to this Court on both these points is by no means satisfactory and the learned counsel for the Crown has expressed his inability to support it.

These incidents by themselves would not, perhaps, have been sufficient to justify a transfer of the case. But the real mind of the learned Magistrate is clear from the manner in which he conducted the examination of the petitioner. In the questions which he put to the accused, as contained in the type-written sheet to be found at pp. 75 and 76 of the record, the petitioner was asked whether he along with the other co-accused was a member of an unlawful assembly, the common object of which was (inter alia) to beat those persons who were against his "anti-Government creed such as the observance of hartal." The answer to this and other questions orally given by the petitioner was recorded and he was alleged to file a written statement. The learned

Magistrate placed the statement on the record and then proceeded to expunge certain passages from it by striking them out with blue pencil. These passages have been read out to me and the learned counsel for the Crown concedes, that with the simple exception of the very last sentence at p. 281 of the record, they cannot, by any means, be said to be irrelevant to the defence of the petitioner. As stated already in question No. 1 as put by the Magistrate the petitioner was asked if he was a member of an unlawful assembly, the common object of which was to beat certain persons who do not agree with "his anti-Government creed." In answer to this the petitioner stated that his political creed did not include the use of violence. Again his main defence was that he had incurred the displeasure of the local police and certain other officials by reason of his political activities and that for this reason a false case had been concocted against him. Now this defence may be difficult of proof. It may, indeed, be wholly false (a matter on which I do not and cannot express any opinion), but it cannot be said that having regard to the allegations made by the prosecution witnesses and the nature of the questions put to the petitioner by the Magistrate himself, it was not a kind of defence which could not have been allowed to be raised or which should have been summarily struck off. There is no doubt that the learned Magistrate in proceeding in the manner he did has prejudged the case of the petitioner. I am therefore of opinion that these incidents are sufficient to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioner that he will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court of this Magistrate.

I cannot, however, find any adequate ground for transfer of the case from the district. I have no reason to believe that all the Magistrates at Sargodha are prejudiced against the petitioner and that they will not deal with the case properly and legally, uninfluenced by any extra-judicial considerations. I, therefore, disallow this prayer but think that the case should be tried by a senior Magistrate. I accept this petition to the extent that I withdraw the case from the Court of Mr. Allah-uddin Arshad, Magistrate, 1st Class, and remit it to that of Mr. Ujagar Singh, Additional District Magistrate, Sargodha, for disposal in accordance with law. The Deputy Registrar will take steps to transmit the record to the Court of Mr. Ujagar Singh at as early a date as possible.

Criminal Appeal No. 788 of 1929,

Decided on 6th January 1930, from acquittal order of Sess. Judge, Hissar, D/- 13th June 1929.

Punjab Excise Act, S. 61 (1) (a)—Mere fact that illicit liquor is found in room occupied by son for sleeping does not make him guilty—Legal possession remains with father, house-master—Penal Code, S. 27.

Where articles are found in a house in such place or places as several persons living in the house may have access to, there is no presumption as to possession and control of any other person than the house-master, though it is open to the prosecution to prove that the possession was with some other member of the family. 15 All. 129 and A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 272, Foll. [P 980 C 2]

When most of illicit liquor is found in the room occupied for the night by the son and his family for sleeping, it does not necessarily mean that the son was in the exclusive possession of the room. The legal possession still remains with the father, the house-master, and there is obvious possibility that the liquor could have been placed there by the father. The mere fact that the son does not report the matter to proper authorities but uses the room along with his wife and family to sleep in does not make him guilty of the offence of being in possession of that liquor:

Addison, J.—This is an appeal by the Crown against the acquittal of one Binjha of an offence under S. 61 (1) (a), Punjab Excise Act. The facts are undisputed. At the dead of night on 20th February 1929 a police search party went to the village of Binjha and his father Dulla and surrounded their house. This house consists of a small living room and a more or less open cattle-shed inside a courtyard. Binjha along with his wife and one or two children was at the time inside the living room while the father Dulla was sleeping in the cattle-shed. When the search was made five bottles of illicit liquor were recovered from underneath a tandi in the living room while one tin of illicit liquor was standing near the tandi. Another bottle of illicit liquor was found buried at the cattle-shed. It is admitted that father and son live jointly in this house. It is further admitted that Dulla is the head of the family. On these facts the police sent up for trial both father and son. The Magistrate acquitted the father Dulla and convicted the son Binjha under S. 61 (1) (a), Excise Act, on the ground that he considered that Binjha was in exclusive use and possession of the living room where the liquor was found as he was sleeping there with his wife and family when the raiding party arrived and as he could not have done so without knowing that the liquor was there. Binjha appealed and the learned Sessions Judge held he could not be convicted as father and son were in joint possession and there was no reason to depart from the usual presumption that the head of the family was in possession of the illicit liquor or had the control of it. He accordingly accepted the appeal and acquitted Binjha and the Crown has appealed to this Court.

In Queen-Empress v. Sanham Lal (1) it was stated that where articles are found in a house in such place or places as several persons living in the house may have access to, there is no presumption as to possession and control that these articles are in the possession and control of any other person than the house-master though it is open to the prosecution to prove that the possession was with some other member of the family. This was followed by a Division Bench of this Court in A.I.R. 1928 Lahore 272. In this case it is true that the son Binjha and his wife and family were sleeping in the room where most of the liquor was lying, but that does not mean necessarily that he was in exclusive possession of that room though he was undoubtedly occupying it for that night for the purpose of sleeping in it. The legal possession still remained with the father, the house-master, and it is an obvious possibility that the liquor could have been placed there by the father. If this was the case the mere fact that Binjha did not report the matter to the proper authorities but used the room along with his wife and family to sleep in would not make him guilty of the offence of being in possession of the liquor. In these circumstances I see no reason in the present case to disagree with the finding of the learned Sessions Judge to the effect that Binjha has not been proved to be guilty. I would dismiss the appeal.

Judgment.—The appellant Malik Amir Alam who is a well educated man and was the editor of the "Tarjaman-i-sarhad" has been convicted under S. 124-A, I. P. C., in respect of a speech delivered by him on 24th January 1930 at a meeting of the Naujawan Bharat Sabha held at Rawalpindi, to celebrate the anniversary of Lenin.

The appellant admits making the speech but contended that the report of speech was incomplete and incorrect. The only specific instance put forward by him was that whereas he had said : "Tahzirat-i-hind men har mazah par hamla hai" the reporter represented him as saying : "tahzirat-i-hind ki har dafa men mazhab par hamla hai." This is not a very vital difference and there can be no doubt that the reporter has substantially reported the speech correctly. The appellant further objected that the speech had been incorrectly translated. This refers to the translation of the speech contained in the order sanctioning the prosecution. There are certain inaccuracies in that translation but the translation that has been prepared in this Court gives the correct version and I shall use that.

The learned Magistrate has given a summary of the speech in his judgment and has cited in the original vernacular the two passages which he considered to be most objectionable. It is unnecessary to reproduce them here.

The appellant filed a very lengthy written statement in which he argued that the speech could not be classed as seditious. His arguments have been repeated by his counsel. It is contended that the first portion of the speech which deals with what happened in Russia is intended to show that whereas Lenin in Russia owing to restrictions imposed on public meetings and the press achieved his aims by secret societies, in this country there is no need to have resort to secret societies in view of the license allowed to the press and public meetings, and that therefore a peaceful revolution can be brought about. He further contended that the second portion of the speech which deals with religion and restrictions imposed upon it does not refer to the Indian Penal Code but to the general system of penal law in force, and in his written statement the appellant cited the Sarda Act as an instance. As regards the third portion of the speech it has been contended that this is intended not as an attack on Government but as an attack on the existing economic system owing to which the labouring classes are suffering. The appellant produced no defence.

As regards the first portion of the speech relating to Lenin, the speaker in my opinion by implication put forward as an example to be followed though he attempted to safeguard himself by saying that in this country peaceful revolution could be brought about.

As regards the second portion of the speech, this clearly put forward the proposition that the subject race cannot be said to have any religion, and that at the present in India there is no religion but slavery. The Indian Penal Code contains an attack on every religion. It is idle to contend that the word "tazhirat-i-hind" does not mean the Indian Penal Code but the penal law generally. No ordinary man attaches to the word 'tazhirat-i-hind' any other significance than the Indian Penal Code. This passage is in my opinion clearly an attempt to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India by representing that the Penal Code enforced by Government attacks every religion.

The third portion of the speech suggests that if their association works on proper lines they will paralyze the present system of Government which has made slaves of the people.

"The labourers can paralyze the whole system like the labourers of Bombay. The day is not far off when we will with our might paralyze this Government."

Counsel for the appellant urges citing Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Emperor (1) that the speech must be read as a whole in a bold and liberal spirit and that undue attention should not be paid to isolated passages. He further contends that mere advocacy of a change in the system of Government does not fall within the purview of S. 124-A, I. P. C., in view of the spirit of Explanations 2 and 3 to that section. He further contended that the speech was cautious, tame and insipid and did not attack Government, and further urged that there was no incitement to violence and that the speech is not as intemperate as some speeches that are made. Reading the speech as a whole, however, there cannot be the least doubt in my opinion that it is an attempt to excite disaffection towards the Government by law established. The evidence shows that the audience during the speech raised various revolutionary cries such as "inglah zinda bad" "down down with the Union Jack" and "hakumat ko tabah kar do." It is unnecessary to refer to the previous speeches of the appellant which have been brought on the record as showing his intention as his intention is sufficiently clear from the speech delivered by him on 24th January. I therefore consider that the conviction under S. 124-A, I. P. C., must be maintained.

As regards the question of sentence the appellant's counsel has cited various cases in which the appellate Court has reduced the sentence imposed to the imprisonment already undergone, but each case must be dealt with on its own particular facts and the circumstances and atmosphere of the time when it was delivered must be considered. It is urged that the present speech was addressed to an audience of only 200 or 300 persons. That in itself, however, is no reason for reducing the sentence. I see no reason to reduce the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment imposed on the appellant and dismiss the appeal.

Sita Devi—Petitioner.

Har Narain—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 337 of 1930, Decided on 20th June 1930, on report by Dist. Magistrate, Gujranwala, D./6th March 1930.

* Criminal P. C. S. 488—Neglect or refusal to maintain is first essential to invest Court with jurisdiction under S. 488.

In order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate to take proceedings under S. 488 the first essential is to find that the respondent has neglected or refused to maintain the person for whose maintenance an allowance is asked for.

Where wife is allowed maintenance under S. 488 the mere fact that the son is of tender years and that it is in the interests of the minor son that he should be left with the mother till the father is able to get the custody of the minor son from the civil Court is not sufficient to invest the criminal Courts with jurisdiction under S. 488 as regards the son unless it can be shown that he has neglected or refused to maintain the boy. [P 985 C 1]

• Govind Ram Khanna—for Petitioner.
Mehr Chand Mahajan and H. R. Mahajan—for Respondent.

Report.—The facts of this case are as follows : Mt. Sita Devi, wife of Pandit Har Narain, B. A., LL. B., and a practising pleader at Wazirabad, lodged an application under S. 488, Criminal P. C. claiming maintenance from him for herself and her minor son Brij Bhosan by him aged about 4 years now. Lala Mulkh Raj, Magistrate 1st Class, Gujranwala, who heard that application awarded Rs. 30 per mensem to Mt. Sita Devi from the date of her application i. e. 3rd June 1929, and disallowed the application for maintenance of the minor son on the ground of the respondent Pandit Har Narain being anxious to keep the boy with himself.

Mt. Sita Devi has now come up to me on revision saying that maintenance should have been separately allowed for her minor son who is too young to live away from his mother and that Rs. 30 per mensem allowed to herself is too small and should be increased to Rs. 70 per mensem. Pandit Har Narain has on the other hand lodged a revision saying that no maintenance could be legally allowed to Mt. Sita Devi and that the Magistrate hearing the case should not have examined him as a witness for the applicant Mt. Sita Devi.

I have heard pleaders for both parties in these revision applications and have gone through the evidence oral as well as documentary put in by them. I do not think there is much in the argument of the respondent being examined as a witness for the applicant as the Magistrate was bound to examine him fully as to the facts of the case as if he were a party in a civil suit vide A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 347.

I note that Mt. Sita Devi is an educated girl aged about 23 knowing Hindi and Urdu and the daughter of a clerk in the Irrigation Office, Lyallpur, drawing Rs. 80 per mensem. Her father it appears was of some monetary help to the respondent also during the course of his educational studies. The respondent Pandit Har Narain, B. A., B. T., and LL. B. is aged about 28 and is practising as a pleader since 1924. His income has been taken by the Magistrate after careful consideration to be about Rs. 150 per mensem, and from this conclusion I do not see any good grounds materially to differ. They were married in 1920 but their relations it seems have never been happy. To use the respondent's own words he could not keep her with himself on account of incompatibility of temper. She has been finally living away from him with her own parents since June 1928. There she received a post-card Ex. P. F. dated 24th June 1928, in which the respondent told her that if she came to him uncalled, he would send her back again. On 21st November 1928 he sent her a notice by post saying that "matters have come to such a pass that unfortunately it has become quite impossible for me to reside any longer for good with you, Shrimati under the same roof."

"you would not be ill-advised if you could see your way to settle your maintenance at once."

On 13th December 1928 he sent another notice to her Ex. P. E. telling her to get her monthly maintenance fixed either in a civil or a criminal Court as suited her. Meantime he was arranging to get another suitable wife for himself, and the letter Exhibit P.B. dated 11th February 1929, which he wrote to one Gurbachan Singh at Jullundur in this connexion is an interesting document. He states his monthly income there to be about Rs. 300 per mensem and says that he did not like his first wife from the very day of his marriage with her and the disliking increased as the years rolled on on account of her multifarious defects and that he is not on speaking terms with her since 2½ years.

In face of all these facts I fully agree with the conclusions arrived at by the Magistrate that the respondent has not only neglected but practically deserted his wife, and that he has been quite persistent in his refusal to keep her with himself. The application filed by the respondent before the Magistrate on 19th October 1929, when the case was fixed for arguments, to the effect that he was prepared to maintain and feed her, was evidently not in good faith, and was made with the simple object of escaping, if possible, the legal obligations to maintain her. As remarked by the Magistrate, Mt. Sita Devi cannot, under the Hindu law, marry a second husband, and there is not the slightest suspicion so far as to her personal character. Rs. 30 per mensem, allowance fixed for her is, I think, very fair on the whole, and so I am not prepared to recommend either its reduction or its increase.

As to the minor boy now living with his mother, I cannot agree with the reasons given by the Magistrate for refusing to allow him maintenance. A boy of such tender age should, in my opinion, specially in a case like this, where the relations between his father and mother are so strained be best left with the mother, till the father is able to get his custody from the civil Courts: vide Hira Lal v. Sarasvahi (1). The criminal Courts have no right to decide about his custody, and it is too much to say, as the Magistrate has done in this case, that the child is not entitled to an allowance so long as he chooses to live with his mother. A boy of this age can have little or no choice being drawn to his mother only by natural instinct.

In view of the above reasons, I, therefore, submit the proceedings to the High Court and would recommend that something like Rs. 10 per mensem be allowed from 3rd June 1929 for the maintenance of the minor son so long as he is with his mother and unable to maintain himself, and that the revision application of Mt. Sita Devi be accepted to that extent.

Order.— This and the connected petition No. 552 of 1930, arise out of certain proceedings under S. 488, Criminal P. C., started at the instance of Mt. Sita Devi against her husband, Pandit Har Narain, pleader, for an order directing the latter to make a monthly allowance for her maintenance as well as for the maintenance of their son, Brij Bhoshan, aged four years.

The trial Magistrate in a careful judgment found that Pandit Har Narain had neglected and refused to maintain Mt. Sita Devi and ordered him to pay her a maintenance allowance at the rate of Rs. 30 per mensem with effect from the date of the application. He, however, dismissed the application so far as the claim for the maintenance for the boy was concerned as he was of opinion that the facts on the record did not establish that Pandit Har Narain had refused or neglected to maintain him and that, on the other hand, it appeared that he had been doing his level best not only to look to his maintenance but to provide comforts for him in proportion to his means.

Against this order a revision petition was presented to the District Magistrate on behalf of Mt. Sita Devi praying for an enhancement of the allowance which had been allowed to her by the Magistrate and also urging that the order of the Magistrate dismissing the petition so far as it related to the maintenance of the boy was erroneous and that separate allowance should be fixed for him. The learned District Magistrate found no reason to enhance the amount of allowance fixed by the Magistrate for Mt. Sita Devi and refused to make a recommendation to this Court in that behalf. He, however, has recommended that a separate allowance of Rs. 10 per mensem should be allowed for the maintenance of Brij Bhoshan minor. Pandit Har Narain also has preferred a petition for revision to this Court against the order of the trial Magistrate and has urged that no case has been made out for an order under S. 488 in favour of Mt. Sita Devi and that, in any case the amount of allowance fixed by the trial Magistrate is excessive and ought to be substantially reduced.

I have heard Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan on behalf of Pandit Har Narain and Mr. Gobind Ram Khanna on behalf of Mt. Sita Devi. After giving the case my best consideration I am of opinion that the order of the trial Magistrate was just and proper and that no interference is called for. As regards the prayer in the revision petition filed by Pandit Har Narain I have no doubt that the evidence on the record conclusively establishes that he has neglected and refused to maintain Mt. Sita Devi and is legally liable to give her suitable maintenance allowance. Having regard to the station in life of the parties and the other circumstances of the case, I do not consider the sum of Rs. 30 per mensem is by any means excessive for the maintenance of Mt. Sita Devi. I, therefore, dismiss Criminal Revision No. 552 of 1930.

As regards the prayer for a separate allowance for the boy: I find myself unable to accept the recommendation of the learned District Magistrate. It is hardly necessary to point out that in order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate to take proceedings under S. 438 the first essential is to find that the respondent had neglected or refused to maintain the person for whose maintenance an allowance is asked for. The learned trial Magistrate, after a careful and lengthy examination of the evidence, found as a fact that it had not been established that Pandit Har Narain had neglected or refused to maintain the boy. The learned District Magistrate in his order of reference has not found that this finding was incorrect. I. asked Mr. Gopind Ram Khanna to argue, if he could, that neglect or refusal on the part of Pandit Har Narain to maintain the boy had been established on the record, but the learned counsel was unable to put forward any cogent reasons for differing from the finding of the trial Magistrate on this point. For this reason alone, therefore, this petition must fail. The only ground given by the learned District Magistrate in support of his recommendation is that "it is best in the interest of the minor boy that he should be left with the mother till the father is able to get his custody from the civil Courts."

Howsoever desirable such an arrangement might be, it is not sufficient to invest criminal Courts with jurisdiction under S. 438. As pointed out above, an order under that section can be passed only if neglect or refusal to maintain the child is established, and there is no doubt that this has not been done in this case.

I, therefore, reject the recommendation of the learned District Magistrate and dismiss the petition of Mt. Sita Devi praying for a reversal of the order of the trial Magistrate refusing to grant separate allowance for the maintenance of Brij Bhoshan minor. Having regard to all the circumstances, I leave both parties to bear their own costs throughout.

* Legal Practitioners Act, S. 36—High Court can revise order passed under S. 36 in furtherance of justice by virtue of Government of India Act, S. 107.

High Court has power to revise orders passed under S. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act by reason of power of superintendence vested in the Court by S. 107 of the Government of India Act, but this power is of a very exceptional nature and cannot be invoked except in furtherance of justice : Cases reviewed.

Shamair Chand, Qabul Chand, Mohammad Amin and Nawal Kishore—for Petitioner.

Des Raj Sawhey—for the Crown.

Addison, J.—The District Judge of Hissar, after holding an enquiry under the Legal Practitioners Act, declared certain persons to be touts. A certain number of them came to this Court on the revision side, asking that the orders passed should be set aside. A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Crown that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such petitions and that the intention of the legislature appeared to be that an order passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act, should not be open to examination by this Court. The Single Judge before whom this question came was of opinion that the matter was one of considerable interest and importance, and he therefore referred the petitions to a Division Bench for decision as to whether this Court has or has not the power to interfere on the revision side in cases of this nature.

One of the first cases of this kind was In the matter of the petition of Madho Ram (1). A Division Bench in that case held that so far as an order passed under S. 36, Act 18, 1879 was concerned, the High Court could only interfere in the exercise of the powers of superintendence conferred upon it by S. 15, High Courts Act, 1861, and that it would not interfere even then when the sole ground on which its interference was asked for was that the decision of the District Judge was against the weight of evidence. S. 15, High Courts Act, has been replaced by S. 107, Government of India Act. That section enacts that "each of the High Courts has superintendence over all Courts for the time being, subject to its appellate jurisdiction."

In the Allahabad decision referred to, it was said that the law gave no right of appeal to the High Court from an order under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act. As regards revision such cases were clearly not criminal proceedings to which the revisional powers of the High Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C., could apply. Nor did they fall within the power of civil revision conferred by S. 622 (now 115), Civil P. C. But it was held that the High Court had no doubt very wide powers of superintendence over the proceedings of subordinate Courts by virtue of S. 15, High Courts Act. It was possible to imagine cases in which in the exercise of those powers it might find it its duty to interfere with an order passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act. For example the conditions prescribed by the section had of course to be observed, while no person's name could be included unless he had an opportunity of showing cause against such inclusion. Lastly, it was pointed out that a High Court was not competent under S. 15, High Courts Act, to interfere with the orders of subordinate Courts merely on the ground of an error in law or an error in fact. It seems to me that this decision states very clearly the powers of a High Court with reference to orders passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act.

Another Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court took the same view in Kashi Nath v. Emperor (2). It was said that the High Court had power under S. 107, Government of India Act, to call for and examine the record of any proceeding taken under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act, and to issue such orders or instructions as might appear to be proper and would hold it a valid ground for interference if the District Judge had disobeyed any specific direction of the Act. But it was further said that it would be straining the powers of interference and setting an undesirable precedent if the High Court were to take it upon itself in every case of the kind to consider whether the evidence relied upon by the District Judge was or was not evidence from which the High Court itself would have drawn the same inference. This again is a decision which, in my judgment, lays down clearly the powers of the High Court when examining the record of a proceeding under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act.

Another Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ghafoor Khan v. Emperor (3) assumed without discussion that it had power to interfere with such orders under the provisions of S. 107, Government of India Act. The final conclusion in this case appears to have been that there was nothing illegal in the procedure adopted for declaring the names of touts, and the revision could not, therefore, succeed.

A Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Bava Sahib v. Dist. Judge of Madras (4) held that a person affected by an order under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act could move the High Court under S. 622 (now 115), Civil P. C. The order passed by the District Judge in that case was modified in so far as the District Judge had acted in excess of his jurisdiction, but no further.

A Single Judge of the Madras High Court in Karadachariar v. Kalyanasundaram, A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 188, held that the High Court had power to interfere in revision, but it was not clearly stated on what basis this jurisdiction was founded.

In Hari Charan Sircar v. Dist. Judge, Dacca (5) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the High Court had power to revise orders passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act, but that this revisional jurisdiction was of a very special nature and could only be invoked in furtherance of justice. This comes to the same thing as basing the jurisdiction on S. 107, Government of India Act.

Another Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in In re Khandakar Mohammad Makhi (6) assumed that it had power to interfere, and it was held in that case that the name of a person cannot be inserted in the list of touts without making an enquiry in accordance with the provisions of S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act.

The first case that came before the Punjab Chief Court appears to be Channan Das v. Empress (7). At the time

S. 13, the Punjab Courts Act, vested the general superintendence and control over all other civil Courts in the Chief Court. This S. 13, which has now been repealed is practically in the same terms as S. 107, Government of India Act. It was held that the Chief Court was justified in interfering under S. 13, Punjab Courts Act 1884, where the District Magistrate omitted to consider the definition of a tout and held the person to be a tout although the acts necessary to constitute him such were not even alleged to exist. Again a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court, in Man Singh v. Emperor (8), held that it was competent to consider and deal with an illegal order passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act, by reason of the wide powers of superintendence given under S. 13, Punjab Courts Act. It was said that the Chief Court would not interfere with an order so passed unless it could be shown that the provisions of S. 36, had not been complied with, or for other good and substantial reason, such as an opportunity not having been given to the petitioner of showing cause against his name being included in the list. It was further stated that the Chief Court would interfere if it found that there was no evidence whatever to support the finding. The matter again came before a Single Judge of the Chief Court in Bute Khan v. Emperor (9). The previous decisions to the effect that the Chief Court had power under S. 13, Punjab Courts Act, to revise orders passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act, were followed.

A Single Judge of the Lahore High Court in Diwan Chand v. Emperor A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 227, interfered with an order passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act, but in the case it was assumed that there was jurisdiction to do so. In Fakir Chand v. Emperor (10) I assumed that I had jurisdiction to interfere with such an order and did so. The learned Chief Justice in Lakshmi Narain v. Mt. Ratni (11) held that this Court could, in the exercise of the power of general superintendence under S. 107, Government of India Act, send for the record of proceedings under S. 14, Legal Practitioners Act against a pleader and direct the transfer of the proceedings or pass such orders as it thought fit. It follows that this Court has power under S. 107, Government of India Act, to send for the record of proceedings under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act and to examine that record and to interfere if necessary in the ends of justice. In fact it has for long been held that the High Courts have under S. 107, Government of India Act, not only administrative but judicial powers. In the exercise of its powers of superintendence the High Court may direct a subordinate Court to do its duty. A High Court, however, would not be competent in the exercise of this power to interfere with or set right the order of a subordinate Court on the ground that the order of the subordinate Court has proceeded on an error of law or an error of fact. In the exercise of its superintending power it will not ordinarily interfere except in cases of grave and otherwise irreparable injustice e. g., a High Court will interfere with orders passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act, if the provisions of the section have not been complied with or if the person affected has not been given a full opportunity to meet the charge, brought against him, i.e., no order will be interfered with except for good and substantial reasons, including the absence of any evidence. A High Court, however, would not be justified in interfering when the ground urged was that the decision of the Court was against the weight of evidence. Again a mere irregularity in procedure which has not prejudiced the petitioner will be no ground for interference.

I would, therefore, reply to the question put to the Division Bench by the Single Judge that this Court has power of revision in the limited sense set out above. In other words, I would hold that the High Court has power to revise orders passed under S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act, by reason of power of superintendence vested in the Court by S. 107, Government of India Act, but this power is of a very exceptional nature and cannot be invoked except in the furtherance of justice.

The cases should now go back to the Single Judge for disposal.

Shamair Chand and Mohd. Amin—for Appellant.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Ram Saran Das has been convicted under S. 124-A, I. P. C., for having made a seditious speech at a meeting held in the Rohtak Mandi on 25th January 1930 and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three years.

The questions to be decided in the appeal are :

(1) What is the text of the speech which the appellant made on the occasion in question ?

(2) Whether that speech falls within the purview of S. 124-A, I. P. C. ? and

(3) If so, whether the sentence awarded by the learned trial Magistrate is appropriate ?

With regard to the first point the prosecution have placed on the record the following materials :

(i) A report of the speech, Ex. P. E. prepared by Jai Gopal, Sub-Inspector, P. W. 3, from pencil notes, Ex. P. D., which had been taken down at the meeting by Amar Singh, Head Constable, (P. W. 2).

(ii) A report of the speech, Ex. P. M., alleged to have been prepared by a District Board Contractor, Ram Dya. (P. W. 6), under the instructions of Gobind Ram (P. W. 5), all of whom claim to have been present at the meeting.

(iii) The oral evidence given at the trial by the above-mentioned persons and Fazal Ali, lambardar (P. W. 7), and Ram Nand, carpenter (P. W. 8).

It will be convenient to take first

Ex. P. M. and the evidence of Gobind Ram, Balram and Ram Dya. The speech, as reported in Ex. P. M., is admittedly much stronger than that in Ex. P. E. or P. D. This report was originally stated by the prosecution to have been prepared by Ram Dya under instructions of the zaildar and the sufaidposh. In the course of cross-examination of these witnesses it, however, transpired that the original notes taken by Ram Dya were not forthcoming and Gobind Ram admitted that several "points" were added in Ex. P. M., which had been omitted by Ram Dya in his pencil notes, as he was not a fast writer. It was also conceded that Ex. P. M. instead of being in the handwriting of Ram Dya was actually written by a retired police constable Badri Prasad (D. W. 1), who is alleged to have suddenly arrived at Gobind Ram's house when the notes were being fair copied, and who has now appeared as a witness for the defence. Again we find that the statement of these witnesses as to the time, place and occasion when Ex. P. M. was prepared is discrepant in material particulars. According to Ex. P. M. one of the persons present at the meeting, was Pt. Ramphul Singh, pleader (D. W. 3). But it is proved that this gentleman was at Sonapat at the time, and it is significant that his name is not mentioned in Exs. P. D. or P. E., which were prepared by the police. There are several other points which thoroughly discredit this report. After careful consideration I have no hesitation in holding that Ex. P. M. is not a true and faithful report of the speech in question. In his argument the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer also did not place much reliance on it and I, therefore, leave it out of account.

The oral evidence of Gobind Ram, sufaidposh, Balram, zaildar, Ram Dya and Fazal Ali, lambardars and Rama Nand is also very unsatisfactory. Each of these witnesses has tried to give a highly coloured version of the speech and to put in the mouth of the appellant expressions like "Government is zalim" and "it sucks the blood of the poor" which are not to be found in the police report Ex. P. D. or P. E. These witnesses state that on hearing the speech of the appellant their feelings were roused against the Government, but as they come out of the meeting they thought better of it, and regained their good will towards it. A perusal of their depositions, however, leaves no doubt that they attended the meeting with the sole object of finding an excuse for making reports against the speakers, with a view to secure personal advantage to themselves. Two of them Balram and Gobind Ram stated that some years ago they had been granted two squares of land and a jagir respectively for services rendered during the Great War, and it is in evidence that an impression had gone about that services on the present occasion would also be similarly rewarded. It is obvious that it was for this reason that Balram and Gobind Ram, who themselves are persons of little or no education, engaged the services of Ram Dya to take notes of the proceedings, and after having these notes edited and amplified as Ex. P. M. on the following day and affixing their own signatures on it gave it to the Tahsildar. It is significant that within a short time after the submission of this report Ram Dya, who was formerly a pleader's munshi, and is now a contractor, secured four or five contracts from the District Board though there is no indication of his having been so lucky before. In the witness box these persons contradicted each other on several points and gave inconsistent and discrepant accounts of the same incident. Their evidence is unreliable on the face of it and I am constrained to reject it as such.

It remains now to consider the reports Exs. P. D. and P. E. which are in the handwriting of Amar Singh, Head Constable (P. W. 2), and Jai Gopal Sub-Inspector (P. W. 3), respectively. Both these persons were present at the meeting and Amar Singh took down the notes of the speech in pencil just as it was being delivered. Next morning these notes were faircopied by Jai Gopal, (P. W. 3) as Ex. P. E., which was submitted by him in due course to the authorities. I have carefully examined these documents with the assistance of both counsel and find that they agree with each other on all material points. Both Amar Singh and Jai Gopal appeared as witnesses at the trial and were cross-examined at length, but nothing was brought out to throw doubt on the accuracy of these reports. The only ground which Mr. Shamair Chand was able to put forward for discrediting them is that they had been prepared by police officials. He argued that a document of this kind should be presumed to be suspicious. I can find no warrant for making any such presumption. A policeman's testimony, like that of every other witness, must be judged on its merits, and should be accepted or rejected according to the circumstances disclosed in each particular case. In the case before me I can find nothing suspicious about Ex. P. D., and after giving due weight to the arguments of counsel I see no reason to doubt its correctness. The defence have not led any evidence to point out any inaccuracies in the report. Indeed it is significant that none of the witnesses produced by the appellant attempted to say one word as to what the contents or the nature of the speech in question were. The accused in the written statement which he filed before the Magistrate gave a brief summary of his speech, and though it differs from Ex. P. D. in some important points, the framework of the speech, as given in it, is substantially the same as that of Ex. P. D. I hold therefore that on the whole this document gives a true and faithful account of the speech and the guilt or innocence of the appellant must be judged on it.

The speech as reported in Ex. P. D. or P. E. contains some passages to which exception has been taken by the learned Magistrate and which he has held as falling within the purview of S. 124-A and adding to the gravity of the offence. Some of these, however, appear to me to be innocent, whether taken singly or along with the context. As an instance I might refer to the speaker's criticism of the appointment and composition of the "Simon Commission" and to his remarks that the Commissioners travelled in comfort from Bombay to other big cities but did not visit the villages, where there are "no roads, no hospitals for men or cattle to get medicines from or schools," where insanitary conditions prevail and malaria rages, and for this reason they are not likely to form a correct estimate of the poverty of people living in rural areas. The learned Magistrate appears to have been much impressed by this part of the speech, and after holding that he "incited bad feelings against the Government" has emphasized the fact that he "even blackmailed the Simon Commission." The exact meaning of this expression, as it stands, is not clear. It has been suggested that by a slip of the pen, the word "blackmail" has been erroneously used for the not very elegant word "blackguard". Be that as it may there is no doubt that by no stretch of language can these references to the Simon Commission be held punishable under S. 124-A, I. P. C., or add to the gravity of the offence, if the speech could otherwise be brought within its purview.

The same may be said of the reference in the speech to the economic drain from India caused by the export of foodstuffs and other raw materials, in exchange for which a "motor-car of Rs. 6,000 is sent back, which after a few years become useless and means an expense of four or five rupees in maintaining it."

Another matter to which the learned Magistrate has referred, and which was also stressed before me by the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer is the instigation alleged to have been made by the appellant that the Congress was originally started at the suggestion of the Government and that when some of its leading members in early days became opposed to Government they were appointed to big offices. This statement again whether it is in fact true or not cannot be said to be seditious. If anything, it is a condemnation of the honesty of the Congressmen of those days and has no bearing on the real question before me.

But while views like these described above are innocent, there is no room for doubt that the speech contains several passages which offended against the wide provisions of the section. I do not think it necessary or desirable to give wider publicity to those passages by incorporating them in this judgment. It will be sufficient to say that the language in which the appellant referred to the "War of Independence" of 1857, which "unluckily failed," is advise to his hearers to attain the same object, though by different means and other similar expressions clearly offend against S. 124-A, and are sufficient to sustain the conviction.

As regards the sentence, the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer has very frankly and properly admitted that it is excessive and is heavier than any other sentence passed under S. 124-A which had come to his notice. In awarding this sentence the learned Judge has taken into consideration, besides the speech in question, certain other matters, e. g., the circumstances that during the progress of the trial the appellant at the time entering the Court-room raised certain cries and recited a certain couplet in Urdu. There is, however, no evidence on this point, nor even a note by the Magistrate on the record, and Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellant does not admit the correctness of this statement. This being so, it is not necessary to decide, to what extent and for what purpose such conduct on the part of the appellant could have, if at all, been taken into consideration.

The learned Magistrate has also referred to certain other speeches which are alleged to have been made by the appellant on other occasions, before and after 25th January 1930. Pencil "notes" of some of these speeches have been placed on the record, but they have not been subjected to close examination either by the Magistrate or by counsel for the parties. In these circumstances, and having regard to the manner in which Ex. P. M. has been prepared and produced in this case, I consider it highly unsafe to accept these reports as containing a true and correct version of these speeches. I think, therefore, that must be left out of account. It may be stated that the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer very properly admitted that these reports, even if they were accepted as correct, are not of much use in judging the intention of the appellant in this case, as his intention appears to be quite clear from Ex. P. D. there being no ambiguity whatsoever about it.

In the judgment the learned Magistrate also has dealt on the "Bolshevik tendency" of the appellant. I cannot, however, find any trace of any such tendencies, either in the speech as reported in Ex. P. D. or in the other facts proved at the trial.

It is, therefore, clear that the learned Magistrate has relied upon several extrinsic matters and the sentence imposed by him is disproportionately excessive. It was conceded for the Crown that the appellant did not in terms advocate violence in any shape or form, nor can I find anything in the speech which might by implication or innuendo suggest its use. On the question of sentence both counsel have cited a number of rulings before me. As those cases proceeded on their peculiar facts it is unnecessary to discuss them here. The case which can, however, be taken as a safe guide is that of Ram Chandra v. Emperor (1) in which the offending article was admittedly stronger than the speech now in question but where Addison, J., sentenced the convict to rigorous imprisonment for six months, with a fine of Rs. 150. Having regard to the facts of the present case and keeping in view all the circumstances, I think that the ends of justice will be met by sentencing the appellant to rigorous imprisonment for four months.

I, therefore, maintain the conviction but accept the appeal to this extent that the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for three years is reduced to that of four months.

Sis Ram and others—Accused—Respondents.

Criminal Revn. No. 258 of 1930, Decided on 1st May 1930, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Rohtak, on 17th February 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 145—Order without notice and finding as to danger of breach of peace is ultra vires.

The provisions of S. 145 (1) are mandatory and consequently if no notice is issued as required and there is no finding that there was a danger of breach of peace, the order under S. 145 becomes ultra vires: A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 91, Rel. on. [P 991 C 2; P 992 C 1]

Qabul Chand and Shamair Chand—for Respondents.

Facts.—One Gopi, a kamin by caste, made an application under S. 145, Criminal P. C., that a house belonging to him in Bhawar village was forcibly taken possession of by Sis Ram and two other Jats, that he had collected material for rebuilding it but was stopped from doing so, and that there was an imminent danger of breach of the peace. On that very day he made another application requesting the Magistrate to see the spot. The Magistrate did not record any preliminary order as required by law and fixed 26th July for inspection of the spot. After inspection of the spot he issued no notice to the other party nor did he affix any copy of this notice to some conspicuous place at or near the house in dispute. He simply noted on the file that he had informed Sis Ram of the date. Now Sis Ram is only one of the other party. There are two other real brothers of Sis Ram also concerned in this case, who were not informed by the Magistrate. After getting the written statement of the other side and recording evidence produced by both parties, the Magistrate restored the possession of the house to the applicant.

Grounds.—The application for revision of this order has been presented to me on the following grounds: (1) That the Magistrate did not record any preliminary order and that the procedure adopted by him is illegal, and that therefore the Magistrate had no jurisdiction in this case. (2) That no notice was served upon the other party according to law, nor was a copy of this notice affixed to some conspicuous place at or near the house in dispute. (3) That in his final order he did not say that there was any imminent danger of breach of the peace, and that therefore that order was not justified.

In support of his pleas for revision Rai Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand quotes Abdulla v. Gunda (1) and Teku v. Buta Singh (2). In my opinion the provisions of law have not been observed in this case which were mandatory and therefore all the proceedings of the Magistrate are vitiated. I therefore recommend that the order of the Magistrate may be quashed and a retrial ordered.

Order.—I agree with the learned District Magistrate that the order of the Magistrate under S. 145, Criminal P. C., in this case was ultra vires. No notice was issued as required by the section and there is no finding that there was a danger of a breach of the peace. In these circumstances the order must be set aside: see *Hakam v. Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1568 of 1929. Decided on 14th February 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Multan. D/- 19th August 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 239—Two persons abducting girl—Third person not taking part in abduction cheating purchaser of girl by false representation as to her caste—Transactions cannot be said to be same.

A transaction of abduction for which two persons have been convicted cannot be said to be part of the same transaction when a third person, not alleged to have taken part in the abduction, proceeds to cheat by false representation as to caste, etc., of the girl, a person who buys the girl, there being no continuity of purpose, nor any contiguity of time.

B. R. Puri—for Petitioner.

S. L. Puri for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The joint trial of all these persons has not been justified by counsel for the Crown. He refers only to S. 239 (d) and contends that the transaction was one. I am unable to see how the transaction of abduction for which two persons have been convicted is part of the same transaction when a third person not alleged to have taken part in the abduction proceeded to cheat by false representation as to the caste, etc., of the girl, a person who bought the girl. There does not seem any continuity of purpose nor any contiguity of time. I therefore accept the revision and quash the conviction and the sentences as the trial was wholly illegal.

Criminal P. C., S. 350—S. 350 has no application to cases tried in a Court of Sessions.

Consent cannot give jurisdiction in a criminal trial. S. 350 only applies to Magistrates and not to cases tried in a Court of Sessions. Where the judgment is written and sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, but practically the whole of the evidence was recorded by the Additional Sessions Judge, the conviction cannot stand even though the accused agrees to the dealing with the case by the Sessions Judge: 26 Bom. 50 and 35 All. 63, Rel. on.

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted under S. 304, I. P. C., and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, and he appeals against the conviction and sentence. It is quite clear that the conviction cannot stand. The judgment was written and sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, but practically the whole of the evidence was recorded by the Additional Sessions Judge who was transferred when only one witness remained to be examined for the defence. The Sessions Judge mentions this fact in his judgment, but says that the accused agreed to his dealing with the case.

Consent cannot give jurisdiction in a criminal trial. The learned Judge appears to have considered himself as acting under S. 350, Criminal P. C., but this section only applies to Magistrates. It has no application to cases tried in a Court of Sessions, and I would draw the learned Judge's attention to Emperor v. Sakharam (1) and Emperor v. Badri Prasad (2). I therefore set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the case be retried by the Additional Sessions Judge of Tharrawaddy.

Emperor—Opposite Party.Criminal Misc. Case No. 423 of 1929, Decided on 6th January 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 526—Ground for transfer is not to be decided in abstract—What is to be determined is whether Magistrate behaved so as to give legitimate ground for fear of impartial trial.

The matter is not to be decided in abstract whether a certain Magistrate would deal with a matter impartially or not. The question always is whether through some error or unfortunate accident the Magistrate has behaved in a way to give legitimate ground for fear to one party or the other. [P 993 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 526 and 162—When copy of statement of witnesses before police is asked for, Court is bound to grant same insisting on a written application and refusal to grant them on misapprehension of law or flimsy pretext are enough circumstances to make accused believe that Magistrate had no desire to be fair to him.

When a copy of a written statement made by a witness before the police is asked for, it is the bounden duty of the Magistrate, and it does not depend upon his volition or good will that he should refer to the statement made before the police and furnish a copy or record a definite order that he did not think it expedient in the interests of justice to furnish the accused with the copy. Nor can he insist upon a written application for the same, an oral request being sufficient. Therefore, insistence on a written application and refusal to grant copies on misapprehension of law laid down under S. 162 or on other flimsy pretext are enough circumstances to give the accused person reasonable belief that the Magistrate had no desire to be fair to him : 36 Cal. 560, Ref.

Zahur Ahmad—for Applicant.

U. S. Bajpai, A. P. Dube and S. B. L. Gour—for the Crown.

Judgment.—I have gone through the various affidavits and the explanation of the Magistrate who is trying the different cases. Unfortunately, the cases have assumed a communal aspect as the dispute is between Hindus and Mahomedans. I well realize that in such a case the class to which the Magistrate belongs raises a suspicion in the opposite class, and, therefore, in cases of transfer where communal interests are involved a transfer should be granted with considerable hesitation. In the present case, however, I am afraid that the trying Magistrate has shown a certain amount of irritation and behaved in a way which would give legitimate cause to the Mahomedans to think that they would not receive justice in his Court. As I have often stated from this Bench, the matter is not to be decided in the abstract whether a certain Magistrate would deal with a matter impartially or not. The question always would be whether through some error or unfortunate accident the Magistrate has behaved in a way to give legitimate ground for fear to one party or the other. In this case such legitimate ground does exist. First of all certain Mahomedans were prosecuted by the police out of several against whom a complaint was made by the Hindus. When others were not prosecuted a complaint was made in Court and the Magistrate without holding any inquiry under S. 202, Criminal P. C., promptly ordered all the Mahomedans to be prosecuted at the same time. It is true that the complaint was made prior to the result of the police inquiry. Even so, when the favourable result of the police inquiry was available to some of the Mahomedans it would have been better if the Magistrate had waited until the completion of the inquiry in the case sent up by the police before ordering the prosecution of men whose prosecution was not desired by the police. A certain amount of confusion must arise and the defence must be prejudiced when the police case is mixed up with the case put forward by a partial complainant. It is rightly pointed out on behalf of those who are prosecuted by the police that by the complainant spreading wide his net to include all the Mahomedans, the persons prosecuted by the police have been deprived of defence witnesses because those who were prosecuted on the private complaint were the witnesses for those prosecuted by the police.

Secondly, the Magistrate has passed a most extraordinary order on the prayer of the Mahomedan accused for a copy of the statements of witnesses recorded by the police. Under S. 162, Criminal P. C., a witness who was examined by the police and whose statement was recorded by the police may be cross-examined if in Court he makes a statement in conflict with the statement made by him before the police. The Magistrate has a curious idea that the person to be contradicted is the police officer who recorded the statement and not the witness who made conflicting statements. He even goes to the length of informing the public that such is the law "as it exists" meaning thereby that the law was different previously. As is usual with Magistrates, I am certain that a copy of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not handy for this Magistrate to refer to, and he never read the provisions of that section before recording this most amazing order.

Another thing is that there was no necessity to insist on the Mahomedan accused putting in an application. An oral request ought to be entertained as the law does not prescribe any application. To ask for a reason is another amazing order when every Magistrate ought to know that when a statement is required under S. 162 it must be required for the purpose of contradicting a witness. Another noticeable matter is that the application was filed on 19th July, and no order thereon was passed till 30th September. It appears to me that the order was passed on 30th September, merely for the purposes of the record and that the Magistrate had no desire to carry out orders of the law under S. 162. The procedure is well laid down in Salt v. Emperor (1) by a Bench of two Judges of the Calcutta High Court. The rule laid down there was that when a copy of a statement made by a witness before the police is asked for it is the bounden duty of the Magistrate, and it does not depend upon his volition or good will, that he should refer to the statement made before the police and furnish a copy, or record a definite order that he did not think it expedient in the interests of justice to furnish the accused with such a copy. The irritation shown by the Magistrate in first of all insisting on an application from an accused person who in every case has to be given facility for his defence, secondly, in passing an order more than two months afterwards on the application, and, thirdly, in giving a most amazing reason for the refusal of the copy, would naturally give an accused person reasonable belief that the Magistrate had no desire to be fair to him.

In one case the prosecution was no doubt on behalf of the police, yet there was a Mahomedan complainant. When that complainant applied for stay so that he may request this Court to transfer the case, the Magistrate again took an exceedingly narrow view. He gave it out as his opinion that the Mahomedan was not the complainant and that he had no right to apply to this Court for transfer. In ordinary language the Mahomedan was certainly a complainant even though the prosecution was launched by the police. The refusal to grant a postponement which was absolutely compulsory under the law may have been an error of judgment but yet combined with the other actions of the Magistrate would create an impression of fear in the minds of the Mahomedans.

It appears that this Magistrate made a local inquiry. Mr. Dube on behalf of the opposite party was under the impression that the inquiry was made for some report to be submitted to Government. If so the inquiry was of a nature in which the Magistrate had to arrive at some conclusion, and I do not think that such a Magistrate would approach an inquiry in Court with an open mind. Reference was made on behalf of the opposite party to the explanation under S. 556, Criminal P. C., that the local inquiry did not deprive a Magistrate of jurisdiction. That merely means that the local inquiry would not amount to a necessity for transfer but there may be circumstances under which it would be advisable to direct a transfer from the Court of a Magistrate who has made a local inquiry.

I direct the transfer of all the cases to which these five applications for transfer relate from the Court of Mr. Chandra Mani to the Court of some other Magistrate having jurisdiction in the Etawah District. The District Magistrate is requested to fix upon such a Court. The trial shall proceed from the stage where it was left off. I have

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal, Revn. No. 154 of 1930, Decided on 26th May 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Agra, D/- 29th October 1929.

U. P. Municipalities Act, S. 82—Interest in contract doubtful—Still permission of Commissioner is necessary.

A member of the Board acquiring share or interest in any contract must obtain permission in writing of the Commissioner. Where there is doubt as regards the interest, the Commissioner should be applied to for permission.

K. D. Malaviya—for Applicant.

Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The applicant has been convicted under S. 168, I. P. C., read with S. 82, Municipalities Act, in that while he was a public servant, i. e. a Municipal Commissioner, he had an interest in a contract made with the Board. This application is only before me on the revisional side of the Court, but the facts are of such importance to the public that it is desirable that they should have full publicity. The facts found are that the Board had some difficulty in arranging for the supply of gram to the conservancy bullocks. Whether these difficulties were genuine difficulties or manufactured in order to prepare the way for entering into an irregular arrangement with the applicant, there is no evidence. The applicant in 1926 was a member of the firm of Gobindram Chunnil Lal, grain-dealers. He apparently began to supply gram for the conservancy bullocks to the Board through his firm, Gobindram Chunnilal, on 5th May 1926. He apparently had either some doubts himself as to the risk that he might be incurring by this course of action, or thought that someone who was hostile to him might make capital of it. He has been given the credit by the lower appellate Court of the most favourable view of his application to the Board (Ex. 121) of 3rd June 1926, to the effect that he and the man who was associated with him in the supply of gram felt that their position might be invidious.

Upon the application a resolution of the Board (Ex. 114), dated 30th June 1926, was passed to the effect that the applicant and the man associated with him should supervise the buying of gram at market rates. This gram then continued to be supplied by the applicant's firm, Gobindram Chunnilal, up to 21st September 1926, when the firm's name was changed to Bansidhar Rekhabdas, and apparently the object of this change was to conceal the fact that the same firm was really continuing to supply the gram. There is no reason to suppose that this suspicion is not well founded, and the applicant in any case has only himself to blame, for he has refused to produce his account books. The supply of gram continued in this way up to 3rd March 1928, when the matter was brought to the notice of the authorities and this prosecution was instituted. The learned Magistrate sentenced Bhairo Prasad to nine months' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500. The lower appellate Court substituted for the sentence of imprisonment a further fine of Rs. 300. Mr. K. D. Malaviya has urged every point that could be urged on behalf of the applicant, but I am quite satisfied that there is no force in any of them. He has urged that Cl. (f) of the proviso to S. 82, Municipalities Act, excepts from the prohibition in S. 82 "occasional" dealings. Apart altogether from the question whether Cl. (f) can be held to be in force at all seeing that, as I am told, the Government has not fixed any maximum, I have no hesitation in holding that though the supply of gram may have been irregular so far as dates and possibly even quantities were concerned, the term "occasional" is wholly inapplicable to a continuing arrangement for supply as needed. Nor is there any room for a suggestion that the applicant was under a mistake of fact which might enable him to plead S. 79, I. P. C.

It was suggested to me in the course of argument that the case was due to somebody having sent an anonymous letter and to hostility entertained towards the applicant by certain persons. This is, of course, wholly immaterial. All that we are concerned with is whether the applicant did or did not commit an offence within S. 168, I. P. C., and in view of the great interest of the public in the probity of its representatives on the Board it is a matter for sincere congratulation when such a case is disclosed whether by an anonymous petition or otherwise. On the question of sentence I am asked to hold that the fine is too severe. I think that there is grave reason for suspecting the bona fides of Bhairo Prasad, the applicant, throughout this matter, and I find reasons for that opinion in two facts. According to the account that he himself gave, there was a discussion between him and others as to the propriety of his entering upon this transaction at all. That being so it is impossible to conceive that he did not consider the terms of S. 82, Municipalities Act, and from that section it is immediately apparent that where there is doubt the Commissioner should be applied to for his permission. Notwithstanding the discussion and doubt that arose in regard to the propriety of his action he refrained, and it is fair to say he deliberately refrained, from applying to the Commissioner. Further, he has refused to produce his accounts and has only himself to blame if conclusions unfavourable to him are drawn from that fact also. I think, therefore, that he was fortunate to have the sentence of imprisonment reduced to one of fine. The application is dismissed.

Paras Ram—Accused—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. 166 of 1930, Decided on 27th May 1930.

(a) Public Gambling Act (3 of 1867), S. 6—Warrant illegal—Presumption does not arise.

The presumption under S. 6 would not arise if it is found that the warrant was an illegal warrant. [P 996 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 114, Illus. (b)—Accomplice must be corroborated.

Evidence of accomplice requires corroboration. [P 996 C 2]

* F. O. O'Neill—for Applicant.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Paras Ram applies in revision from his conviction under S. 3 read with S. 15, Gambling Act (3 of 1867, and a sentence of nine months' rigorous imprisonment. It may be that Paras Ram, who is said to have previous convictions, had started anew to keep a common gaming house, and if that is so, it is unfortunate that the defect in the warrant should lead, as it must lead in the state of the evidence, in this case, to his acquittal.

The presumption under S. 6, Gambling Act, could not arise as it has been found that the warrant was an illegal warrant, and that position is not challenged. The presumption, failing, it could be proved otherwise that the house was being used as a common gaming house, and the prosecution has endeavoured to prove this by the evidence of two witnesses Md. Yusuf and Mula. These are men who were actually among the alleged gamblers who were caught in the room. The Magistrate purported to examine them as witnesses under S. 10; it may be, I have not got to decide the point, that persons who are examined by virtue of the power given by S. 10 are not to be regarded as approvers or as accomplices in the sense that their evidence cannot be acted upon without corroboration. I have no need to consider this point because I am of opinion that S. 10 was inapplicable to the case. The house referred to in S. 10 must be one "entered under the provisions of this Act." The house was not entered under the provisions of this Act, in that there was neither a legal warrant, nor was there present in charge any officer of the rank specified in S. 5.

The fact, however, that S. 10 is not applicable to the case would not prevent the Magistrate from examining these two persons in the ordinary way as witnesses. So examined, however, they are clearly accomplices and as such their evidence requires corroboration. The Crown finds itself unable to point out any corroboration, and in fact there is no hint of any corroboration of the statement of these two witnesses, so far as they purport to show that it was a common gaming house. The presumption under S. 6 then failing, the Magistrate having no power to examine under S. 10 and therefore in any event there being no question of any special character attaching to the witnesses by virtue of examination under S. 10, and there being no corroboration of the witnesses regarded as ordinary witnesses not examined under S. 10, there is not legal basis for the conviction. The application is allowed and the conviction and sentence set aside and the applicant will be released unless his lawful detention is required for any other purpose. His bail bond in this matter is discharged.

Bashir—Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 256 of 1930, Decided on 17th June 1930, made by Dist. Magistrate, Dehra Dun, on 9th April 1930.

* Criminal P. C., Ss. 438 and 439 (5)—S. 439 (5) cannot constitute bar to District Magistrate's action under S. 438 in case of acquittal by a Magistrate since Local Government and District Magistrate are distinct and non-interchangeable terms.

A District Magistrate and the Local Government are two distinct and non-interchangeable terms, and the District Magistrate not being the person entitled to appeal against the acquittal by a Magistrate, the mere fact that he may be able in his executive capacity to move the Local Government to appeal under S. 439 (5) cannot bar his taking action under S. 438: 24 All. 346, Dist. [P 997 C 2]

M. Wakiullah—for the Crown.

Inahimudullah—for Accused.

Order.—This is a case of a reference by the District Magistrate asking that an acquittal should be set aside and the case sent back for retrial. The ground of the reference is that the accused was acquitted by the Magistrate of a charge of harbouring only because that person had not yet been convicted though proceedings were pending against him whom the present accused was charged with harbouring. The person alleged to have been harboured has been since convicted. The accused was not acquitted on the merits. If the Magistrate thought it necessary, I do not say it was necessary, but if he thought it necessary, to know the result of the trial of the person who was alleged to have been harboured for the offence which he was alleged to have committed, he should have adjourned the trial and awaited the result of the other trial. The only contention which could be raised here against the reference is that the powers vested in the District Magistrate under S. 438, Criminal P. C., are shut out by sub-S. 5, S. 439, because the Local Government should have appealed and has not done so. This is to confound the Local Government with the District Magistrate as if the two terms were interchangeable.

It is manifest that the Local Government could appeal, but it could so appeal even if the District Magistrate thought that it should not appeal. The two terms not being interchangeable I can see no reason, whatever why sub-S. 5, S. 439, should be held to constitute any bar to the District Magistrate taking action under S. 438. For the accused my attention is drawn to the case In the matter of Sheikh Aminuddin (1). There two Judges of this Court refused to hold themselves barred from entertaining a reference under S. 438 by S. 439 (5). They did, however, go on to hold that as a matter of their discretion they declined to exercise their powers under S. 439 where the Local Government might have appealed, and where the Magistrate could have moved the Local Government if he so chose. It is possible that in that case the acquittal had been on what the Magistrate considered to be an acquittal. It has been based on a mistaken view of the course which the Magistrate ought to adopt. That may not be a material distinction, but the decision quoted is one where their Lordships acted in the exercise of a discretion, and I am certainly not bound by it. The District Magistrate not being the Local Government is not the person entitled to appeal, whether or not he may be able in his executive capacity to move the Local Government to appeal. I see no reason therefore why his judicial powers should be restricted.

Accepting the reference, I set aside the acquittal and direct the trial Court to take up the case again from the stage at which it had reached immediately before the order of acquittal was passed.

Mohamed Sharif — Defendant — Appellant.

Nasir Ali and others — Plaintiff and Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1958 of 1927, Decided on 18th June 1930, from decree of Sub-Judge, Bulandshahr, D/- 22nd August 1927.

(a) Police Act (5 of 1861), S. 42—Police Act provision of three months' period for suits is repealed by Limitation Act (1871)—Suits are now subject to general law of limitation in Limitation Act.

On the passing of the Limitation Act (9 of 1871) the part of S. 42, Police Act (5 of 1861), which provides a period of three months for suits contemplated by it was repealed with the result that such suits became subject to the general law of limitation contained in the Limitation Act and the special provision of limitation contained in S. 42, Police Act (5 of 1861), ceased to be operative. [P 1000 C 1]

* (b) Limitation Act, S. 15—Claim against joint defendants—Notice necessary against only one defendant—Period of notice given is excluded in computing period of limitation for suit.

If it is necessary for the plaintiff to bring a suit claiming relief against all the defendants jointly, and if notice under enactment was necessary against one defendant only and was in fact given, the period of notice is to be excluded in computing the period of limitation for the suit and not merely so far as the defendant to whom notice was given is concerned : A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 549, Ref. [P 1001 C 1, 2]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 80 — Police Inspector acting in official capacity.

Police Inspector proceeded to the scene of offence on receipt of the report forwarded to him by the head muharri. His subsequent report complaining of assault and obstruction by the plaintiff and his party was made by him in his capacity as police officer. One of the offences with which the plaintiff was charged was that under S. 332, I. P. C. Plaintiff was acquitted and suit was filed by him for damages for malicious prosecution.

Held : that the Police Inspector was acting in his official capacity and that it was imperative on the plaintiff to give notice to him of the suit for malicious prosecution : A. I. R. 1924 All. 851, Foll. ; 5 I. C. 467, Dist. [P 1000 C 2] (d) Police Act (5 of 1861), S. 42—Scope.

Section 42 refers to actions for "anything done or intended to be done under the provisions or under the general police powers."

Where a suit has been brought against police officer for damages for something done in the exercise of his powers under Criminal P. C., Police Act, S. 42, does not apply : 80 I. C. 178, Foll. [P 1001 C 1]

(e) Malicious Prosecution—Finding as to conspiracy of three defendants, including police officer to prosecute plaintiff maliciously—Plaintiff held to be entitled to sue all three defendants for damages.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the finding was that all the three defendants conspired to prosecute the plaintiff maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause and that in furtherance of their design one of the defendants figured as the complainant in a cognizable offence of which information was lodged by him to the police and the latter prosecuted the plaintiff on the faith of such information. Evidence, in the case, was given by all the three.

Held : that under these circumstances, all the three defendants, including the police officer were rightly considered by the trial Court to have prosecuted the plaintiff so as to entitle the latter to sue them for compensation for malicious prosecution : 80 All. 525 (P.C.) ; A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 46, Rel. on. [P 1002 C 1]

K. N. Katju—for Appellant.

Judgment.—These two appeals arise out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent Syed Nasir Ali for recovery of Rs. 1,000 as damages for malicious prosecution. Defendant 1, Sharif, was a Police Inspector stationed at Khurja at the time when the offences for which the plaintiff-respondent was prosecuted were alleged to have been committed. Syed Zafar Ali and Aftab Husain, defendants 2 and 3, who are brothers, are related to the plaintiff. On 11th January 1924 defendant 2 made a report at the Khurja Police Station that his house, which is contiguous to that of the plaintiff, had been raided by the plaintiff and his associates and that he (defendant 2) closed his doors to prevent the raiders getting into his house and made good his escape by jumping down the roof of his house. As the officer-in-charge of the police station was indisposed, the head muharri forwarded the report to the Circle Inspector, defendant 1, who, accompanied by a few constables, proceeded to the scene of occurrence. Subsequently at about 12 p. m. the Circle Inspector made a report at the thana that, while he and the constables were proceeding to the scene of occurrence, the party were waylaid by the plaintiff and a few others and beaten. This was said to have occurred between 6 and 7 p. m. Defendant 1 was under orders of transfer to Saharanpur and left Khurja next day. The offences with which the plaintiff and his party were charged by defendant 1 in the report already mentioned were those under Ss. 332 and 147, I. P. C., i. e., voluntarily causing hurt to deter public servant from his duty and rioting. The officer-in-charge of the police station made an investigation which resulted in the plaintiff's prosecution for those offences before the Joint Magistrate, who acquitted the plaintiff and his co-accused on 27th March 1924. The suit which has given rise to these appeals was instituted on 27th May 1925 on the allegation that defendant 1 and Syed Zafar Ali, defendant 2, who is an Honorary-Magistrate, and defendant 3 conspired to bring a groundless charge against the plaintiff without reasonable and probable cause and maliciously. The Munsif, in whose Court the suit was brought, dismissed it on 22nd March 1926. On appeal the learned District Judge of Bulandshahr sent back the case to the Munsif on the ground that the latter had improperly refused to examine certain witnesses whom the plaintiff desired to produce and directed him to submit fresh findings after recording the evidence of such witnesses.

In the meantime the Munsif, who had dismissed the suit, was transferred and was succeeded by another officer, who recorded the evidence which the appellate Court had directed to be taken and found in favour of the plaintiff on all the material questions arising in the case. On receipt of the findings the learned District Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 700 against all the defendants. Second Appeal No. 1958 of 1927 has been preferred by defendant 1 and Second Appeal No. 2260 of 1927 has been preferred by defendants 2 and 3. To clear the ground for a consideration of the questions of law which have been argued before us we should state the findings of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court which must be accepted as conclusive on second appeal. It has been found by the learned District Judge concurrently with the finding of the Court of first instance after remand that defendant 1 and defendant 2 were on friendly terms; that there was ill-feeling between the plaintiff and defendants 2 and 3 in consequence of disputes about a certain zamindari; that in June 1923 proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., were taken by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Khurja, against the plaintiff and defendants 2 and 3; that a report of defendant 1 then made was unduly favourable to defendants 2 and 3 and that the evidence otherwise proved that defendant 1 had identified himself with defendants 2 and 3. It has also been found that the criminal case against the plaintiff and his party was absolutely false and that the plaintiff, who was a schoolmaster, was busy with the printing of examination papers in the school building at the time when the offences were said to have been committed. The lower appellate Court has gone so far as to hold that the report of defendant 2 made at the thana on 11th January 1924, which was forwarded to defendant 1, was, without foundation and that the subsequent report of defendant 1, charging the plaintiff and his party with offences under Ss. 332 and 147 was equally without foundation. The learned District Judge has expressed himself thus:

"The plaintiff has thus proved that he could not be at the alleged row nor could he be at the tiraha to fight with the defendants. As the plaintiff was innocent and the whole story of the defendants from end to end was false, so not a single person of mohalla of defendants 2 and 3 nor any one of the tiraha appeared as a witness for them. I agree with Mr. Ratan Lal that the reports of defendants 2 and 3 to the police that there was a danger of breach of peace, as also the report of defendant 1 that the plaintiff beat him was all false so far as the plaintiff was concerned. As everything was false and imaginary it is fair to assume that the defendants were actuated by malice in so doing It seems that all the three defendants acted in a sort of conspiracy to ruin the plaintiff. Defendant 1 was going, he was to hand over charge the next day and so it needed all efforts to concoct a case against the plaintiff and men of his party as early as possible. For want of better grounds the prosecution was launched on a flimsy story not supported by reliable evidence even."

It may be that this picture is somewhat overdrawn, but sitting in second appeal we are bound by the findings of fact supported as they are by evidence which we are precluded from examining ourselves. We must therefore hold that the plaintiff-respondent was prosecuted maliciously without reasonable and probable cause.

The learned advocate for the appellant has argued: (1) that the suit should have been brought within three months from the accrual of cause of action, as required by S. 42, Police Act 5 1861; (2) that even if a longer period of one year provided for by Art. 23 Sch. 2, Limitation Act, be applicable, the plaintiff's suit is barred and (3) that defendant 1 cannot, under the circumstances of the case, be regarded as the prosecutor and no decree for damages can be passed against him.

The first point may be shortly disposed of. On the passing of the Limitation Act 9, 1871, that part of S. 42, Police Act 5, 1861 which provides a period of three months for suits contemplated by it was repealed, with the result that such suits became subject to the general law of limitation contained in the Limitation Act and the special provision of limitation contained in S. 42, Police Act 5, 1861 ceased to be operative.

Article 23, Sch. 2, Lim. Act, provides a period of one year for suits for compensation for a malicious prosecution, to be reckoned from the date the plaintiff is acquitted or the prosecution otherwise terminates. The plaintiff-respondent having been acquitted on 27th March 1924, his suit brought on 27th May 1925, is prima facie barred unless allowance is made for two months. The plaintiff claims a further period of two months under S. 15, Lim. Act, which provides inter alia that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit of which notice has been given in accordance with the requirements of any enactment for the time being in force, the period of notice shall be excluded. The plaintiff served defendant 1 with two months' notice under S. 80, Civil P. C., and brought the suit after the expiry of two months from the date of the notice. He, therefore, claimed benefit of S. 15 on the ground that such notice was imperative under S. 80, Civil P. C. If under the circumstances of the present case defendant 1 was entitled to a notice prescribed by S. 80, Civil P. C., there can be no doubt that the suit, so far, at any rate, as defendant 1 is concerned, was instituted within time. The question remains as to whether it was time barred against defendants 2 and 3 as to whom no question of notice can arise.

It was contended on behalf of defendant 1 that no notice under S. 80, Civil P. C., was necessary if the plaintiff's allegation be true that defendant 1 maliciously conspired with the other two defendants to launch a groundless prosecution against the plaintiff, because, in that case, he cannot be deemed to have acted in the discharge of his duty as a police officer. Reference was made in this connexion to Mumtaz Hussain v. A. E. Lewis (1) which is, however, not a case in point. An assistant engineer against whom damages were claimed in that case by his subordinate for assault and use of abusive language was held not to be entitled to a notice under S. 80, Civil P. C. It cannot be said that a public officer acts in his official capacity in maltreating his subordinate in relation to the discharge of his duties as a public officer. S. 80 will apply to a case in which damages are claimed against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity. An important test is whether the public officer professed to act in his official capacity. As was ruled in Abdul Rahim v. Abdul Rahim (2):

"If the act was such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties, and he considered himself to be acting as public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity within the ordinary meaning of the term 'purport.' The motives with which the act was done do not enter into the question at all."

In the case before us defendant 1 proceeded to the scene of occurrence on receipt of the report previously made by defendant 2 and forwarded to him by the head-muharrir. He purported to do so in his capacity as a Police Inspector. His subsequent report complaining of assault and obstruction by the plaintiff and his party was likewise made by him in his capacity as a police officer. Indeed one of the offences with which he charged the plaintiff in that report was that under S. 332, i. e., voluntarily causing hurt to deter public servant from his duty. We are clearly of opinion that on the authorities of this Court and the language of S. 80, Civil P. C., defendant 1 did purport to act in his official capacity and that it was imperative on the plaintiff to give notice to him of the suit for malicious prosecution. The learned advocate for the appellant argued that notice, if at all necessary, was required by S. 42, Police Act 5, 1861, which provides for one month's notice only. If this contention is sound the plaintiff's suit should be deemed to have been instituted beyond limitation by one month. We are unable to give effect to this argument. That section refers to actions for "anything done" or "intended to be done under the provisions of this Act or under the general police powers hereby given."

* (1) [1910] 5 I. C. 467.

(2) A. 1. R. 1924 All. 851=80 I. C. 72=46 All. 884.

It was not in the discharge of any duty imposed by the Police Act that defendant 1 was obstructed or made the subsequent complaint at the police station against the plaintiff. Defendant 2's report which had been forwarded to him by the head muharrir complained of a cognizable offence having been committed by the plaintiff. Defendant 1 proceeded to the scene of occurrence to investigate the case initiated by that report. It was therefore, in his capacity as an investigating police officer in the exercise of powers conferred upon him as such by the Criminal Procedure Code that he acted. His own report which led to the prosecution of the plaintiff-respondent was also made in the same capacity. It was held in Bachha Singh v. Tajar Beg (3), that :

"where a suit has to be brought against a police officer for damages for something done in the exercise of his powers under the Criminal Procedure Code the provisions of S. 42, Police Act, do not apply and the plaintiff has to give two months notice as provided by S. 80, Civil P. C."

Accordingly we hold that S. 42, Police Act, does not apply and that the plaintiff was entitled to a period of two months being excluded in computing limitation. In this way the suit was rightly held by the lower appellate Court to be within time. The suit is in our opinion equally within time as against defendants 2 and 3. S. 15 (2), Limitation Act, provides that "in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit of which notice has been given in accordance with the requirements of any enactment for the time being in force the period of such notice shall be excluded."

If it is necessary or even permissible for a plaintiff to bring a suit claiming relief against all the defendants jointly, and if a notice under S. 80, Civil P. C., was necessary against one of the defendants and was in fact given, the period of notice is to be excluded in computing the period of limitation for the suit and not merely so far as the defendant to whom notice was given is concerned. Any other view will make the provision of S. 15 (2) nugatory in cases in which it is necessary to implead in one suit, private individuals and the public officer against whom there is but one cause of action. All that the section requires is that a notice should have been given in accordance with the requirements of any enactment for the time being in force and if this condition exists it declares without any qualification or reservation that the period of notice shall be excluded in computing limitation. The learned Judges of the Patna High Court have taken the same view in B. & N. W. Railway Co. v. Ramsarup Lal Chowdhury (4).

The only other question that remains is whether defendant 1 should be considered to have prosecuted the plaintiff. His report at the thana complaining that the plaintiff and his party had committed the offences under S. 332 and S. 147, I. P. C., and asking for action being taken against them, taken with his conduct previous to the report as found by the lower appellate Court, is sufficient, in our opinion, to establish that he was the prosecutor of the plaintiff. It is true he did not take any part in the proceedings which followed except by giving his own evidence, but that fact will not make him any the less a prosecutor if he can be otherwise considered to be such. In Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that :

"It is not a principle of universal application that if police or Magistrate act on information given by a private individual without a formal complaint or application for process the Crown and not the individual becomes the prosecutor. The answer to the question, Who is the "prosecutor," must depend upon the whole circumstances of the case. The mere setting the law in motion is not the criterion ; the conduct of the complainant before and after making the charge must also be taken into consideration. Nor is it enough to say the prosecution was instituted and conducted by the police ; that is again a question of fact. Theoretically all prosecutions are conducted in the name and in behalf of the Crown, but in practice this duty is often left in the hands of the person immediately aggrieved by the offence who pro hac vice represents the Crown."

(3) [1915] 80 I. C. 178.

In a later case, Balbhaddar Singh v. Badri Sah (6), at 460 (of 24 A.L.J.) their Lordships observed :

"Of course there is nothing in the point which seems to have been taken in the Courts below but which was not urged before their Lordships, that here de facto the appellants were not prosecuted by the respondent. In any country where, as in India, prosecution is not private, an action for malicious prosecution in the most literal sense of the word could not be raised against any private individual. But giving information to the authorities which naturally leads to prosecution is just the same thing. And if that is done and trouble caused, an action will lie."

In the case before us the finding is that all the three defendants conspired to prosecute the plaintiff maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause and that in furtherance of their design defendant 1 figured as the complainant in a cognizable offence of which information was lodged by him to the police and the latter prosecuted the plaintiff on the faith of such information. In the proceedings which followed before the Joint Magistrate all the defendants gave evidence. Defendants 2 and 3 actively aided the police in prosecuting the plaintiff in other ways. Under these circumstances we entertain no doubt that all the three defendants were rightly considered by the learned District Judge to have prosecuted the plaintiff so as to entitle the latter to sue them for compensation for malicious prosecution. In view of our findings on all the questions argued in second appeal we uphold the decree appealed from and dismiss the appeals with costs including counsel's fee on the higher scale.

BOYS AND YOUNG, JJ.

Abdul Jalil Khan and others—Appellants.

v.

Emperon—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 949 of 1929, Decided on 25th March 1930, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Pilibhit, D/- 3rd September 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 288 — Previous statements of witnesses — Admissibility considered—Evidence Act, S. 157.

Previous statements of witnesses are only ordinarily admissible to corroborate or contradict the witnesses who have made statements at the trial, or by virtue of S. 288, Criminal P. C. The latter section should only be employed when there is reason to believe that a witness at the trial is deliberately departing from the evidence which he gave before the Magistrate and where it is considered by the trial Judge desirable to bring the whole statement made before the Magistrate on record as substantive evidence. As to corroborating a witness it is unnecessary for the prosecution to corroborate their witnesses by previous statements until the statement made at the trial has been, in one way or another, challenged. As to contradicting a witness, it is not in accordance with law to use his statement made on a previous occasion, until the particular statement, by means of which it is desired to contradict the witness is put to him and he is asked what explanation he can give. In neither of these two latter cases is the previous statement itself substantive evidence.

(b) Evidence Act, S. 30—Confession exculpating author from alleged offence is not confession and should not be relied upon for convicting co-accused.

A confession which does not exculpate the author thereof but is merely an explanation exculpating himself from his alleged share of the offence is not a confession at all and should not be relied upon in convicting the co-accused.

(c) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Accused identified by witness in jail but not identified in Court—Identification is not greatly reliable evidence.

Although an identification by a witness in jail who fails to point him out in the trial Court is not necessarily worthless, it is not evidence on which very great reliance can be placed.

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 164—Magistrate should not ask questions so as to reconcile statements with those of co-accused unless it is to make statement intelligible but should merely record such statement as accused desires to make.

In recording confessions under S. 164, the Magistrate should merely record such confessions or statement as the accused might desire to make. It is no part of his duty to ask questions in detail on matters already within the Magistrate's knowledge and endeavour to reconcile the statements of the accused with other co-accused. But if the statement contains any real ambiguity it is the duty of the Magistrate with great caution and exercising great discretion to question the accused in order to eliminate the ambiguity and give him a chance to make his statement intelligible.

M. A. Aziz—for Appellants.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Boys, J.—This is an appeal of six men from convictions under S. 396, I. P. C., and in the case of Abdul Jalil Khan and Abdul Shakur alias Shakuri, sentences of death and, in the case of Dilawar, Kundan, Chhida and Hemraj, sentences of 10 years' rigorous imprisonment, including 'three months' solitary confinement. The printed paper-book of the case runs to just over 300 pages. This is partly due to the fact that the learned Additional Judge has admitted on to the record the whole of previous statements made by witnesses. Previous statements of witnesses are only ordinarily admissible to corroborate or contradict the witnesses who have made statements at the trial, or by virtue of S. 288, Criminal P. C. The latter section should only be employed when there is reason to believe that a witness at the trial is deliberately departing from the evidence which he gave before the Magistrate and where it is considered by the trial Judge desirable to bring the whole statement made before the Magistrate on record as substantive evidence. As to corroborating a witness it is unnecessary, and this has been pointed out many times, for the prosecution to corroborate their witnesses by previous statements, until the statement made at the trial has been, in one way or another, challenged. As to contradicting a witness it is not in accordance with law to use his statement made on a previous occasion, until the particular statement, by means of which it is desired to contradict the witness, is put to him and he is asked what explanation he can give. In neither of these two latter cases is the previous statement itself substantive evidence. We recognize however that in the present case, in bringing the whole of previous statements on to the record, the learned Judge was only moved by a desire to give the accused every opportunity of making such criticisms against the witnesses' testimony in the Sessions Court as they could found on the earlier statements. The learned Judge's judgment extends to nearly 40 pages of the printed record, and he has dealt with the case ably and exhaustively. If as we think, he has dealt with it in greater detail than is necessary, we again recognize that that is an error on the right side and that he was only desirous of dealing with the case thoroughly. He has certainly succeeded.

We have listened to counsel for the appellants for several days and he again has given very commendable labour and time to the study of this brief. These facts, however, which we can and do record with approval make it the less necessary for us to enter into details ourselves. The evidence consists of that of an approver, Narain, and a number of men who were eyewitnesses to the dacoity. The learned Judge has further relied on what is described as the confession of one of the accused, Dilawar. Except in one very important feature, dealing with the arrival of the dacoits on the spot and the part actually taken by Dilawar, there is no serious discrepancy between the so-called confession of Dilawar and the statement of the approver. The approver Narain's statement is that some of the dacoits came to a spot on the road to the village where the dacoity was committed on a tonga driven by one of the witnesses for the prosecution, Hafizul Rahman. Hafizul Rahman minimises his own share in the dacoity and says that he was compelled to drive some of the dacoits there. This explanation of his own presence among the dacoits is apparently accepted by the Crown.

Dilawar, accused, in his so-called confession describes how he drove the same two dacoits who are alleged to have come with Hafizul Rahman on his own ekka and says that he was compelled to this course by threats. The Crown did not in the case of this man accept the explanation. The fact remains that we have in the so-called confession of Dilawar and in the statement of the approver, as supported by Hafizul Rahman, two irreconcilable stories, one of necessity deliberately false, as to the manner in which some of the dacoits came to the meeting place. It would be possible perhaps to offer an explanation of this conflict, but in view of the line that has been taken in this Court by the Crown, it is unnecessary to deal with it in detail. The learned trial Judge has given some weight to the alleged confession of Dilawar, but in this Court the Crown has thrown it out and does not ask us to rely upon it. We think that the learned Government Pleader was right in adopting this course. Whether or no Dilawar had told the truth in the rest of the story in the alleged confession and only endeavoured to protect himself by explaining that he was forced into the course that he followed, the fact remains that the confession, as it stands, does not implicate him himself and is in fact not a confession at all, but an explanation exculpating himself from his alleged share in the dacoity. We need not therefore say anything further on the subject of Dilawar's confession more than this, that we had to examine very carefully the circumstances in which it was made to see whether any conclusion could be drawn from these circumstances from which the appellants were entitled to reap an advantage. We do not think, however, that any conclusion can be drawn from those circumstances in favour of the appellants.

We deal with the case, therefore, as depending upon the statement of the approver Narain, supported by the evidence of eyewitnesses.

We do not find it necessary to deal with the cases of any of the appellants, excepting that of Chidda, in any detail. In the case of Abdul Jalil the evidence is, in our opinion, fully satisfactory. In the case of Abdul Shakur we eliminate the evidence of Tara. He identified Abdul Shakur in the Bareilly jail and he made no mistakes. It is true that he picked out Abdul Shakur from a line including Shakuri and Abdul Jalil and 15 other men not suspected in the case, and it is true that he did not pick out in the Bareilly jail any unsuspected person, that is, any person admittedly not suspected in the dacoity. Had his efforts at identification stopped there, there might not have been much to be said against it, but we find that he was also invited to Pilibhit to pick out other accused whom he could identify from the long line of men put up before him, and he failed to identify any one of the suspected persons, while he did identify no less than three persons who admittedly were not suspected. Eliminating Tara we find more than sufficient evidence in the testimony of the remaining witnesses to support the conviction of Abdul Shakur. Similarly in the case of Dilawar, we strike out the evidence of Pitam who, while pointing out two of the suspected persons in the jail and making four mistakes, again failed in the Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court to point out Dilawar. We do not suggest that an identification by a witness in jail who fails to point him out in the trial Court is necessarily worthless. His evidence that he did at the jail point out certain persons, though he cannot remember them, read with the evidence of other persons who can show who were the persons that were identified, may be of some value read with other evidence. But manifestly it is not evidence on which very great reliance can be placed. Striking out, however, Pitam from the list of witnesses against Dilawar we find there is sufficient remaining. The cases of the other accused, with the exception of Chidda, it is not necessary to deal with separately.

In the case of Chidda we find that Kandhai and Padhe, though they picked him out at the identification proceedings in the jail, did not identify him before the Magistrate or in the Sessions Court, and, as we have just said above, such an identification can ordinarily not carry much weight. Lochan, another witness, picked out Chidda in the Pilibhit jail, but he there also pointed out four persons who were not even suspected, while in the Bareilly jail he failed to pick out anybody rightly and did pick out one person wrongly. Lochan though he picked out Chidda in the Sessions Court failed to pick him out in the Magistrate's Court and picked out one Abdulla in his place. The evidence of Lochan is therefore unreliable. There remains against Chidda the statement of the approver supported only by the statement of Piare. We have, therefore, the more carefully examined the statement of Piare, for it does not follow that because there is only one witness, that witness' testimony is insufficient to corroborate the approver. We find, however, in Piare's statement before the trial Court that he constantly lays stress upon the fact that he knew Chidda because he saw him on the chabutra in front of the house where the dacoity was committed walking up and down with a sword. He was asked whether he had not in fact stated before the committing Magistrate that he saw no arms with any dacoit. He replied that he had told the Deputy Magistrate that he did see arms with the dacoits though the Deputy Magistrate may not have recorded the fact. The English record of the evidence in the committing Magistrate's Court shows that Piare there said:

"I had not seen gun and weapon with any of the dacoits."

To further satisfy ourselves we checked the vernacular record and we found the same statement there. It is impossible then for us to believe Piare's statement that he stated the contrary and that he has been incorrectly recorded. It is difficult to suppose that both the Peshkar and the Magistrate, recording a statement in different languages, would have made the same mistake, and further it is certain that if he had said: "I did see arms in the hands of the dacoits," he would have been asked in whose hands he saw them, whatever his answer might have been. We do not think therefore that we can with confidence rely on the statement of Piare.

In our view then the appeals of all the appellants, except in the case of Chidda, must be dismissed.

A few further comments we must make. On p. 263 of the printed paper-book the learned trial Judge expresses the opinion that the statement of a woman to the police who was one of those residing in the house in which the dacoity was committed, could be treated as a first information report and that therefore such a statement was admissible against the accused, seeing that the woman in question was produced as a witness in the case and could be cross-examined on it. In this the trial Judge was in error. The first information report was clearly that which was made by the chowkidar. The statement made by the woman was nothing more than a statement made by a witness for the prosecution to the police, which could not be used by the Crown for any purpose and could only be used by the defence as a basis for cross-examination.

The next comment that we have to make is that in the course of the argument the learned Government Pleader, when dealing with the conflicting statements of Dilawar in his statement as an approver and Narain in his statement as an approver, drew our attention to the evidence of Babu Sri Krishana, Circle Inspector, which is to be found on p. 213 of the printed book. It is indeed astonishing that in the year 1929, when this evidence was given the Government Pleader of Pilibhit should have seen fit to lead it at all. There are no less than two printed pages at the very commencement of this police officer's evidence which are directed to one purpose and one purpose alone, namely, to show what a bad character the appellant Abdul Jalil was and how justified the Crown were in proceeding against him. We quote the following two examples of the evidence that the Government Pleader of Pilibhit permitted himself to lead. They are:

"In connexion with that dacoity (some other dacoity) the Sub-Inspector of Khatewa and the Circle Inspector of Naini Tal came to me at Pilibhit. They expressed their suspicion about this dacoity on Abdul Jalil, etc."

Again:

"the police of Pilibhit was very much afraid of Abdul Jalil Khan and was also in collusion with him. Nobody dared to see his house."

There are two pages of this sort of thing. It so happened that the Government Pleader of Pilibhit who represented the Crown at the trial was present in Court before us, and we asked him to explain how it came about that he led these two pages of evidence at the very commencement of the Circle Inspector's evidence without there having been any foundation to justify the evidence being led. He could only refer us to some wholly unsubstantiated suggestion that the police were intending originally to run a gang case and, therefore, wanting to put in all the evidence they could to connect various persons suspected in various dacoities or murders. It is manifestly immaterial what the police intended; the present case was a case directed, or at least should have been directed, solely to the proof of single dacoity. The only matter to which the Government Pleader of Pilibhit could direct our attention was a statement of the Magistrate who conducted the identification proceedings in the jail to the effect that he did not know for what case the accused were to be identified, but from the large number of accused put up before him he concluded that it was a gang case.

It is unnecessary to deal with this suggestion any further. The case before the Court, and the only case with which the Government Pleader of Pili-bhit and the Court were concerned, was this single charge of a single dacoity, and it ought to have been most manifest to the Government Pleader of Pilibhit that he was not entitled to lead evidence to prejudice the Court against the accused or any particular accused and that he could only lead evidence of the bad character of the accused if that particular accused had previously led evidence of his good character (Evidence Act, S. 54). It is not suggested that Abdul Jalil Khan or any of the accused had, up to that period at any rate, led evidence of good character. We may note also that even if the Government Pleader of Pilibhit did endeavour to lead such evidence, it was the duty of the trial Court to have stopped him immediately. We recognize of course that the learned Judge had not had much experience on the date in question of Sessions work, and his failure to stop the Government Pleader in no way detracts from our great appreciation of the care and trouble that he expended on the case.

The next comment that we feel compelled to make is in reference to the Magistrate, Mr. Sri Kishen Kumar, who recorded the confession of Narain under S. 164, Criminal P. C. He had already apparently recorded the alleged confession of Dilawar, and we have already made mention of the serious conflict between Dilawar and Narain as to the manner in which the dacoits assembled at the spot, and also in regard to the acts of Dilawar subsequently and during the dacoity. Whether or no it was from Dilawar's previous statement that the Magistrate had got his knowledge, it is manifest that at the conclusion of Narain's statement he realized the serious discrepancy between the two statements and, as the record shows, apparently made a determined effort to get Narain's statement into harmony with that of Dilawar. Narain stated that Shakuri, Jalil and Dilawar went on a tonga while the remaining persons went on foot. Dilawar had stated that Shakuri and Jalil were driven by him to the meeting place on his own ekka. Narain completely finished his own statement, that is, the statement which he had come voluntarily to make, when the Magistrate proceeded to question him at great length manifestly on the basis of some information in his possession. It is only necessary to mention samples of the questions he asked. Question: "Did Shakuri and Jalil go in an ekka or in a tonga?" There was no ambiguity whatever in Narain's statement that they had come in a tonga, but it was in conflict with Dilawar's statement that he had taken two men on his own ekka. Narain relied definitely "in a tonga." The conflict remained. The next question asked was "Was Dilawar in the same tonga?" Manifestly this was with a view to giving Narain a chance of saying, "No Dilawar was in an ekka," but the witness replied definitely "yes." The witness was then asked "Who was driving the tonga?" and replied "The tonga belonged to some one else whom I do not recognize?" Now it was manifest from Narain's earlier statements that he knew Dilawar well, for he had given evidence mentioning Dilawar by name and the share that Dilawar took in the dacoity. Notwithstanding this the Magistrate asked him again "Was it driven by Dilawar?" and Narain again replied definitely "No." There are many other instances too numerous to detail showing that the Magistrate was questioning Narain in detail on matters already within the Magistrate's knowledge and endeavouring to reconcile the statement of Narain with that of Dilawar. This was no part of his duty at all. It was his duty merely to record such confession or statement as Narain might desire to make. It was also part of his duty with great caution and exercising the greatest discretion to question Narain in order to eliminate any real ambiguity that there might be in Narain's statement, or in other words to give Narain a chance of making his statement intelligible. But he had no right whatever to cross-examine the man who was making the statement or to endeavour to get particular statements out of him.

Before concluding we may discharge the more pleasant duty of expressing our approval of the very careful maps of the locality and the khasras accompanying, that were prepared by the responsible officers on behalf of the Crown. They have been of the very greatest assistance to us in appraising the value of the evidence and the facts generally of the case. We have already expressed our appreciation of the careful judgment of the trial Judge, Mr. Ram Ugrah Lal Srivastava, which we have had to consider.

The result is that we set aside the conviction of Chidda and direct his immediate release, unless he is required in connexion with any other matter. The appeals of the remaining five are dismissed; and the sentences on Abdul Jalil and Abdul Shakur will be carried out according to law. A separate order will be passed expressing to Government our recommendation that it might consider the grant of an enhanced fee to the counsel, Mr. Abdul Aziz, who represented the appellants.

* Criminal P. C., S. 133—Chabutra in public way—Obstruction—Order for removal can be made.

When there is a chabutra obstructing a public way the fact that in a particular case he public may have lot of room to go along the road, without needing to walk upon that particular site of the chabutra has nothing to do with the case and the public road authorities can secure its removal. [P 1007 C 2]

Hazari Lal Kapoor—for Applicants.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Judgment.—I see no reason whatever for interfering with the Magistrate's order which is a most proper one, and a reference to the terms of S. 133 would make that absolutely clear. The person on whom notice was issued to show cause why the obstruction should not be removed set up at the outset what has been found to be a false case, that he has only re-constructed the chabutra on an old foundation. It is found in fact that there was no old chabutra on the site of the new construction. It is most manifest on the facts found that what has happened is this: There was a tiny little portion of chabutra, which the plan clearly indicates was itself an obstruction, which the proper authorities would have been entitled to have removed. Having kept that there for some time he has now extended it on either side along the whole length of the frontage wall. On the one side of the tiny portion of the chabutra previously existing the encroachment extends to no less a length than 174 ft. and on the other side 62 ft. and apparently the width of the chabutra is 8 ft. It would not make the smallest difference in principle if it was 8 inches or if the encroachment was only by the addition of a single brick. It is by adding brick to brick that these sorts of encroachments are habitually successfully carried, though S. 133 authorizes an order to remove "any unlawful obstruction from any way which is or may be lawfully used by the public or from any public place."

There can be no question on the findings that the site occupied by the present extension is a public way and is a public place and is ground which may be lawfully used by the public. The fact that in the particular case the public may have lot of room to go along the road without needing to walk upon that particular site has nothing whatever to do with the case. They are entitled to walk along that site if they wish. The opposite party here if allowed to maintain the chabutra would, of course, immediately set up that it was his chabutra and exclude the public. But even if he did not do so the public have a right to walk on that portion of the ground which the opposite party has covered with his chabutra. On this ground, and this ground alone, the Magistrate's order would be justified. He has in my view unnecessarily strengthened his order by pointing out that the P. W. D. are entitled to use the site for taking away material to repair the road. It is true that they are so entitled, but it would not make the least difference to the case if it were shown beyond doubt that they never would want to remove any soil from that site. The issue was perfectly simple and the facts show that the opposite party has deliberately encroached upon land which is public way, and his obstruction of it is unlawful, and the Magistrate's order directing its removal is a proper order. It is not necessary for me to say anything in the present case whether as the plan suggests the so-called original portion of the chabutra is also an unlawful obstruction or not, but nothing that I have said in this judgment must be taken to suggest that that is an old chabutra and that the public road authorities cannot secure its removal. The reference is rejected. Let the record be returned.

Badri Prasad—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 75 of 1929, Decided on 25th April 1930, against order of Dist. Judge, Agra, D/- 19th January 1929.

* Legal Practitioners Amendment Act (15 of 1926), S. 36, Expl.—Expression “majority of members present” is not same thing as “majority of members voting”—Out of 67 members present 26 voting in favour of resolution declaring person to be tout, 14 against and rest remaining neutral—There is no legal evidence on which person could be declared tout.

The expression “majority of the members present” is not the same thing as the expression “majority of the members voting”. If there are a large number of members who abstain from voting, it is quite clear that they are not prepared to state that there is a general repute against the person concerned. Where out of the 67 members of the Bar Association, only 26 voted in favour of the resolution declaring a person to be a tout and 14 against it, the rest remaining neutral, there is no legal evidence against the person on which he could be declared a tout. [P 1008 C 2]

K. Verma—for Applicant.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Sulaiman, J.—Lala Badri Prasad is one of the numerous persons who has been declared a tout by an order of the District and Sessions Judge of Agra. The only evidence against Badri Prasad is a resolution of the Bar Association passed at a meeting on 22nd November 1928 declaring him to be a tout. The report received from the Bar Association showed that there were in all 94 members of the Association, but only 67 out of these were actually present on 22nd November 1928 when the resolution was considered. The voting showed that 26 voted in favour of the resolution and 14 against it. The rest obviously remained neutral.

Ordinarily a mere resolution of an association of this kind cannot be legal evidence against a person when he is accused of any charge. But the explanation added to S. 36, by the Legal Practitioners Amendment Act (Act 15 of 1926), provides that the passing of a resolution declaring any person to be or not to be a tout by a majority of the members present at a meeting, specially convened for the purpose, of an association of persons entitled to practise as legal practitioners in any Court or revenue office shall be evidence of the general repute of such persons for the purposes of this subsection. The important words to consider are “by a majority of the members present at a meeting”. There is no doubt that a majority of votes were cast in favour of the resolution if the neutral votes were to be excluded and therefore the resolution was duly passed by the Association. But the language of the explanation makes it quite clear that every resolution passed by the Association will not be legal evidence of general repute against an accused person. It becomes such evidence only if it has been passed by a majority of the members present at the meeting. The expression “majority of the members present” is not the same thing as the expression “majority of the members voting”. If there are a large number of members who abstain from voting it is quite clear that they are not prepared to state that there is a general repute against the person concerned. If it had been intended that a mere resolution passed by a majority of votes would be sufficient there would have been no necessity to add the words “by a majority of the members present at the meeting,” as the word passing involves the idea of a majority of votes being cast in favour of the resolution.

We are therefore of opinion that there is no legal evidence against the applicant on which he could be declared a tout. We accordingly allow this revision and set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that the name of Badri Prasad be excluded from the list of tous. We make no order as to costs.

of 1929, Decided on 3rd July 1929, from a decision of Sess. Judge, Shahabad, D/- 31st January 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 297—No record of Judge having explained law in heads of charge—If High Court is satisfied from charge as whole and verdict that law was explained, and there is no miscarriage, it can refuse to interfere with verdict—Criminal trial.

The heads of charge are not intended to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the jury; and although it is desirable that record of the charge on question of law should be sufficiently full to show whether the elements constituting the offences charged have been properly and fully explained to the jury, High Court can refuse to interfere with the verdict where the Sessions Judge has failed to note in so many words that he had explained the law to the jury if it is satisfied from the charge as a whole and the verdict that the law was properly explained and there was no miscarriage of justice : A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 420 ; 30 Mad. 44 ;

Ref. [P 1010 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Evidence of approver—Direction not to believe guilt or otherwise of accused alleged to be absent from scene of offence by approver is not misdirection.

Since an approver may tell the truth in some parts of his story, direction to jury with respect to evidence of an approver as 'The mere fact that the approver says that a certain one of the accused was not present at the place and time of the offence does not prove the accused guilty unless you are satisfied that the approver is telling the truth' does not amount to misdirection. [P 1011 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Approver's statement—Corroboration is possible by finding of unidentifiable substance such as sugar and Judge can refer to it as corroboration in charge to jury.

Finding of a substance not ordinarily identifiable such as for example, sugar, from the house of a particular dacoit soon after the dacoity can lend corroboration to the ap-prover's statement and it does not amount to misdirection to refer to it as such in the charge to jury : 29 Cal. 732 and A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 57
Ref. [P 1013 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 114 (a)—Presumption relates to offence of dacoity also.

Presumption referred to in illustration (a) to
S. 114 is not confined to charges of theft but extends to all charges, however penal, not excluding even murder. Consequently where a person charged with dacoity is shown to have been in possession of part of stolen property soon after the dacoity it may be presumed that he was one of the dacoits or he received the property knowing it to have been stolen at the dacoity : 13 Mad. 426, Ref. [P 1013 C 2]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Police diary on record under S. 162—Judge can refer to it in charge to jury.

Although it is injudicious to refer to police diaries in charge to jury, where the Judge refers to it under S. 162 there is no misdirection in doing so if the Court warns the jury that they were entitled to believe the witness if they thought so unless the defence showed that he had on a previous occasion made a contradictory statement. [P 1012 C 2]

(f) Criminal Trial—Trial by jury—Duty of Judge.

The Judge is not bound to address himself in every particular and in every detail to every suggestion put forward by the defence. It is the duty of the Judge fairly and candidly to point out the main and salient features of the case from the point of view of the prosecution and of the defence respectively. And in doing so he is entitled to take into consideration the speeches made upon both sides by the Crown and by the prisoners' counsel in considering his presentation of the evidence to the jury : 1 Pat. L. J. 317, Foll. [P 1015 C 1]

S. N. Sahay, R. N. Lal and Anand Prasad—for Appellants.

Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Dhavlé, J.—These three appeals have been heard together as they arise out of one and the same trial which was by jury. Six of the seven appellants have been convicted of dacoity and sentenced to nine years' rigorous imprisonment each ; and appellant Dipan Pande has been convicted under S. 412, I. P. C., and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment in the same connexion.

The dacoity charged is timed about 10 p.m. on 18th September 1928, and the charge under S. 412, which applied to Dipan Pande and four other appellants, related to the recovery on 22nd September of properties stolen in the dacoity.
The victim of the dacoity was one Bis-wanath Bania of Mahmudganj.

The jury brought in a unanimous verdict in the case of all the appellants except Tribeni Tiwari whom a majority of 3 to 2 found guilty of dacoity.

It has been contended that the trial is vitiated by the failure of the Sessions Judge to explain the offence of dacoity to the jury, and in support of this contention the case of Mari Vallayan v.
Emperor (1) has been cited. The heads of charge do not contain an explanation of dacoity, but they do contain several significant passages bearing on the matter. In the first place a reason has been given for the alternative charge under S. 412 against five of the appellants, and this reason is :

(1) [1907] 30 Mad. 44=5 Cr. L. J. 78.

"In some cases there is no direct evidence that the accused took part in the dacoity. The evidence consists only of the recovery from the possession of the accused of property alleged to have been stolen in the dacoity."

Secondly, in dealing with the recent unexplained possession of property stolen in the dacoity, the learned Sessions Judge records :

"You might even think that from all the circumstances of the case the proper inference is merely that he (that is to say, the accused from whom the property was recovered) knew the property was stolen property and received it dishonestly, and in that event you could not convict him either of dacoity or under S. 412 but you could convict him under S. 411."

It seems to me impossible to imagine, notwithstanding such passages in the heads of charge, that an experienced Sessions Judge would have failed really to explain dacoity to the jury. As was observed in Eknath Sahai v. Emperor (2) :

"The heads of the charge are not intended to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the jury."

It is unquestionably desirable that the record of the charge on question of law should be sufficiently full to show whether the elements constituting the offences charged have been properly and fully explained to the jury. In the recent case of Dhanpat Tiwari v. Emperor (3) decided by this Bench on 13th May last, where the heads of charge mentioned that certain sections had been read and explained to the jurors, my learned brother remarked :

"Section 367 expressly provides that in a trial by jury the Court need not write a judgment. Any suggestion to the Court that in recording the heads of the charge to the jury they should practically write a judgment, and indeed should write out to no purpose the elements of criminal law which the Judge must explain to the jury but no experienced Judge sets out in a judgment, is in my opinion strongly to be deprecated. To my mind no exception can be taken to the record by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge of the head of the charge showing how he laid down the law to the jury."

In the present case the learned Sessions Judge has failed to note in so many words that he had explained the section defining dacoity to the jury. At the same time it is clear, as I have already indicated, that he must have done so. It has been held in Chotan Singh v. Emperor (4) that the failure of the Judge to record in the charge what actually his explanation of the law was did not necessarily involve the setting aside of the conviction if the omission do not occasion a miscarriage of justice, and that the High Court will not order a retrial when it is of opinion that if the jury accepted the evidence which was put forward on behalf of the prosecution, there was no doubt they were entitled to convict the accused of the offences charged. The evidence in the present case of what happened in Biswanath Bania's house, if believed, makes out a case of dacoity and nothing else. The verdict read with the heads of charge also shows an appreciation of the three inferences from the finds referred to by the learned Sessions Judge. In my opinion, therefore, it cannot be said that the convictions of the appellants must be set aside merely because it is not stated in the heads of charge that the offence of dacoity was explained to the jury.

In dealing with the question of the dacoity, the learned Sessions Judge refers, inter alia, to the evidence of the approver Nagina Singh, and says :

"The defence have not challenged the evidence that there was a dacoity in Biswanath Bania's house and that the approver Nagina took part in the dacoity and there seems to me no reason why you shall not believe this much of the prosecution story. . . . If, however, you are satisfied that the evidence of the dacoity is generally true, then you will come to what seems to me the only question of any difficulty, namely, which, if any of the prisoners took part in the dacoity. . . ."

It has been contended that the learned Sessions Judge was in error in telling the jury that the defence had not challenged the evidence that Nagina Singh took part in the dacoity, and Mr. Srinarayan Sahay has endeavoured to show from the cross-examination of Nagina Singh that the man was challenged as regards his participation in the dacoity. The challenge is, however, confined to a few details and is not of the kind to suggest that according to the defence Nagina Singh was not in the dacoity at all. It is also obvious that the case must have been argued before the learned Sessions Judge on the footing that Nagina Singh had taken part in the dacoity. There is, therefore, no substance in the point raised by Mr. Sahay.

It has also been contended that instead of asking the jury to see how far the evidence of the approver was corroborated, and corroborated not merely in the general way, but in ways that would point "directly" to the accused concerned, the learned Sessions Judge should have pointed out to the jury that Nagina Singh was an out-and-out liar and that, therefore, corroboration was immaterial. It is impossible to accept this contention. How far to believe the approver was essentially a matter for the jury, and there was corroboration of his evidence for the jury to accept or reject. The learned Sessions Judge pointed out to the jury the grounds on which the evidence of an approver should be suspect—his criminality and low moral character on his own showing, and his :

"purchasing his own safety by betraying his own fellow criminals or perhaps his enemies,"

"In the present case there seems to be no reasons why you should not follow the general rule (requiring corroboration of the evidence of an approver). There was nothing about the evidence of Nagina Singh that could possibly impress one with the idea that he was a thoroughly truthful witness. . . ."

It has been urged that Nagina Singh, though he is from Kalyanpur, takes care not to implicate people from that village. This contention is not literally correct, because Nagina Singh does implicate Chotu Ahir, and Dukhanti Chamar from that village, though he does not actually send them inside the house of Biswanath Bania. In any case the learned Sessions Judge has expressly dealt with the point while considering the defence contention that the evidence of the approver proves four of the appellants to be guiltless of the dacoity. He says :

"You will, however, easily understand that if there is a risk of an approver falsely accusing persons who were not present, there is equally a risk that he may falsely deny the presence of the real criminals in order to save his friends."

In my opinion it was not open to the learned Sessions Judge to go beyond this or to tell the jury that Nagina Singh was an out-and-out liar.

Exception has been taken to the next remark of the learned Sessions Judge:

"The fact therefore that the approver says that a certain one of the accused was not present at the dacoity does not prove that prisoner guiltless unless you are satisfied that the approver is really telling the truth."

It has been urged that this is an erroneous direction and that the learned Sessions Judge should have asked the jury to deal with the approver as a witness who was either truthful or untruthful. I am unable to agree; it is plain that the approver may have told the truth in some parts of his story, but not in others.

It has also been contended that the approver's story is inadmissible in evidence because he has said that when he was arrested the Sub-Inspector took his statement, and that before that the Sub-Inspector had said that if he should confess he would be made a prosecution witness. But the approver also says that he has deposed of his own free will and that what he has said is completely true. He also made a confession to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate which has been put in by the defence as Ex. C and which was recorded by that officer under S. 164, Criminal P. C., and certified as a voluntary confession. The approver's allegation that before he made his statement to the police he had been told that if he confessed he would be made a prosecution witness was not put, as it should have been put by the prosecution, to the Sub-Inspector concerned, but his statement in cross-examination, that Biswanath came to the thana while he and appellants Ramsarup and Chotu were there, is flatly contradicted by the Sub-Inspector and points to a distinct bias against the prosecution. I do not therefore think that the approver's evidence was as a matter of law inadmissible in evidence.

Coming now to individual appellants: it has been urged that in the case of Chotu Ahir and Ramsarup Singh it should have been pointed out to the jury that other members of the family were unable to recognize these men.* This contention was apparently advanced under the impression that with Bishwanath there lived not only his wife but also Bhrigu Bania and Ganesh Bania. Ganesh gives Hanuman Bania as his father's name and so does Biswanath, but beyond this there is nothing to show that he is related to Biswanath. Bhriгу does not even share with Biswanath the same father's name. The sketch prepared by the Sub-Inspector (Ex. 21) does not show that Ganesh and Bhriгу were living with Biswanath, and the evidence does not show that either of them got so near the dacoits as did Biswanath. Biswanath's wife was prevented from giving evidence in the case by reason, it is said, and said without challenge, of her detention in hospital after a surgical operation. The evidence does not show that the two appellants who were holding Biswanath got close to his wife. It is therefore immaterial if the jury was not expressly asked to note that Biswanath is the only member of the family to identify the appellants. In dealing with the attack on Biswanath's evidence on the ground that he did not give to the chaukidar a description of these two appellants the learned Sessions Judge has remarked :

"You have seen the chaukidar and you will consider whether it is likely that he would carry in his head a description of two men given to him by Biswanath."

It has been urged that this is a mis-suggestion as it is not the case of the chaukidar that he had been given a description of the two men by Biswanath but had failed to carry it in his head. The chaukidar's capacity is however reflected in the fact that in his information at the thana he stated that Biswanath could identify the dacoits if he saw them, while he told the committing Magistrate that Biswanath had not said so and had said that he did not recognize any of the dacoits, and in the Sessions Court denied making such a statement. Biswanath himself says that he also told the chaukidar that he could identify two of the men and told him what they looked like. In my opinion therefore there was no mis-suggestion to the jury regarding the chaukidar. An attack has also been made on the following observation of the Sessions Judge :

"Next morning the Sub-Inspector took Biswanath's statement. Now it is reasonable to suppose that the Sub-Inspector would have asked Biswanath to describe the dacoits, but the defence have carefully avoided endeavouring to contradict Biswanath's evidence that he was able to describe two of the dacoits by means of his statement made to the Sub-Inspector, and if you think proper you can from this omission infer that actually his statement in Court is correct and that there is nothing in his previous statement made to the police which can contradict it."

It has been urged that the learned Sessions Judge has in this passage improperly used Biswanath's statement to the police to corroborate his evidence in Court, contrary to the provisions of S 162, Criminal P. C., but that is not what the learned Sessions Judge has done in terms: he merely asked the jury, if they thought proper, to infer that his statement in Court is correct and uncontradicted by a previous statement. It has been urged that the learned Sessions Judge has really proved negatively that Biswanath had made the same statement before the police and that the law does not permit such an inference to be drawn from the omission of the defence to cross-examine the Sub-Inspector on the point and thus contradict Biswanath. It seems to me that the learned Sessions Judge could have told the jury that they were entitled to believe Biswanath, if they thought fit, unless the defence showed, as they had not even attempted to do, that he had on a previous occasion made a contradictory statement. The reference to the statement made to the police is at the most somewhat injudicious and is not, in my opinion, at all material enough to have led to a miscarriage of justice.

Every attack on the Judge's charge to the jury in respect of these two appellants, Chotu Ahir and Ramsarup Singh, thus fails.

Bishuni Kewat is the third appellant for whom Mr. Srinarayan Sahay has appeared. The contention in his case is that in the matter of the corroboration of the prosecution story by the find of the sugar there was misdirection, and by the find of the clothes, nondirection. Bishuni was named by the approver, and a search of his house led to the discovery of a large quantity of sugar and five articles of clothing which were claimed by Biswanath as stolen in the dacoity. It has been urged that sugar is not an identifiable article and that the learned Sessions Judge was in error in placing before the jury the find of the sugar as a corroboration when it could not in a reasonable view of the case be said to corroborate the approver's story. The case of Jamiruddi Masalli v. Emperor (5) which was referred to recently in Rebati Mohan Chakravarty v. Emperor (6) was cited in support. That the sugar was not capable of identification is expressly mentioned in the heads of charge in the paragraph that deals with appellant Dukhanti Chamar immediately before the appellant Bishuni Kewat, if indeed it was necessary to detail such an obvious fact in the heads of charge. I am unable to accept as correct the contention that the find of sugar could not reasonably be a 'corroboration' of the prosecution story:

"Persons employed in carrying sugar and other articles from ships and wharves have been convicted of theft upon evidence that they were detected with property of the same kind upon them recently upon coming from such places, although the identity of the property as belonging to such and such persons could not otherwise be proved "Woodroff's Evidence, 8th Edition, p. 773, citing more than one authority."

As to the clothes, the contention is that the three lists of stolen property filed by Biswanath do not make even a remote approach to the identity of these articles, and that this should have been mentioned to the jury. That however seems to be a trivial circumstance in comparison with the fact that Biswanath's claim to the clothes was not at all challenged in cross-examination; nor was he asked to show where they were mentioned in his list. It is also obvious that the lists are by no means exhaustive, even though the third and last list was actually put in after the finds in the case; there are for instance the chaukidari receipts (Exs. 4 and 5) in Biswanath's name which were found at a place pointed out by the approver and which are not mentioned in any of the lists. In my opinion the charge against this appellant Bishuni is not defective, and there is no reason to interfere with the verdict of the jury against him.

Dukhanti Chamar and Dipan Pande have merely sent in petitions of appeal from jail, stating that they have been wrongly convicted. Mr. Sahay has argued their cases as amicus curiae. As regards Dukhanti Chamar, who was named by the approver and was stated by him to have carried away a large quantity of sugar, and in whose house a suspiciously large quantity of sugar for a charmar was found besides two quilts and a dhoti with marks which have been identified by Biswanath and which are not claimed by Dukhanti Mr. Sahay has not suggested that there was any misdirection or non-direction in the charge to the jury. Dipan Pande has been convicted under S. 412, I. P. C., in respect of a big thali which was stolen in the dacoity and which (along with two unidentifiable articles wrapped up in a durrie) he was found concealing under the thatch of a house in a narrow blind lane. It has been urged that there can be no inference that the man knew that the thali had been stolen in the dacoity as distinguished from the minor offence of theft or robbery. According to Illus. (a) to S. 114, Evidence Act:

"The Court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession."

This illustration refers to cases of theft, though "stolen property" is defined in S. 410 P. C., as property "the possession whereof has been transferred by theft, or by extortion, or by robbery

But the provision in question is no more than an illustration, and authority is not wanting for the proposition that the presumption is not confined to charges of theft, but extends to all charges, however penal, not excluding even murder: vide Queen-Empress v. Sami (7). There is therefore no reason to interfere with the verdict of the jury in the case of Dipan Pande.

I now come to the appeal of Tribeni Tiwari and Ramsawarath Singh. Tribeni was found guilty of dacoity by 3 jurors against 2. He was not named by the approver, and the evidence against him consisted of two articles admittedly found in his house or on the person of his concubine—a cooking pot variously called a batlohi or batua and a pair of silver bracelets with tigers' heads on them. As regards the cooking pot the learned Sessions Judge has fairly placed before the jury the question whether the article is at all capable of identification by the owner after stating his opinion that it seems incapable of identification and after referring to a discrepancy in Biswanath's story regarding the article. The learned Sessions Judge says that the weight of the bracelets does not agree precisely with the weight given in the complainant's list, and he leaves it to the jury to see whether such a loss of weight (from 16 to 13 bharis) might take place from constant use. He also refers to a mark, which he calls a dent, though the evidence points to a crack, by which it may be possible for the holder to recognize the article, and to the defence suggestion that Biswanath had had an opportunity of seeing the batua (this is obviously a clerical mistake for berua or bracelets) at the police station before the test identification. It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that the attention of the jury should have been drawn to the fact that at the test identification there was only one other pair of similar beruas and the contention is not without force in the circumstances.

Stronger exception has been taken to the following passage in the heads of charge:

"You will remember that the prisoner Tribeni makes a definite statement that he purchased this batua 18 months ago in Chandauli bazar, and he summoned the shopkeeper Rambadan and called for his books, yet he has not examined the shopkeeper although the witness was in Court. The accused is not of course expected to prove himself innocent but, when he makes a definite statement which ought to be capable of easy proof and he gives no evidence of it, it would not be unreasonable for you to draw some inference against him from the omission."

The contention is that it became unnecessary for the defence to examine Rambadan because Lakhmi Narain (P. W. 16) admitted in cross examination that in his jewellery shop in Chandauli Rambadan is a shareholder, that at that shop purjas are given to purchasers for cash payments, that Ex. A is a purja written by Rambadan, and that Ex. B is the account-book of the shop, and, further Kedar Tiwari (P. W. 27) said in cross-examination that he had seen Tribeni's concubine wearing beruas similar to the article in question for a year or a year and a quarter. The purja (Ex. A) refers to the sale of a pair of bracelets with tigers' heads in Baisakh 1984 (Sambat) and is supported by the account-book. Tribeni's case was that he had bought the bracelets from Rambadan 18 or 19 months before his examination in January 1929. It has been contended by Mr. Agarwala on behalf of the Crown that mere proof of the purja and the account-book does not establish the purchase and that, it was still necessary for the defence to call the seller Rambadan. It has on the other hand been urged on behalf of Tribeni that it was not to be expected that Rambadan would have any specific recollection of the sale of a particular article of jewellery so long ago, and that in any case, whether conclusive or not, the evidence of Lakhmi Narain and Kedar Tiwari should have been placed before the jury for what it was worth. In my opinion this contention must be accepted, and having regard to the divided verdict of the jury, it seems to me impossible to say that the result might not have been different if the evidence had been properly placed before the jury. Speaking for myself, I should certainly have found it difficult to say without hesitation that it had been established beyond reasonable doubt that the beruas belonged to Biswanath and not to Tribeni. I would therefore reverse the verdict of the majority of the jury against Tribeni on the ground that it is erroneous owing to misdirection by the learned Sessions Judge, such misdirection consisting in the remarks about the failure of the defence to examine Rambadan when coupled with the failure to refer to the evidence of Lakhmi Narain and Kedar Tiwari. Having regard to the exiguous character of the evidence against Tribeni, I do not think that this is a case for directing a retrial.

The only other appellant to be dealt with is Ramsawarath Singh. The learned Sessions Judge has pointed out how, according to the approver, Ramsawarath Singh refused to take part in the dacoity and went away, and how the man was seen concealing a bundle of articles in a shed of one Musafir Singh at the time of the house searches, two of the articles (a big thali of a mixture of metals known as phul and a bundle of yarn) being claimed by Biswanath as part of the stolen property. He has observed that the yarn appears to be incapable of identification, and he has left it to the jury to say whether the thali can be identified by the owner. He has also referred to the cross-examination of Bhabhuti Singh and the contradictions in the evidence regarding the person who informed the Sub-Inspector and the place where he did so and the defence contentions, that being already under arrest Ramsawarath could not have concealed the property stolen, that the Sub-Inspector was in league with Bhabhuti Singh and others, etc. It has been contended that it should have been said to the jury that the Sub-Inspector must, in spite of his denial, have searched Ramsawarath's house before he left the tola, but that is only a defence contention—one of many defence contentions—on the evidence, and, as was observed in Eknath Sahay v. Emperor (2):

"The Judge is not bound to address himself in every particular and in every detail to every suggestion put forward by the defence. It is the duty of the Judge fairly and candidly to point out the main and salient features of the case from the points of view of the prosecution and of the defence, respectively. And in doing so he is entitled to take into consideration the speeches made upon both sides by the Crown and by the prisoners' counsel, in considering his presentation of the evidence to the jury."

One important circumstance does however seem not to have been put to the jury, namely, the fact that the thali found in the bundle weighs one seer 10 chataks (vide Ex. 14), while the phul thali mentioned in Biswanath's list is only one and a half seers in weight and was used for about one year. It has been urged by Mr. Agarwala that weights vary from village to village, but the answer to this is that there is no suggestion in the present case that Biswanath's standard of weight was different from that adopted at the house search. The omission to refer to the weight of the thali assumes importance from the fact that in the case of the beruas found on Tribeni's concubine the learned Sessions Judge mentioned the possible loss of weight while the weight of the thali is in excess of what was mentioned by Biswanath, and also from the fact that apart from the thali there is no evidence against Ramsawarath. On the evidence I cannot imagine how the thali can be positively said to be Biswanath's, and I doubt whether the jury would have said so if their attention had been drawn to the question of the weight. I would therefore set aside the verdict against Ramsawarath Singh on the ground that it is erroneous by reason of a non-direction amounting to a misdirection. In my opinion Ram-sawarath's is also not a case for a retrial having regard to the evidence available.

The result is that I would allow the appeal of Tribeni and Ramsawarath, set aside their convictions and sentences, and acquit them. I would confirm the convictions of the five appellants in the other two appeals. The sentences passed upon them do not call for interference.

Criminal Revn. No. 395 of 1928, Decided on 30th July 1928, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Patna, D/- 23rd April 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 514—Order forfeiting security must be in terms of bond.

An order passed against a security for production of accused released on bail, forfeiting his security cannot be sustained if it is not in terms of the bond. [P 1016 C 1]

Nandkeolyar—for Petitioner.

Government Pleader—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner stood surety for the production of three persons before the District Magistrate, who had been ordered by the High Court to be released on bail pending decision of their application in revision. Two of these persons surrendered after the decision by the High Court. The petitioner applied for fourteen days' time to produce the third who he said was engaged in some business in the interior of the Monghyr District where the case had arisen but the trial of which had been transferred to Patna, but his bail bond was forfeited forthwith by the Deputy Magistrate. An appeal against this order was dismissed by the same Deputy Magistrate who was then acting as District Magistrate.

It was conceded by the learned Government Pleader that the procedure was erroneous in two respects, first, that no notice to show cause against forfeiture was given to the petitioner, and secondly, because the appeal was heard by the Magistrate who had passed the order; and he prays that the case may be remanded in order that the facts may be gone into.

On behalf of the petitioner it is contended that no remand is necessary because the conditions of forfeiture in the bond had not been satisfied. It appears that the police was required to report as to the sufficiency of the security and they reported on 15th March last against the petitioner, and thereupon notice was issued on him to produce the accused persons on 27th March. This was before the application in revision had been disposed of by the High Court. Now the terms of the bond was to surrender the accused persons to the District Magistrate on the day of decision or within the three days after or any other such date as the District Magistrate might direct. The petitioner therefore apparently had three alternatives before his bond could be forfeited and the order passed against him was not in terms of the conditions of the bond. It is therefore unnecessary to have a further enquiry into the matter and the application must be allowed and the order of forfeiture of the bond must be discharged. Any sum realised from the petitioner under this bond must be returned to him.

Criminal Revn. No. 26 of 1930, Decided on 25th April 1930, against order of D. E. Reuben, I. C. S., D/- 31st March 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 421—Appellate Court summarily dismissing appeal under S. 421 takes risk that appeal should be remanded unless High Court is satisfied that appellate Court has considered arguments adduced.

Although it is not illegal to dismiss an appeal summarily under S. 421, still the appellate Court which thus summarily disposes of an appeal without discussing arguments of the advocate for the appellant takes a risk that the appeal should be remanded unless the High Court is satisfied that the appellate Court really has considered the arguments adduced on behalf of the appellant, or has applied his mind to the consideration of the facts of the case which can only be if facts are unusually clear: 48 I. C. 499, Ref. [P 1016 C 2]

Subba Rao—for the Crown.

C. M. Acharya—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioners have been convicted of offences under S. 352

I. P. C., while one of them has been further convicted of an offence punishable under S. 448. The trying Magistrate in an elaborate judgment dealt with the evidence which had been adduced on behalf of the prosecution and of the defence, but the appeal from his decision was summarily dismissed by the District Magistrate under S. 421, Criminal P. C., by an order for which no reasons were given. Mr. M. Subba Rao on behalf of the petitioner suggests that the learned District Magistrate, since his order was open to revision, ought to have stated what arguments were put forward on behalf of the appellant and why they were not accepted. He does not suggest that the learned District Magistrate was obliged to admit the appeal merely because it was presented by a pleader, but he points out that the appellate Court after hearing the pleader and examining the record was actually in the position in which he would have been if after admitting the appeal and hearing arguments for the appellant, he had considered it unnecessary to call upon the Public Prosecutor to reply.

I think that this appeal must be remanded for rehearing. As was pointed out in the case of Guru Bari Behera v. Emperor (1) it is not illegal to dismiss an appeal in this way, but the appellate Court which thus summarily disposes of an appeal without discussing arguments of the advocate for the appellant takes a risk that the appeal should be remanded unless the High Court is satisfied that the appellate Court really has considered the arguments adduced on behalf of the appellant, or has applied his mind to the consideration of the facts of the case. For this the High Court has to depend upon the written record, and it is only where the facts are unusually clear that the Court can be satisfied in revision that a summary order under S. 421, Criminal P. C., was justified. For these reasons I must set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal to the District Magistrate for rehearing by himself or by any Magistrate who may be empowered to hear appeals.

Criminal Ref. No. 233 of 1930, Decided on 17th June 1930, made by Sess. Judge, Dehra Dun, D/- 27th February 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 258 (1) and 259—Charge framed—Complainant and his witnesses absenting on day fixed for their cross-examination — Magistrate should either adjourn case or acquit accused.

A complaint was lodged against the accused charging him with having shoe-beaten the complainant. A charge was framed against the accused and a date was fixed for the complainant to attend with his witnesses for cross-examination. The complainant and also his witnesses failed to attend. On their failure to appear the Magistrate passed an order discharging the accused, purporting to act under S. 259, being unaware as to what other course he should have adopted.

Held: that there were two courses open to him: firstly, to adjourn the case; or secondly, if he felt that there were no good grounds for adjourning the case to find the accused "not guilty" and acquit him, acting under S. 258(1). [P 1017 C 2]

 (b) Criminal P. C., S. 258 (1) — "Not guilty," meaning explained—Words.

M. Wulullah—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Dehra Dun asking this Court to order a re-trial, if it thinks fit, in a case where an accused person has been discharged, the Magistrate purporting to act under S. 259 although, a charge having been framed, he could not act under that section. The facts are simple. A complaint was lodged against the accused charging him with having shoe-beaten the complainant. The assault was in itself comparatively trifling but for the well-known fact that beating with shoes adds insult to any injury that may be inflicted. A charge was framed against the accused and a date was fixed for the complainant to attend with his witnesses for cross-examination. The complainant and also his witnesses failed to attend, and I may state immediately that I am not able to find on the record, nor is the Assistant Government Advocate able to show me, that the complainant has ever explained his failure and the failure of his witnesses to attend. In this connexion the Magistrate in his final order pointed out that even if the complainant had missed his train he could have come by lorry as the Magistrate waited for him till 2 p. m. It is some indication that the complainant did not miss his train and, that the witnesses also failed to appear. There is room therefore for holding that there may be some substance in the accused person's petition to this Court that the complainant and his witnesses deliberately stayed away because they did not want the trouble of going out into the camp where the Magistrate was, and were quite willing to harass the accused and his witnesses by letting them go unnecessarily. However that may be, there is no explanation before me and apparently none available as to why the complainant and his witnesses failed to appear.

On their failure to appear the Magistrate passed an order discharging the accused, purporting to act under S. 259, Criminal P. C. He admits that he could not act under that section as the accused had been charged, but he quite properly states his difficulty that he is unaware what course should have been adopted and practically invites assistance on this point. There were two courses open to him: firstly, to adjourn the case. He has given good reasons for not wishing to adopt that course. Secondly, if he felt that there were no good grounds for adjourning the case he should have found the accused "not guilty" and acquitted him, acting under S. 258 (1). It is true that he had so far formed an opinion that the accused was guilty, in that he had framed a charge against the accused and there had been no subsequent evidence given to suggest that the charge had been wrongly framed, but the accused was entitled to a final judgment, not merely on the preliminary evidence of witnesses on examination-in-chief, but on that evidence after it had been submitted to cross-examination; and if the complainant himself, in the particular facts of the case, is adjudged responsible for the witnesses of the prosecution not being available for cross-examination, he is himself responsible for rendering that testimony unsafe to rely upon. The Magistrate should then have held that in the circumstances of the case he had no alternative but to find the accused "not guilty" and have not acquitted him. The finding "not guilty" is a technical expression and not necessarily equivalent to a finding that the accused did not commit the acts charged.

I set aside the order of the Magistrate discharging the accused and for that order, there being no adequate grounds for ordering the case to be taken up afresh, substitute an order of acquittal. To this extent the reference is accepted. Let a copy of this order be sent to the Magistrate for his information.

Bar Association, Agra — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 54 of 1929, Decided on 25th April 1930, against order of Dist. Judge, Agra, D/- 3rd January 1929.

Legal Practitioners Act, S. 36—Notice to show cause served on person on 18th December—Application by him on 2nd January to issue summons to seven vakils—Summons declined and person asked to file affidavits of vakils—No affidavits filed and he was declared tout on 3rd January on resolution of Bar Association—Sufficient opportunity is not given to him to satisfy Court that he was not tout.

Notice to show cause was served on person on 18th December just a few days before Xmas holidays began. On the re-opening of the Court he applied on 2nd January for the issue of summons to a number of witnesses including seven vakils. The Judge instead of issuing summons and allowing him to take the risk if they were not served in time declined to issue the summons and directed him to produce affidavits from the vakils. As no affidavits were filed the Judge on the resolution of the Bar Association declared him to be a tout on 3rd January.

Held: that sufficient opportunity was not given to him to satisfy the Court that he was not a tout. [P 1018 C 2]

M. A. Aziz—for Applicant.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Sulaiman, J.—This is an application in revision by Riyazuddin from an order of the District and Sessions Judge of Agra declaring him a tout. The notice to show cause was served on 18th December 1928 just a few days before the Xmas holidays commenced. The affidavit filed before us shows that on that date his child was seriously ill and died on 22nd December 1928. On the re-opening of the Court he applied on 2nd January 1929 for the issue of summonses to a number of witnesses including seven vakils who were practising in the District Court. There is no doubt that he applied rather late, but the delay is now explained by his affidavit. The learned Judge instead of issuing summonses and allowing the applicant to take the risk if they were not served in time declined to issue the summonses and directed him to produce affidavits from these vakils. It is quite obvious that the applicant had no power to compel these vakils to swear affidavits although he could have easily got them summoned as witnesses. As no affidavits were filed the learned Judge on the resolution of the Bar Association declared him a tout on 3rd January. Subsequently he made an attempt to produce certificates of good character given to him by 12 vakils which he filed on 4th January. His request for a reconsideration of his case was refused. Even on the materials which were before the Judge it appeared that there were certificates of seven vakils granted to him in August 1928, just three months before the resolution of the Bar Association. Referring to the certificates the learned Judge remarked:

"Apparently the resolution of the Bar Association relates to the activities of Riyazuddin subsequent to that date."

We think that sufficient opportunity was not given to the applicant to satisfy the Court that he was not a tout. If the summonses had been issued and they were not served on the vakils, the matter would have been different. As they were practising in the Court there was a good probability of some of these vakils being actually served. We accordingly allow this revision and set aside the order of the Court dated 3rd January 1929 passed against Riyazuddin. This order does not of course preclude any further proceedings being taken against him.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.

Mana Gendal and others—Accused—Appellants.

v.

. Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 206 to 208 of 1930, Decided on 13th June 1930, from judgment of Sess. Judge, Kaira.

(a) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 325 and 304—Blows on head causing death—No uncertainty as to responsibility for offence—Sentence of five years rigorous imprisonment held proper.

The accused had caused death by blows on head of the deceased with sticks. It had been proved that the accused were the assaulters and were aware of the result of their action. There was no uncertainty as to responsibility for the offence by which death was caused.

Held: that under the circumstances the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment was reasonable whether the offence be under S. 304 (2) or S. 325: 29 All. 282, Dist. [P 1020 C 1]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 326—Person causing injury as to endanger life—He is presumed to know that he would cause death.

A person who voluntarily inflicts injury such as to endanger life must always, except in the most exceptional and extraordinary circumstances, be taken to know that he is likely to cause death: 42 I.C. 754, Ref. [P 1019 C 2]

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Broomfield, J.—The three appellants in this case were committed to the Sessions Court of Kaira on a charge under S. 304, I. P. C., the allegation being that they caused the death of one Dula Galab by inflicting injuries on his head and elsewhere in such circumstances that the offence constituted culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The Sessions Judge altered the charge to one of murder under S. 302, but convicted the accused of the offence of grievous hurt and sentenced Nos. 1 and 2 to five years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 325, and No. 3, who had used a knife, to seven years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 326.

The appeals have been admitted by this Court as regards the sentences only; but, before dealing with the question of sentences, we think it desirable to make some preliminary remarks as to the propriety of the finding that the offence amounted to grievous hurt and nothing more. It appears that there is a growing tendency among Sessions Judges to convict of the offence of grievous hurt in cases of offences against the person which have resulted fatally. The description of grievous hurt contemplated is practically never stated. In the great majority of cases, it could only be that mentioned in Cl. 8, S. 320, viz., "any hurt which endangers life." That was so, for instance, in the case of Emperor v. Khoda Samta (1). A person who voluntarily inflicts injury such as to endanger life must always, except in the most extraordinary and exceptional circumstances, be taken to know that he is likely to cause death. If the victim is actually killed, the conviction in such cases ought ordinarily to be of the offence of culpable homicide. In that connexion I may refer to Emperor v. Bai Jiba (2). The case before us now is a case of fracture of the bones of the skull. The evidence of the doctor who held the post-mortem on the deceased shows that there were contusions, one on the right side of the forehead and one on the left side of the scalp, and on dissection beneath these contusions, it was found that the frontal and both the parietal bones were fractured into several pieces, and the skull cap was depressed at various places pressing the substance of the brain. There was also an incised wound on the forehead, but the Doctor's opinion was that death was due to the fracture of the skull bones and the consequent injuries to the brain.

Now, if we consider the provisions of S. 322, I. P. C., which gives the definition of the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, it is clear that the conviction of the accused of the offence of grievous hurt when analyzed implies a finding that they intended or knew themselves to be likely to smash their victim's skull. But if that is found, how can one stop short of finding that they knew that they were likely to cause the death of the victim? In our opinion the offence established by the evidence in this case in respect of the injuries inflicted by accused 1 and 2 is culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and these accused should have been convicted of that offence.

The Sessions Judge has justified his conviction of the accused of the offence of grievous hurt only by reference to

(1) Criminal Appeal No. 198 of 1930, decided on 11th June 1930 by Mirza and Broomfield, JJ.

(2) [1917] 42 I.C. 754=19 Cr. L.J. 1010.

Emperor v. Bhola Singh (3). The facts there were that three persons attacked a fourth with lathis and one of the assailants struck a blow which fractured the skull of the person attacked and caused his death; but the evidence left it in doubt which of the three assailants struck the blow. Under these circumstances it was held that none of the accused could be convicted of the offence of culpable homicide, and the Court convicted them all of grievous hurt on the ground that having regard to the fact that lathis were used by all the three assailants, and that the probable result of the use of lathis was at least grievous hurt, the common intention of the assailants might be deemed to have been to cause grievous hurt. In the present case we have carefully considered the medical evidence and we find no such uncertainty as to the cause of death or as to the responsibility of the several accused for it. As I have stated, the doctor's evidence makes it clear that death was due to the blows on the head which fractured the skull of the deceased, and the evidence of the witnesses makes it clear that those blows on the head were struck by accused 1 and 2. The case of Emperor v. Bhola Singh (3) is therefore clearly distinguishable. Moreover that case is a doubtful authority in view of Emperor v. Gulab (4). There has been no appeal by Government against the acquittal of an offence under S. 304, and we do not propose in this appeal by the accused to alter the finding. In our opinion the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment imposed on accused 1 and 2 is reasonable sentence, whether the offence be under S. 304, part 2, or under S. 325. We certainly do not consider it excessive.

Coming to the case of accused 3, the Sessions Judge has not given any reason for inflicting a more severe sentence on him than on his companions. It is true that he was armed with a knife, whereas accused 1 and 2 had only sticks, but as we understand the medical evidence, the incised wound on the forehead inflicted by accused 3 was not responsible for the death of Dula. We are not altogether satisfied with the trial Judge's reasons for holding that S. 34, I. P. C. does not apply in this case. We are disposed to think that on the evidence all the three accused, as they were really acting in concert, could properly have been convicted of an offence under S. 304. However we leave the conviction as it is under S. 326 and reduce the sentence imposed on accused 3 to five years' rigorous imprisonment as in the case of the other two accused.

Mirza, J.—I agree.

On 24th March 1930 he applied to the City Magistrate, First Class, Poona, for being released on bail. The Magistrate refused the application on the ground that he had not then before him the charge sheets which were to be submitted by the police. The applicant then applied to the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge refused to grant bail. This was on 29th March 1930. The charge sheet was filed in the Magistrate's Court on 3rd April 1930. The applicant thereupon again applied to the City Magistrate for being released on bail. On this application the Magistrate made an order releasing the applicant on bail in his personal recognizance for Rs. 20,000 with three appointed sureties each in the sum of Rs. 7,000. Sessions Judge against the order of the Magistrate releasing the applicant on bail. On 5th April 1930 the Sessions Judge heard the parties on the application of the prosecution, cancelled the order of the City Magistrate, and ordered that the applicant be recommitted to custody. From this order of the Sessions Judge the applicant has applied to this Court for being released on bail. The reasons given by the Sessions Judge for cancelling the order of the City Magistrate are that five accused persons are involved in this case and further investigations in connexion with the offence are still in progress; that the offences charged relate to the misappropriation by the five accused of Rs. 15,000 belonging to certain miners. The Sessions Judge proceeds to state :

"It is still urged by the learned Public Prosecutor and I consider with some justification, that if the accused are released on bail the evidence is likely to be tampered with. I do not think that this is a fit case for allowing bail to the accused."

When the application first came before us on 10th April we allowed it to stand over to enable the Government Pleader to ascertain from those instructing him as to the exact nature of the apprehension on the part of the Public Prosecutor that if the accused is released on bail he is likely to tamper with the prosecution evidence. Sayad Usman Dagdoo, the Sub-Inspector of Police in charge of the investigations, has now made an affidavit in which he sets out the following grounds. He states that in the course of investigations, it has come to his knowledge that the applicant's co-accused, one Jaibai Karale, had pledged a gold ornament with the applicant and the same cannot now be traced. He apprehends that if the applicant is let out on bail it would be difficult for the prosecution to trace the ornament. He says in his affidavit that the applicant is a wealthy and influential man in Poona and if he is let out on bail he might win over the witnesses for the prosecution. He further alleges that a sum of Rs. 2,676 in respect of the price of certain milk supplied to the Sassoon Hospital, instead of being paid to one Mulik who was the milk contractor at the time, was paid to one Mahadu Martand who was a peon in the Sassoon Hospital and was attached at the time to the applicant who was the Hospital Steward. The Sub-Inspector states that if the applicant is freed from custody the peon Martand may not possess courage enough to say what he knows against the applicant.

With regard to the first one of these allegations the prosecution have not been able so far to trace the ornament which they allege was pledged with the applicant by his co-accused Jaibai. It is not clear how they would be hindered in tracing it if the applicant is let out on bail. The second allegation, viz. that the applicant is a wealthy and influential man in Poona and is therefore likely to win over the prosecution witnesses does not appear to us to be sufficiently cogent or convincing. It is common ground that there is no previous conviction against the applicant and that he has retired from Government service on a pension of Rs. 100 per month. We have no materials before us which would show that the applicant is a man of bad character or is likely to intimidate or otherwise win over the prosecution witnesses to his side. With regard to the third allegation it is shown that the applicant retired from his post of steward in the Sassoon Hospital two years ago and the peon Mahadu Martand has since continued in Government employment in the Hospital. There is no sufficient reason for us to suppose that Mahadu Martand would be under the influence of the applicant when he comes out on bail and would not be forthcoming to give true evidence against him at the trial. It is stated before us that Mahadu Martand has already made a statement before the police as to what he knows with regard to these alleged offences.

The principle on which the Courts act in refusing bail in such matters is stated by Doyle, J., in Maomed Yusoof v. Emperor (1) as follows (p. 542 of 3 Rang.) :

"Again, while mere vague allegations that the prisoner, if released, will tutor witnesses should not be taken into account, the Magistrate may well refuse to enlarge on bail where the prisoner is of such a character that his presence at large will intimidate witnesses, or where there are reasonable grounds for believing that he will use his liberty to suborn evidence."

Those remarks were endorsed by Sir Guy Rutledge, C. J., in the Full Bench case of Emperor v. Nga San Ht.

(1) A.I.B. 1926 Rang. 51=93 I.O. 65=27 Cr. L.J. 401=3 Rang. 538.

wa (2). In the case before us the allegations on which the learned Sessions Judge has acted in cancelling the applicant's bail appear to us to be of a vague and general character and they have not been better defined or substantiated since. In our opinion this is a fit case in which we should, in the exercise of our jurisdiction, set aside the order of the Sessions Judge and restore that of the City Magistrate, Poona.

The result will be that the applicant will be released on bail in his personal recognizance for Rs. 20,000 with three appointed sureties each in the sum of Rs. 7,000 to the satisfaction of the special First Class Magistrate, Poona; to whose Court we understand the case has since been transferred.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 156 of 1930, Decided on 18th June 1930, from order of Ch. Presy. Magistrate, Bombay.

(a) Appeal—Statute must expressly give right—Criminal P. C., S. 439.

(b) Bombay City Police Act (1902), S. 45—S. 45 does not deal with criminal Courts or their powers—Special power of Chief Presidency Magistrate is as persona designata.

The Act does not generally, nor does S. 45 in particular deal with criminal Courts or their special powers. The special power of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, under S. 45, is not as a criminal Court, but as a persona designata: 38 Mad. 581; 21 Bom. 279; A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 421; 36 Bom. 47 and A. I. Mahale and V. N. Chhatrapati — for Applicant.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Madgavkar, Ag. C. J.—The question in this appeal is whether this Court has jurisdiction to set aside an order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate dismissing the claim made by the petitioner on behalf of a widow for compensation under S. 45, City of Bombay Police Act 1902, for absence and refusing to take the matter back on his file.

The question necessarily depends on whether the order in question was passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate sitting as a Court, or whether it was passed by him as a persona designata. It is argued for the petitioner that under S. 15 of the Charter this Court has jurisdiction and that it is not expressly excluded by virtue of any other enactment. Jurisdiction however by way of appeal or revision will not be inferred but must be expressly given by statute.

On the main question as to whether the order was passed by a Court or by the Chief Presidency Magistrate as a persona designata, reliance is sought to be placed by the petitioner on the corresponding provisions in England, e. g., Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 22, Arts. 1044 and 1047. Even there it is to be observed that if the claimant is aggrieved by a refusal on the part of the police authorities, the appeal lies to the Home Secretary and not to the criminal Courts, without prejudice, it may be, to his right of action by way of a civil suit. With this last matter we are not now concerned.

Confining ourselves to the question above, the position, in our opinion, is analogous to that of a Presidency Magistrate under the Madras City Municipal Act: Vijiaraghavalu Pillai v. Theagaroya Chetti (1), or of District Judges in the case of Municipal elections: Balaji Saktharam v. Merwanji Nowrtji (2) and Chunilal Virchand v. Ahmedabad Municipality (3) or the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes under S. 33, City of Bombay Municipal Act: Bhaishankar v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (4) and Navalkar v. Sarojini Naidu (5) and the recent decision regarding Municipal assessment in Ahmed Sulleman v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay (6).

The City of Bombay Police Act 4 of 1902 does not generally nor does S. 45 in particular deal with criminal Courts or their powers. The conclusion therefore is that the special power under S. 45 of the Chief Presidency Magistrate is not as a criminal Court but as a persona designata. If so, no application by way of revision lies to this Court, not even to an order made refus-

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 72 of 1930, Decided on 13th June 1930, from order of 1st Cl. Magistrate Nasik City.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 197—Organizer of Co-operative Credit Societies appointed by Registrar as liquidator—Misappropriation while liquidator—Two posts being quite distinct, no sanction under S. 197 is required for prosecution.

An organizer of Co-operative Societies was appointed a liquidator of "M. Seed Society" by the Registrar. There was misappropriation of a certain sum of money by the liquidator.

Held: that the posts of the organizer and that of the liquidator, being quite distinct, no sanction under S. 197 is required for the prosecution of the liquidator on a charge of misappropriation. [P 1023 C 2]

(b) Penal Code (1860), Ss 408 and 409—Misappropriation by liquidator is not act in discharge of his official duty.

Broomfield, J. — The applicant in this case is an honorary organizer of Co-operative Credit Societies and was appointed as such by Government. The Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies appointed him liquidator of the Malgaon Seed Society, this appointment being made under S. 47, Bombay Co-operative Societies Act 7, 1925. It is alleged that he misappropriated a sum of Rs. 100 which came into his possession as liquidator and he has been prosecuted for an offence under Ss. 408 and 409, I. P. C.

A preliminary objection was raised that the sanction of Government was necessary before he could be prosecuted under S. 197, Criminal P. C. It was contended, firstly, that as organizer of Co-operative Credit Societies he was appointed by Government and was not removable from the office, except by or with the sanction of Government, and therefore sanction for the prosecution was required on that ground. Secondly, it was argued that as liquidator he was a Judge within the definition in S. 19, I. P. C. This objection has been overruled by the trial Magistrate and also in revision by the Sessions Judge. The applicant now comes to this Court for revision of the Sessions Judge's order.

There is clearly no force in the argument that sanction is required under S. 197 by reason of the applicant's position as organizer. That point has been quite convincingly dealt with by the Sessions Judge. He says:

"It is not necessary to labour the point. The most simple test is to raise the question if removal from his office of organizer would automatically remove the applicant from his post of liquidator. Clearly the Registrar would be entitled to retain him in his post of liquidator even if Government should decide to remove him from his post of organizer; it would be a matter for the Registrar alone to remove or retain him. It is not necessary to discuss this issue any further."

On that point we fully agree with the Sessions Judge.

The other point as to whether the liquidator appointed under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act is a Judge as defined in S. 19, I. P. C., is more difficult. The definition is as follows:

"The word 'Judge' denotes not only every person who is officially designated as a Judge, but also every person who is empowered by law to give in any legal proceeding, civil or criminal, a definitive judgment, or a judgment which, if not appealed against, would be definitive, or a judgment which, if confirmed by some other authority, would be definitive, or who is one of a body of persons, which body of persons is empowered by law to give such a judgment."

The Sessions Judge has drawn a distinction between acts which are final only on the sanction of a higher authority and acts which are subject to the confirmation of a higher authority. In the latter case he says the act, when confirmed by a higher authority, still remains the act of the lower authority; in the former case the act ceases to be an act of the lower authority on sanction being given and becomes an act of the higher authority. Under S. 50 of the Act the liquidator is given power to conduct legal proceedings of various kinds, but that can only be done with the sanction of the Registrar. That being so, the Sessions Judge's view is that the liquidator's acts are really the acts of the Registrar, that the Registrar so to speak acts through the liquidator, and the liquidator therefore is not a Judge within the definition. Unfortunately, there is nothing in the record before us to show at what stage of the proceedings or in what terms the sanction of the Registrar referred to in S. 50 is given. If it were necessary to decide the point we should have had to remand the case in order that evidence might be taken to clear up this point.

We do not consider, however, that it is necessary for the purpose of this case to decide whether a liquidator is a Judge or not. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that he is a Judge within the meaning of S. 19, sanction is only required in respect of any offence alleged to have been committed by him, "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty." In our opinion a liquidator who misappropriates money which has come into his custody as liquidator cannot be said to be acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. This point also is not free from difficulty, but the view we take is in accordance with previous decisions of this Court, viz. Reg. v. Parshram Keshav (1) and Emperor v. Hanmant (2), and see also Narayan v. Yeshwant (3). This view is also supported by Abdul Kadir Saheb v. Emperor (4) and Raja Rao v. Ramaswamy (5). In the latter case it was held that :

"the privilege of immunity from prosecution without sanction accorded to public officials only extends to acts which can be shown to be in discharge of official duty, or fairly purporting to be in such discharge. A prosecution for an offence arising out of an abuse of official position by an act not purporting to be official does not require sanction under S. 197, Criminal P. C."

We have been referred to an authority to the contrary effect in Ganga-

raju v. Venki (6). There Waller, J., dissents from the view which has been taken in some earlier cases that the fact of the accused being a Judge or a public servant must be a necessary element in the offence. He nevertheless made it perfectly clear that sanction cannot be required unless the act in respect of which the prosecution is brought was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official duty. The facts in that case are thus stated in the judgment (p. 608 of 52 Mad.) :

"The complainant's story is that the village Magistrate sent his talayari to fetch her in connexion with a case before him, in which she had not appeared, told her that for not appearing when summons was sent to her he sentenced her to imprisonment in the chavadi and he confined her in his chavadi, the place where the persons he sentences are by law to be confined."

The prosecution was for an offence of wrongful confinement. As the Court said, it is clear that under those circumstances the accused was purporting to act in the discharge of his duty as a village Magistrate. We do not consider however that a liquidator who simply appropriates to himself money coming into his custody as liquidator can be said even to purport to act in the discharge of his duty. We hold therefore that sanction for the prosecution of the accused was not necessary under S. 197. That being so there is no need to interfere with the Sessions Judge's order.

The rule and the interim stay are discharged.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a revision application against the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay convicting the three accused who are a sister and two brothers of stealing a barge named Gharapuri. Now it appears that an agreement for the sale of the barge was entered into between accused 1 Sitabai and the complainant Dharsey Mulji on 29th July 1929 Ex.A. The agreement provided that the barge should be sold for Rs. 1,051 of which Rs. 300 were to be paid as earnest money, i. e., as deposit, that the vendor should give delivery of the barge to the purchaser at Sewree Bunder, that the vendor should paint, repair or cause to be repaired any defects in the said vessel and should give delivery in a perfectly sound and seaworthy condition on the same being certified to be so by a competent and certified Surveyor, that the costs of painting, surveying and harbour charges after the barge came to Sewree Bunder should be borne by the purchaser, that until the surveyor certified the barge to be in a sound and seaworthy condition the barge should not be considered to have passed to the purchaser and the purchaser should be at liberty to rescind this contract of sale and the purchaser should have a lien on the barge for all his costs incurred and including the earnest money paid, and that the vendor should complete the contract within three weeks from the execution of that agreement, time being of the essence of the contract. The barge was subsequently brought to Sewree Bunder and in August 1929 the purchaser, at the request of the vendor, paid another Rs. 100 for the purpose of enabling the barge to be so brought. It is extremely probable that the rights of the parties under that agreement will be litigated in a civil Court and, I do not, therefore, express any definite opinion as to what the true effect of the agreement is. But in a letter dated 11th October 1929, to the complainant, the vendor's pleader set out what the contentions of the vendor were. After referring to the agreement he says:

"My client has thereafter on 20th September 1929, brought the barge to Sewree and has done everything that she has had to do in order to perform her part of the contract. In spite of many demands and promises on your part, you have as yet failed to pay her the remaining balance of the purchase money, viz., Rs. 651. I have to remind you that if you fail to do so, the contract will stand cancelled by your breach of the same and the earnest money and part payment made by you will be forfeited. I hereby call upon you to pay the aforesaid balance of Rs. 651 within 24 hours from the receipt hereof by you; in default please note that the contract will stand cancelled . . . and my client will also sue you for damages for breach of your contract."

From this it will be seen that the vendor's pleader was taking up the position that the purchaser was in default and he called upon the purchaser to complete the contract within a limited time—rather a short time I am bound to say—and in default threatened to forfeit the deposit and part payment and to file a suit for damages. Whether that position is legally right or not under the agreement, I do not propose to consider, but I think that it is a position which a pleader was quite honestly entitled to advise his client to adopt. I see no reason why the vendor should not honestly consider that those were her rights.

The learned Magistrate in the Court below has held as a fact that delivery of the barge was given to the purchaser soon after it reached Sewree Bunder. I am not altogether satisfied that that finding is correct. I find it very difficult to suppose that the vendor can have intended to give legal delivery of the barge without getting payment of the balance of the purchase money. It is quite possible that there may not have been any delivery in law, and it is even more possible that the vendor may have believed that there had been no delivery in law, and if the vendor believed that and that the possession of the barge was still in her in law, then, I think, she cannot be convicted of theft because she has not been shown to have had any dishonest intention in seizing possession of the barge. In my view this is really a matter which ought to have been litigated in a civil Court, and I think that the criminal law was invoked too hastily. That being so, the conviction must be quashed.

Conviction set aside. Fine paid to be refunded. We direct delivery of the barge to the accused vendor, but we suspend the operation of this part of our order for a month on the undertaking of the purchaser's pleader to file a civil suit, and our order for delivery is to be without prejudice to any order as to the custody of the barge which may be made in the civil suit.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 101 of 1930, Decided on 18th July 1930, from order of Addl. Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

* * (a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 179 and 181 (2)—Offence of criminal breach of trust—Venue of trial is determined by S. 181 (2) and not S. 179, and further failure to render accounts at different place does not take away that jurisdiction—Penal Code (1860), S. 405; 46 Bom. 641=65 I. C. 637=A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 39, Overruled.

Although loss to the principal or employer may be the usual and the normal result of criminal breach of trust, it is neither the necessary ingredient nor even the necessary consequence of the offence of criminal breach of trust. It is the act itself which in law amounts to the offence apart from any such consequence and therefore the jurisdiction to try an offence of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust is governed by S. 181 (2) and not by S. 179. Further, if there is a further duty enjoined upon the agent or the factor to render accounts at another place, the failure in rendering such accounts or rendering false accounts at such place does not confer jurisdiction under S. 179 upon the Magistrate at latter place: 46 Bom. 641=65 I. Per Madgavkar, J.—The matter entirely depends upon where the act of criminal misappropriation including dishonest intent is complete as far as the knowledge and belief of complainant go. [P 1031 O 2]

* (b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 179—For S. 179 person must be accused of commission of offence by reason of act done and consequence which has ensued.

What S. 179 provides is that when a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of two things; by reason, first, of anything which has been done, and secondly of any consequence which has ensued, then jurisdiction is conferred on the Court where the act has been done or the consequence has ensued. The offence therefore must be charged by reason of the two things, the act done and the consequence which ensued; and the consequence therefore forms the necessary part of the offence. S. 179 does not refer to an offence charged by reason of an act done, from which act any consequence has ensued. [P 1028 C 1]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes—Procedure—One section dealing with particular crime—For applying more general section strong words are necessary.

When there is a section for dealing with a particular form of crime, it requires strong words to show that any section of more general application was intended to deal also with that particular crime. [P 1028 C 2]

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an application in revision, which raises an important question of jurisdiction. The accused were placed on trial before the Additional Presidency Magistrate in Bombay charged with criminal breach of trust under S. 406, I. P. C., and falsification of accounts under S. 477-A. They took a preliminary objection that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to deal with the case, since the offences took place in Rangoon. The learned Magistrate held that he had jurisdiction, relying on the decision of this Court, Emperor v. Ramratan Chunilal (1). The accused then applied to this Court in revision, and on 15th May 1930 the case came before Mirza, J., and Broomfield, J. They considered they were bound by the case of Emperor v. Ramratan Chunilal (1), but as other High Courts had come to a conclusion different from that which this Court had taken in the case referred to, they thought it desirable to have the case argued before a Full Bench.

The complainant alleges that the complainant in October 1928 entered into partnership with the accused in the business of merchants and commission agents in rice carried on at Rangoon. Accused 1 was to manage and conduct the business at Rangoon according to the instructions that might be issued to him, and was allowed to draw monthly expenses at a certain sum. There were partnership articles between the parties, under which the head office was to be at Bombay, and under Cl. (12), accused 1 was to send weekly statements on account of the partnership as well as business transacted on behalf of the partnership to the head office in Bombay, and by Cl. (16) the accounts of the partnership were to be made up once a year, the profit and loss account to be forwarded by accused 1 to the head office in Bombay immediately after the accounts were made up, and the distribution of profits and losses were to be entered up thereafter in accordance with the instructions received from the head office. Now, in short, the charge made against the accused is that they misappropriated the firm's moneys in Rangoon and falsified the accounts in Rangoon, and the question is whether they can be tried for those offences in Bombay. We were referred to a very large number of cases, I think to all the cases on the subject.

I do not propose to go through them in detail, because no useful purpose will be served by so doing. It is quite clear that they are not reconcilable with each other. Putting it shortly, two rival views have been put forward, one of which has appealed to some of the High Courts and the other to other High Courts. The first view is that a loss to the principal is a normal, if not a necessary, consequence of criminal breach of trust, and that the accused can therefore be tried either where the offence was committed or the loss was incurred, and for that reliance is placed on S. 179, Criminal P. C. The alternative view is that loss is not a necessary ingredient of the charge of criminal breach of trust, and that S. 179 of the Code has no application, the case falling only within S. 181, sub-S. (2). Putting it quite shortly, I think in three cases the High Court of Allahabad has taken the first of those two views, and that is the view which was taken in Emperor v. Ramratan (1). The second view has been taken by the High Courts of Madras, Calcutta, Lahore, Patna and Rangoon.

In that state of the authorities one has to look at the section of the Code in order to form an opinion as to the right construction. The first provision, which it is necessary to look at, I think, is S. 405, I. P. C., which defines criminal breach of trust. That section provides :

"Whoever, being in any manner entrusted with property, or with any dominion over property, dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use that property, or dishonestly uses or disposes of that property in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged, or of any legal contract, express or implied, which he has made touching the discharge of such trust, or wilfully suffers any other person so to do, commits criminal breach of trust."

Now it seems to me clear from that definition of "criminal breach of trust" that loss to the principal or anybody else is not a necessary ingredient. Indeed, I can conceive of cases in which no loss would in fact be incurred. If a principal in Bombay entrusts an agent in Rangoon with the collection of moneys with directions to place the moneys in the account of the agent, but not to draw on that account except for the purpose of paying over the balance to the principal on the first of each month then in such a case, if the agent improperly draws moneys out of the account and place them in the name of a third party at another bank, with the dishonest intention of robbing his principal, and before the month expires the act is discovered and the agent then restores the money and the whole balance is paid over to the principal on the first day of the next month, I am unable to see that the principal has suffered any loss at all, although, I think it is clear that the agent has committed criminal breach of trust. However no doubt loss to the principal is the normal consequence of a criminal breach of trust, though, as I have said, the loss is not, under the definition in S. 405, an essential part of the charge.

Now one has to look next at the sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure dealing with the venue of trials. S. 177 provides that:

"every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed."

That is a provision of general application, and is based on the view of English law that all crime is local, and that jurisdiction to deal with it depends on the place where the crime is committed and not on the nationality of the criminal. Then the next material section is S. 179, which is the section which we have to construe. That provides:

"When a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued, such offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done, or any such consequence has ensued."

Now I must confess that but for the fact that many eminent Judges have taken a different view I should have thought that the language of that section was perfectly plain. What it provides is that when a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of two things, by reason first of anything which has been done, and, secondly, of any consequence which has ensued, then jurisdiction is conferred on the Court where the act has been done or the consequence has ensued. But the offence must be charged by reason of those two things, the act done and the consequence which ensued. If that is so the consequence is necessarily part of the offence. It does not matter whether you say, as some of the Courts have said, that the consequence must be an integral part of the offence or whether you say, as others of the Courts have said, that it is a necessary ingredient of the offence, the point is that the consequence must be part of the offence charged. The section does not refer to an offence charged by reason of an act done, from which act any consequence has ensued. When you look at the illustrations, they show clearly the meaning of the section. Take the first illustration. A is wounded within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court X, and dies within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Z. The offence of culpable homicide of A may be inquired into or tried by X or Z. In that case the offence charged is culpable homicide. The mere act done of wounding is not by itself enough to constitute a charge of culpable homicide. It may no doubt be ground for another charge, but that is immaterial. It does not constitute a charge of culpable homicide, unless it is followed by the consequence of death. So that taking S. 179 alone, and reading it without the help of any authority, I should have thought it was plain that the consequence referred to is a consequence which forms part of the offence, and a consequence which does not form part of the offence does not attract jurisdiction under S. 179. Then, when you come to look at the other material section, viz. S. 181, sub-S. (2), that provides:

"The offence of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person, or the offence was committed."

So that you get there a section dealing with the particular offence of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust, and you are given an option either to take proceedings in the place where the property was misappropriated or in the place where the property was received. When you find a section dealing with a particular form of crime I think it would require strong words to show that any section of more general application was intended to deal also with that particular crime.

Before I leave this part of the case, I should like, out of deference to the learned Judges who decided the case of Emperor v. Ramratan Chunilal (1) to refer a little more in detail to that case. The judgment was delivered by Sir Norman Macleod, C. J.

Apparently the case was not argued for the respondents, although undoubtedly cases on both sides were referred to. The learned Chief Justice sets out S. 179 and he states the fact and he says at p. 643 (of 46 Bom.):

"Now it seems clear that one of the consequences of criminal breach of trust, if committed by an agent, would be loss to the person to whom the property entrusted to the agent belonged, and therefore, as the complainant would be entitled to get the proceeds of the cotton sent to Bombay paid to him in Ahmednagar, if the proceeds were not paid to him, loss would be incurred at Ahmednagar and therefore the Court at Ahmednagar would have jurisdiction."

I have already pointed out that loss seems to me to be not a necessary ingredient, and not even a necessary consequence, of breach of trust. Then the learned Chief Justice refers to conflicting cases which had dealt with this point, and to the case of Empress v. O'Brien (2) which is one of the decisions of the Allahabad High Court in which it was held that S. 179 did apply, and then he says at the bottom of p. 645:

"In my opinion; the argument of the learned Chief Justice should be preferred to the arguments of the learned Judges in Simhachalam v.

(2) [1896] 19 All. 111=(1896) A. W. N. 191.

Emperor (8) and In re Rambilas (4). The decision in Empress v. O'Brien (2) was followed by the Allahabad High Court in Langridge v. Atkins (5). The whole question seems to me to depend on whether we must give to the word 'consequence' in S. 179 its ordinary grammatical meaning, or whether we are bound to restrict it to meaning a consequence which is a necessary ingredient of the offence. I see no justification for holding, that the ordinary meaning should not be given to the word 'consequence' in S. 179, and the argument in Empress v. O'Brien (2) seems clearly pertinent in reference to this point."

With great deference to the learned Chief Justice, it seems to me that the question is not: What is the natural and grammatical meaning of the word 'consequence' per se; the question is: What is the natural and grammatical meaning of the word "consequence" in the context in which it appears in S. 179? and as I have already pointed out, in my view, having regard to the context there, the consequence is to be part of the offence. Then the learned Chief Justice goes on (p. 645):

"For instance, an agent might be given goods by his employer to sell at various places, and if he performed the trust imposed upon him he would be bound to pay the proceeds of the goods which had been sold to his employer. If he did not, and if his employer charged him with criminal misappropriation, it would be exceedingly difficult to prove at what place he had sold any part of the goods and misappropriated the proceeds. It seems to me that S. 179 was intended to apply to such cases so as to enable an employer to file his complaint in the Court within whose jurisdiction the loss was alleged to have been incurred."

Well, that is a difficulty which impressed itself upon several learned Judges who held that S. 179 applied to cases of criminal breach of trust, but to my mind the answer to it is provided by S. 181, sub-S. (2). It may be difficult to prove the place at which the misappropriation took place, because misappropriation depends upon the intention of the accused, and it may be difficult to prove at what moment of time and at what place he assumed a dishonest intention; but then you are given the option by S. 181, sub-S. (2), to take proceedings in the Court in which the money was received, and there can be no difficulty in proving where the money was received, or if that fact cannot be proved, then the charge must necessarily fail because you cannot convict a man of misappropriating money unless it is first shown that he received the money. Therefore it seems to me that the difficulty suggested by Sir Norman Macleod does not really arise. In my view this case of Emperor v. Ramratan Chumilal (1) is based on a wrong view of S. 179, and we ought to overrule it; and this Court should come into line with the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras, and hold that S. 179 has no application to cases of criminal breach of trust.

Mr. Velinkar then took a second point which is open to him in this case. He says that the accused were bound to render accounts in Bombay, to send their accounts to Bombay, and he says that the misappropriation was not complete until after those accounts were delivered in Bombay which for the first time showed the complainant that he was being robbed, and he says that the delivery of false accounts in Bombay for the first time disclosed a dishonest intention which amounted in itself to a dishonest user of the money in Bombay, a dishonest user, that is, within part 2 of S. 405, I. P. C. For that proposition he has referred us to a case of the Calcutta High Court, Gunananda Dhone v. Lala Santi Prokash Nanley (6). In that case the learned Judges held in the first instance that criminal breach of trust fell within S. 181, sub-S. (2), and not within S. 179, and so far of course they are in accord with the view which I have suggested is the right view, but then they go on to discuss the difficulties which may arise in proving when a dishonest intent first arose. They point out that an agent may mix trust moneys with his own money without any intention of dishonesty, and he may then some time afterwards acquire the dishonest intention of using the money of the employer as his own money. After pointing out those difficulties, they say at the bottom of the first column in p. 436:

"Mr. Chatterjee has contended that these overt acts (i. e. delivery of false accounts) are but evidence of the fact that the offence of criminal breach of trust has already been committed by the accused, and from these acts his dishonesty may very well be inferred; but that these acts are not essential ingreclients of the offence itself which must have been complete before the acts are done. There is, in my opinion, considerable force in the contention; but at the same time, looking to the words of S. 405, I. P. C., I am disposed to take the view that if there is a contract that the accused is to, render accounts at a particular place and fails to do so as a result of his criminal act in respect of the money, he can, without unduly straining the language of the section, be said to dishonestly use the money, at that place as well, in violation of the express contract which he has made touching the discharge of the trust by which he came by the money, and so commits the offence of criminal breach of trust at that place also."

With very great respect to the learned Judges who decided that case I am quit unable to follow the line of reasoning. It seems to me to involve a confusion between the place where the offence was committed and the place where the complainant first acquired evidence that the offence had been committed. I can see nothing in S. 405, I. P. C., to justify the contention that when a man in Rangoon delivers false accounts in Bombay, he is thereby making a dishonest use in Bombay of money or property which has never left Rangoon. If the principle contended for is sound it might have far-reaching consequences. A banker or a factor in Bombay may have in his hands moneys belonging to thousands of customers or clients, and he may deliver false accounts to these customers or clients in a hundred different towns in India, and it seems to me that if the view of the Calcutta Court is right, he could be sued for criminal breach of trust in any one of the hundred towns in which he has delivered false accounts. That would be a very serious inroad upon the general provision of S. 177, which requires offences to be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction they were committed. I think that general provision is one which is founded on considerations of principle and expediency, and that Courts ought not to be astute in finding reasons for assuming jurisdiction to deal with crimes committed outside their jurisdiction. I am not prepared to follow the view expressed by the Calcutta High Court in the latter part of their judgment.

*Then Mr. Velinkar takes a third point. He says that even if he is not entitled to charge the accused in Bombay with criminal breach of trust, he can charge them with falsification of accounts.

Now the accounts were really falsified by the accused in Rangoon, but Mr. Velinkar says that the false accounts were sent from Rangoon to the head office in Bombay with the intention that they would be, and the effect that they were, written into the accounts at the head office, and therefore the falsification of the accounts in Rangoon and the sending of them to Bombay with the intention that they should be used to falsify the accounts in Bombay amounts itself to a falsification of accounts in Bombay, and for that proposition he relies on the English case, Rex v. Oliphant (7). That was a case which turned on the construction of an English Act, and can be no authority on the construction of the Criminal Procedure Code; but apart from that I do not find in the complaint any allegation that accounts were falsified in Rangoon for the purpose of procuring a falsification of the accounts in Bombay, i. e., that the accounts in Bombay were falsified. That being so I think that that point also is not open to the complainant.

In my judgment therefore this application succeeds and we must hold that the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to deal with this case.

Madgavkar, J.—The question in this application is whether S. 179 applies, as held in Emperor v. Ramratan Chuni-lal (1) and whether the Bombay Courts have jurisdiction. On the first point I agree with the conclusion formulated by my Lord the Chief Justice. On the three arguments for the complainant, in the definition of S. 405, I. P. C., whether the conversion is to his own use or contrary to any legal agreement, the element of dishonesty is equally necessary. That dishonest intent is complete when the intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss occurs under S. 24, and not necessarily when the wrongful loss or gain itself results. Therefore, even though such a loss may be a normal and usual result, S. 179, Criminal P. C., does not, in my opinion, apply, because from the initial words it can only apply when a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done and of any consequence which has ensued, whereas criminal misappropriation is complete with the conversion plus the dishonest intent and quite apart from any loss. Thus the loss, whether a consequence or otherwise, is not an ingredient of that offence, and therefore S. 179 has no application, but rather S. 177 and S. 181, sub-S. (2).

In regard to the cases on this point, in the three decisions of the Allahabad High Court, Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (2) followed in Emperor v. Mahadeo (8) and Langridge v. Atkins (5), where it was held that the loss entailed by the criminal breach of trust was a consequence that completed the offence, it is to be noted that they were all three cases in which it was doubtful where the misappropriation really took place. For the reasons stated above I agree rather with the view in Ganeshi Lal v. Nand Kishore (9), that unless the consequence such as the loss is an ingredient of the offence charged, S. 179 has no application. The Madras cases, Re Rambilas (4) and Krishnamachari v. Messrs. Shaw, Wallace & Co. (10), are to the same effect. At the same time it can hardly be said that S. 179 is controlled by S. 181. On that point I agree with the contention for the complainant that S. 177 is the general section, and the particular sections which follow, extend jurisdiction and venue, so that where S. 179 has application under the initial words S. 181 does not necessarily come in the way.

Ganeshi Lal v. Nand Kishore (9) is followed, and the other Allahabad cases, Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (2) and Langridge v. Atkins (5), dissented from in Simhachalam v. Emperor (3). The decision which appeals to me most is the judgment of Mukerji, J., in Gunananda Dhone v. Lala Santi Prokash Nanley (6), followed in Yacoob Ahmed v. V. M. Abdul Ganny (11). I agree entirely with the view of the learned Judge that criminal breach of trust is not an offence which counts as one of its factors the loss, which is the usual consequence of the act, and that it is the act itself which in law amounts to the offence, apart from any such consequence; and therefore the jurisdiction to try an offence of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust is governed by S. 181, sub-S. (2), and not by S. 179. The only doubt in my mind is as regards the class of cases referred to in the concluding portion of the judgment, where by reason of the secrecy observed by the accused doubt exists as to the exact manner, point of time or place where the misappropriation and conversion, etc., takes place, all matters within the special knowledge of the accused himself and not of the complainant, who can only judge from any overt act of the accused showing the dishonesty, which is essentially necessary to be proved. In such cases, if and where the accused is under liability to render accounts at a particular time and fails to do so, such failure may be the first overt dishonest act to the complainant's knowledge and the Court within the local limits where such failure takes place may have jurisdiction. But where the offence is completed at one place, the further liability to render accounts at another place and failure in rendering such false accounts at the second place does not confer jurisdiction under S. 179 upon the Magistrate at the latter place since the offence is already completed at the former place. At the same time, as is conceivable, where the offence is not completed as far as the knowledge and belief of the complainant goes in the place where the money was first sent, but the dishonest intent which is a necessary ingredient is only completed not merely as evidence but actually as factum of dishonesty by some act such as the rendering of accounts, then I am unable to say that even under S. 181, sub-S. (2), the criminal Courts in the latter place are excluded from jurisdiction. In my opinion the matter entirely depends upon where the act of criminal misappropriation including the dishonest intent is completed as far as the knowledge and belief of the complainant according to the complaint go. In such a case I agree with Mukerji, J., that the Courts in the place where the act is completed may have jurisdiction even though they may be different from the place where the money has been originally sent by the complainant.

Coming to the Bombay decisions, the decisions on cheating, such as Emperor v. Jamnadas Vasanji (12), have no bearing on the present question. Emperor v. Ramratan Chunilal (1) has been followed in Emperor v. Gafur Karimbax (13), in which Re Ramlilas (4) is distinguished. Without adding to the reasons of my Lord the Chief Justice, it appears to me that the question of grammatical meaning of the word "consequence" does not arise at all. By reason of the initial words and sentence of S. 179, unless the offence of which the person is accused is an offence not only by reason of something which he has done, but also of some consequence which has ensued, S. 179 has no application, and it is not necessary to distinguish the grammatical and the other meaning of the word "consequence," nor to distinguish between consequence direct and indirect, immediate and remote. As I have already stated above, criminal misappropriation is not an offence in which the ingredient of loss enters. S. 179 is therefore excluded, in my opinion, and I agree that in this view we must overrule the view and the decision in Emperor v. Ramratan Chunilal and Emperor v. Gafur Karimbax (13), in so far as it is based on the former case.

Applying the law as stated above to the facts of the present case, after reading the agreement and the complaint as it is now formulated, I am of opinion on the complaint itself the criminal breach of trust appears to have been completed in Rangoon. As regards the falsification of the accounts, the falsification alleged in the complaint is the falsification of the account in Rangoon. There is no explicit averment of abetment or of falsification of accounts in Bombay. The case of Rex v. Oliphant (7) was different, depending on the construction of the Falsification of Accounts Act, and it is therefore of no avail. On the complaint as it stands, and in the view of the law which I have ventured to formulate above, I agree that the Presidency Magistrate in Bombay had no jurisdiction, as he held, relying on Emperor v. Ramratan Chunilal (1). As we are overruling the view of the law formulated in that case, it follows necessarily that on the complaint as at present filed, the Court of Bombay has no jurisdiction. I agree with the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Baker, J.—I agree with the view taken by the learned Chief Justice and the conclusion at which he and my learned brother have arrived. I will add only a very few words to what has already been said. The definition of "dishonestly" in S. 24, I. P. C., shows that all that is necessary is the intention to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss. It is not necessary that such wrongful gain or wrongful loss should, as a matter of fact ensue, and therefore it is not necessary that the offence of criminal breach of trust should actually involve wrongful gain or wrongful loss, although as a matter of fact in almost every case or in the majority of cases it does so. If I may say so with respect, the variance between the views taken by different High Courts on the question of the jurisdiction in cases of criminal breach of trust appears in some cases to be due to the theory that knowledge of loss is the same as loss. Now the offence of criminal breach of trust is an offence which is complete at the moment when the agent disposes of the property in violation of his trust, and the loss occurs at that moment. The Calcutta High Court has taken the same view in one of the cases quoted, and that at that moment the owner loses the money in the hands of his agent, and the question of when that loss comes to his knowledge seems to me to be perfectly immaterial for purposes of jurisdiction. So far as regards S. 179, Criminal P. C., it seems to me clear on the wording of the section as it stands that the consequence is part of the offence. In a case of the present character the consequence of the offence is loss to the owner. That loss takes place at the place, where the criminal breach of trust is committed, and not at the place where knowledge of that loss comes to the owner, which may be anywhere else. I, therefore, agree with the view that has been taken that the Magistrate in this case had no jurisdiction.

Referred Trial No. 155 of 1929, and Criminal Appeal No. 556 of 1929, Decided on 11th February 1930, from judgment of Sess. Judge, Ramnad Division, in Sessions Cases Nos. 42 and 49 of 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 233—Misjoinder of charges is cured by S. 537 when it does not result in injustice to accused—Criminal P. C., S. 537.

It cannot be assumed that if a mandatory provision of the Code has been infringed in framing the charge, the Court must of necessity be held to have failed in administering justice to the accused. S. 537 affords no real grounds for any such assumption. The impugned procedure must be one that is not only prohibited by the Code but also works actual injustice to the accused: A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 44, Foll. [P 1034 C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 149 — Preparation towards common object is prosecution.

After people have formed themselves into an unlawful assembly and decided upon their common object, preparation towards that common object is prosecution or following up, and if the preparation happens to be an offence then they are all equally liable. [P 1035 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 239 (4) — Common object is not necessary to validate joint trial of offences committed in the same transaction.

Where persons are accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction, it is not necessary that all such persons must have a common object in order to render their joint trial valid. [P 1034 C 2]

Nugent Grant and U. Somasundaram
—for Appellants.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The sixteen appellants do not dispute the lower Court's findings of fact.

On 11th April 1929 at Khansapuram twenty to thirty persons came from the north armed with guns and sticks with the common object of shooting Sangiah Tevan and looting his house. When they were fifty yards off the house one Sundara Tevan, P. W. 10, tried to dissuade them, and Krishna Tevan, P. W. 11, who belongs to Sangiah's faction abused them. Krishna Tevan was hit on the head by accused 13 and then two more of the opposite faction Alagu and Sangiah, ran up. Appellant 1 shot Alagu, and the third shot Sangiah. Then the fourth fired into seven persons who came to help them, after which there was a general stampede. Alagu was shot through his heart and died immediately. Sangiah had his leg broken and died of gangrene on the 14th.

The learned Judge has found that the shooting and the assault upon Krishna were the sudden outbreaks of individual members of the assembly, and therefore presumably were not in prosecution of its common object. Accordingly he has acquitted all the appellants of rioting. But he has found them all guilty of being members of an unlawful assembly under S. 143, I. P. C., and inasmuch as the men who fired (appellants 1, 3 and 4) undoubtedly had guns, he has found all guilty either directly or constructively by the provision of S. 149 of being armed with deadly weapons while being members of an unlawful assembly, the offence under S. 144, I. P. C.

Accused 1 and 3 are found guilty of murder, S. 302, I. P. C., and accused 4 guilty of attempted murder, S. 307, I. P. C.

Accused 13 is found guilty under S. 323. It is argued by Mr. Nugent Grant that none of those convictions can stand because the two murders, the attempted murder and the hurt were several and independent transactions which had no real connexion with the unlawful assembly. For every distinct offence of which any person is accused there must be a separate charge (S. 233) unless they are so connected together as to form the same transaction (S. 235), and the misjoinder of charges in this case has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

To this plea there would seem to be three sound answers. In the first place it cannot be said that there has been failure of justice. Supposing that the murders and assaults were quite unconnected with the object of the unlawful assembly, a Court which had joined them all together in one trial might well have been led to attribute to the assembly force and violence of which it was entirely innocent, and so might have found it guilty of rioting; and had this case terminated in a conviction of rioting it would be impossible to say that the irrelevant consideration of the extraneous offences had not influenced the mind of the Court. But the charge of rioting was dismissed, and it must be said that the mind of the Court, though dangerously exposed to infection, proved absolutely immune.

No doubt ever since the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in N. A. Subramania Iyer v. Emperor (1) it has been the general practice to assume that if a mandatory provision of the Code has been infringed in framing the charge the Court must of necessity be held to have failed in administering justice to the accused. S. 537 affords no real ground for any such assumption, and the Judicial Committee itself when it had occasion to refer to Subramania Iyer v. Emperor (1), in Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (2), clearly indicated that the impugned procedure must be one that is not only prohibited by the Code, but also works actual injustice to the accused. In the latter case the Code was clearly infringed, but the curative provision of S. 537 was considered a sufficient remedy.

In the second place, whatever conclusion was finally arrived at by the learned Judge, it is clear that, before evidence was heard, it must have been a very open question whether the shooting was or was not in prosecution of the common object. It is a question of degree. If the men who protested had been ranged on the doorstep of Sangiah's house it would be hard to say that shooting them was not in prosecution of the looting. What if they were five, ten, fifty yards away? It is a matter that could only be decided after most careful consideration of the evidence as a whole; and it cannot be said that to have accused these persons of shooting in prosecution of the common object was in any way frivolous. If the charge could be postponed till after the conviction a more perfect symmetry might be attained, but unfortunately that cannot be, and the charge of necessity must be founded upon the accusation: cf. Abdul Salim v. Emperor (3), at p. 596 (of 49 Cal.) It cannot be said therefore that there has been any misjoinder in contravention of S. 233, Criminal P. C.

In the third place, even supposing

(1) [1902] 25 Mad. 61=29 I. A. 257 = 8 Sar. 160 (P.C.).

(2) A. I. B. 1927 P. C. 44=100 I. C. 227 = 23 Cr. L.J. 259=54 I. A. 96=5 Rang. 53 (P.O.).

(3) A. I. B. 1922 Cal. 107 = 69 I. C. 145 = 23 Cr. L. J. 657=49 Cal. 573.

that the ultimate findings govern the charge, so that the Court was precluded from charging as though the shooting had been in prosecution of the common object, still it cannot be said that the whole affair was not in the course of the same transaction. The accused formed themselves into a body with the intention of looting and shooting Sangiah Tevan and frightening away anyone who tried to prevent them, otherwise there is no explanation for such a display of force. It has never been held that in a transaction all the persons engaged must have a common object. Taking the transaction to be the adventure of private war upon which the appellants embarked on 11th April a historian of that transaction would hardly omit all mention of the shooting as belonging to a totally different transaction. As Benson, J., observes in Choragudi Venkatadri v. Emperor (4):

"It is neither necessary nor advisable to attempt to define the expression 'the same transaction' which the legislature has left undefined."

Each particular case must be tried by common sense and common knowledge of language, and if these tests be applied the whole affair from the formation to the disruption of this assembly seems obviously to be one transaction.

Therefore the plea of misjoinder is not sustainable. It is next argued that the appellants who are not found to have been armed cannot be constructively held guilty under S. 144 by the provision of S. 149. There can be no doubt that if a member of an unlawful assembly, liable under S. 143, I. P. C., to six months rigorous imprisonment is armed with a deadly weapon he is punishable with two year's rigorous imprisonment under S. 144. Therefore being so armed is a thing made punishable by the Penal Code and consequently, under S. 4), an offence.

Now, is the offence so committed by the member of the unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly. Prosecution in plain English is following up. They assembled and formed the common object of shooting a man. What did they do to follow it up? Some of them came to the assembly with guns, or stayed in the assembly with guns, and at any rate took care not to be parted from their guns. That seems to be clear following up. Mr. Grant would say that it was mere preparation, but after people have formed themselves into an unlawful assembly, and decided upon their common object preparation towards that common object is prosecution or following up, and if the preparation happens to be an offence then they are all equally liable. Suppose they burst in a door; that is not mere innocent preparation for the intended looting. It must be held therefore that this plea also fails.

There remain two pleas ad misericordiam on behalf of the murderers sentenced to death. It is clear from the medical evidence that accused 1 shot Alagu Tevan with various pellets through the heart and thigh. He may be taken to have aimed at his stomach and it cannot be said that he did not intend his death. Accused 3 shot Sangiah five inches below the knee and shattered the bones. He had said: Why do you shoot him who was keeping quiet and for that innocent protest was shot. Mr. Nugent Grant says that the murderer only hoped to maim him; only hoped perhaps to cripple him for life. It was a murderous act, without the smallest justification and it resulted in murder. We see no reason to interfere. It cannot be said that any of the appellants has been treated with undue severity, and we dismiss their appeals.

V. L. Ethiraj and Somasundaram—for Petitioners.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a petition to revise an order under S. 118, Criminal P. C., made by the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul requiring the petitioners, 12 in number, to furnish security for keeping the peace for one year. The order was on appeal confirmed by the learned Sessions Judge of Madura.

Two objections are taken to the order complained against: (1) that the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul had no jurisdiction to make it; (2) that the preliminary order under S. 112, on which the proceedings were initiated was defective in that it did not contain the substance of the information received.

To understand the first objection the facts necessary are that the petitioners and the place where the alleged breach of the peace was apprehended are within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Usilampatti. The proceedings against the petitioners and others under S. 107 were instituted before that Magistrate, and he on 29th December 1928 made the preliminary order under S. 112 calling upon the petitioners and others complained against to show cause. The District Magistrate then transferred the case to the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul. The latter Magistrate for some reason drew up another preliminary order under S. 112 making formal changes in the order passed by the Usilampatti Magistrate but substantially in the same terms as that order. The petitioners showed cause, one of their objections being that the order under S. 112 was not definite enough as it did not contain any particulars. The Magistrate brushed this aside as a technical objection and stated that in his opinion the order does give particulars of the dispute and the reasons for apprehending a breach of the peace, and he added that the further details appeared as the prosecution unfolded its case. To return to the objection as to the jurisdiction: it is argued that the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul had no jurisdiction to proceed with the enquiry against the petitioners because neither were the petitioners living within the jurisdiction of that Magistrate, nor was the place where the breach of the peace was apprehended within his jurisdiction.

It is contended that according to S. 107, Magistrates other than a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate are not only incompetent to initiate proceedings against persons residing beyond their jurisdiction in respect of breach of the peace beyond such jurisdiction, but they are also incompetent to hear cases under S. 107 transferred to them by the District Magistrate where the persons and the places affected are not in their jurisdiction. For this contention no direct authority was forthcoming. But the decision in Nagi Reddi Konda Reddi, In re (1) was referred to. That case is not on all fours with this. There the Magistrate before whom the proceedings under S. 107 were initiated had not passed the preliminary order when the District Magistrate transferred the case to another Magistrate, and it was held that there having been not even an initiation or commencement of proceedings under S. 107 before the Magistrate competent according to the terms of that section, the order of transfer did not confer jurisdiction on the Magistrate to whom it was transferred and that therefore the proceedings before him were incompetent. That case did not decide, because the facts were not so, that where a Magistrate having jurisdiction according to S. 107 has made an order under S. 112 the District Magistrate is not empowered to transfer the case so initiated to another Magistrate competent according to his grade or class to try this class of cases, although not qualified by the requirements of S. 107 as regards territorial jurisdiction. On that limited proposition there appears to be no decision of this Court. But the point is covered by an authority, namely Surjya Kanta v. Emperor (2), which was referred to in Nagi Reddi Kondi Reddi, In re (1) with approbation. In the Calcutta case the precise point arose and it was decided in 1904

"that the intention of the legislature was to limit the jurisdiction in regard to the institution of proceedings to a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate; but that when such Magistrate has, in the exercise of his discretion, directed institution of proceedings, there is nothing in the law to prevent him from transferring the case to a Magistrate otherwise qualified to complete the proceedings."

This decision has stood the test of subsequent amendments of S. 107 and there is nothing in the amendment of 1923 to show that this view was not accepted as correct or that the legislature intended to alter it in any way. The result is that the Usilampatti Magistrate having first drawn up the preliminary order under S. 112 the subsequent transfer of the case to the Dindigul Magistrate by the District Magistrate was authorized and the proceedings before the Dindigul Magistrate were competent. The first objection therefore fails.

The second objection relates to the defect in the order under S. 112 and the objection is that that order does not, as it is required by S. 112 of the Code to do, set forth "the substance of the information received." Upon the decisions on this topic there is no reasonable doubt as to what the intention of these words is. It is to give in substance an abstract of the facts upon which the Magistrate charges the persons proceeded against with being likely to commit a breach of the peace so as to give them notice of what they have to meet and be prepared to meet it. There are many instances of the practical application of this general rule, of which a very good one is found in Kutti Goundan, In re (3). The general rule being as stated the question is whether in this particular case the order satisfies the requirements. Other decisions cannot be of much help on that point. The order upon which the Dindigul Magistrate proceeded was one drawn up by himself on 4th April 1929 after the case was transferred to him. In one sense this was not the order on which he ought to have proceeded because the proceedings having been already initiated he could not initiate them over again and the order which he should have started upon was the order passed by the Usilampatti Magistrate on 29th December 1928. If there had been any material difference between the two orders that might alone have been a sufficient irregularity to invalidate all that followed. But as it happens, the order drawn up by the Dindigul Magistrate, is, apart from formal changes, necessitated by the change of venue, substantially the same as the order passed by the Usilampatti Magistrate, and therefore no more need be said about it. The new order drawn up was merely superfluous. The substance of both orders is this:

"That you . . . formed yourselves into a faction espousing the cause of counter-petitioner, 1, against Kamatchi Goundan of the same village in regard to the possession and enjoyment of a tamarind tope situated in S. No. 1392 of Odaipatti village and by the inimical attitude of yours against the said Kamatchi Goundan's faction, you are likely to commit breaches of peace or disturb the public tranquility or do wrongful acts that may probably occasion breaches of peace or disturb the public tranquility."

It will be noticed that no other fact is mentioned here except that there are two factions in the village and a dispute between them about a tamarind tope and that the counter-petitioners are on one side. It gives absolutely no indication as to what the information was upon which the counter-petitioners were believed to be threatening breaches of the peace. It would have left the counter-petitioners just as well informed on that point as if they were told:

"You are wicked men. You have got enemies and therefore you are likely to commit breaches of peace."

In my opinion not only was there no attempt to state in substance the information received against the counter-petitioners, but the order contained nothing from which they could know the case that they would have to meet. The order therefore was clearly defective. This was not, as the Dindigul Magistrate thought, a merely technical defect that it did not give the particulars or the reasons for apprehending a breach of the peace. On that ground the order is liable to be set aside. But it has been argued for the Public Prosecutor that this defect does not vitiating the proceedings because it did not occasion a failure of justice. I do not question, at any rate I do not now want to question, whether a defect of this character is curable. But the question whether failure of justice has been occasioned in every case is one of fact. In this case the objection was taken before the Magistrate himself, and that according to S. 537, is always a circumstance from which failure of justice may be inferred. Whether it was in fact occasioned in this case cannot be disputed because the counter-petitioners did not have the information they were entitled to possess in the early stage of the proceedings, and if they had possessed it at that time they might have met it successfully. The order therefore must be set aside and the bonds given by the petitioners will be cancelled. I come with all the more confidence to this conclusion because this order passed in May 1929 will in any case expire in two months more.

Criminal Revn. No. 809 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 725 of 1929, Decided on 7th March 1930, from order of Joint Magistrate, Tirupattur, D/- 9th August 1929, in Civil Appeal No. 35 of 1929.

Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), S. 362—"Other materials" include trees when cut.

Trees standing on the land vested in the Municipal Council when cut become "other materials" so as to constitute the removal of the same an offence under S. 362 [P 1083 C 1]

G. Krishnaswami Iyer—for Petitioners.

A. Narasimha Iyer—for the Crown.

A. Suryanarayana—for Complainant.

Order.—The petitioners, the Mittadar of Devasthanam Mitta and his son, seek to revise the conviction recorded against them under S. 313 read with S. 362, District Municipalities Act, by the Sub-Magistrate, Vaniyambadi, which was confirmed by the Joint Magistrate, Tirupattur.

They were fined Re. 1 each. The offence charged against them was that they had cut and removed trees from four town survey numbers, namely 1166, 1227, 1225 and 1228. The Municipal Council claimed those properties as vested in it. Therefore the petitioners were charged with having violated S. 362, District Municipalities Act, by cutting and removing trees therefrom. Both the Magistrates found that the four survey numbers above mentioned were properties which vested in the Municipal Council of Vaniyambadi. The argument of the learned advocate for the petitioners in this Court is twofold: (1) that the acts charged do not amount to an offence under S. 362 (2); that the properties from which the trees were cut have not been shown to be properties vested in the Municipal Council.

Section 362 says:

"No person shall, without authority in that behalf, remove earth, sand or other materials from any land vested in the Municipal Council, or river, estuary, canal, back water or water course (not being private property)."

The argument is that trees do not come within the expression "other material" in this section. I am unable to see how trees growing upon land are to be excluded from the expression "other materials" which is quite general. To exclude trees growing upon the land vested in the Municipal Council from this section would enable anyone to cut and remove trees from Municipal land and plead that they had not contravened the section although, according to the words immediately preceding, to remove a basket of earth or a load of sand from the foot of such trees, would be an offence. I do not think that this is a reasonable construction. I must say that trees when cut are "other materials" which are upon land vested in the Municipal Council.

As to the question whether the survey numbers from which the trees were cut were or were not vested in the Municipal Council it was not disputed in either of the Courts below that Survey Nos. 1166 and 1227, which are registered respectively as "road margin" and Government river poramboke, belonged to and vested in the Municipal Council. I do not see how the petitioners can now be heard to re-open that question.

As regards the other two Survey Nos. 1225 and 1228 the survey register produced shows that they were classed as "river poramboke within devasthanam limits." The learned advocate for the petitioners argues, that this shows that these properties are the private property of the Mittadar and, that therefore S. 125, which was relied upon to show that the beds of water-courses and lands adjacent thereto belong to the Municipality, is not applicable.

But there is evidence that the classification of property as "river poramboke within devasthanam limits" means that such property is not within the mitta proper but outside, and this is made clear from the facts referred to by the Sub-Magistrate in para. 7 of his judgment. Certain other properties were wrongly classed as patta lands. On the application of the Municipality the Director of Survey classed them as "river poramboke within devasthanam limits." The predecessor-in-title of the present petitioners sued the Government and the Municipal Council to have this classification altered and those properties classified as patta lands. That dispute was settled by a compromise the result of which was that the lands the subject of dispute were declared according to the request of the Municipality as river poramboke, but the Mittadar was compensated by the peshkush being reduced proportionately and by the arrears which had been collected being refunded and by his being permitted to cut and remove the trees which were growing upon those properties before the floods of 1874. This shows that the classification of property as river poramboke, although within the devasthanam limits, indicates that it is not part of the mitta, and this answers the objection of the learned advocate for the petitioners founded upon the decision in Venkata Lakshmi Narasamma v. Secy. of State (1) that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the presumption, which may be strong or weak, is that the soil of non-navigable rivers vests in the owners on either side. Here there was proof to the contrary. The river in question is the river Palar, an important river of considerable size although not navigable. Therefore the conclusion of the Magistrate was right that the properties in question are not the private properties, and the conviction was therefore right. The petition is dismissed.

Order.—The petitioners five in number, were convicted by the Second Class Magistrate of Amalapuram under S. 323 I. P. C. and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 20 each or one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. Out of the fine P. V. 1 was awarded Rs. 30 as compensation. They appealed to the Joint Magistrate of Rajahmundry. The petition of appeal and a copy of the judgment of the Sub-Magistrate were presented to the Joint Magistrate on 5th August 1929, when he was on tour by a pleader on behalf of the petitioners. The Magistrate having heard, as he reports, the pleader in support of the appeal, dismissed it under S. 421, Criminal P. C. His judgment is brief. After stating that the judgment of the Sub-Magistrate sets out the evidence fully it goes on to say that the attack on the complainant took place in daylight in the open and that the defence of alibi was a tissue of falsehood and winds up with the remark that the appellant's pleader has shown no grounds for interference. For the petitioners it was represented at the time this petition came on for admission that according to the petitioner's pleader who presented the appeal, the Joint Magistrate personally perused the judgment and the grounds of appeal and asked him whether he conducted the case in the lower Court to which he said that he did not conduct it throughout, that then the Magistrate asked if he had anything to say in support of the appeal, that the pleader then asked for time to argue the case as he had not fully gone through the record, that no time was granted and the appeal was summarily dismissed under S. 421. This representation for the petitioner was communicated to the Joint Magistrate who has sent a report dated 6th December 1929 that the appeal was presented to him at the Amalapur Traveller's Bungalow in the morning, that on perusing the judgment of the lower Court he informed the pleader who presented it that it appeared to fall into the class of appeals which he usually dealt with under S. 421, Criminal P. C., that the pleader voluntarily launched into the merits of the appeal rather fully and was heard for at least half an hour, that no application for further opportunity to argue the case was made to him, that if such application had been made it would have been granted and that finally the Magistrate intimated his intention of dismissing the appeal summarily.

The question before me is whether the procedure adopted by the Joint Magistrate was in the circumstances substantially in accordance with the provisions of S. 421, in other words whether the petitioners or their pleader had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal.

On this point a decision of Ramesam, J., has been brought to my notice, namely Turka Hussain Saheb, In re (1). That decision seems to lay down as a rule of law that a criminal appeal should not be heard at the time of presenting the papers even for the purpose of dismissal under S. 421, Criminal P. C., and that there must be a special posting of the appeal after a reasonable time for the purpose of hearing under S. 421. It also appears to lay down as a rule that an appeal raising questions of fact ought not to be disposed of under S. 421 without the original records being called for from the lower Court. If either of these two requirements was a necessary condition before action under S. 421 could be lawfully taken there would be no further question in this petition, because neither of these was done. The appeal was dismissed on the very day it was presented and it was not posted a week later for the purpose of hearing. Also the records were not sent for. Without entering into the matter more fully, because in the nature of the conclusion at which I have arrived in this petition it is not necessary to do so, I do not think that the learned Judge intended to do more than indicate that as a rule of caution and sound procedure it is better to post an appeal for being heard even under S. 421 and to send for the original papers. So far as the section itself is concerned, neither of those requisites would seem to be laid down by the words. The section says explicitly that:

"on receiving the petition and copy under Ss. 419 and 420 the appellate Court shall peruse the same and if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering may dismiss the appeal" summarily and then the proviso says that:

"an appeal presented under S. 419 should not be dismissed unless the appellant or his pleader had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal. In sub-Cl. 2 it is distinctly said that before dismissing an appeal under the section the Court may call for the record in the case but shall not be bound to do so."

In the face of this express declaration that the Court shall not be bound to send for the papers I do not think it was intended to be laid down in the decision cited by the petitioners that the Court was bound to send for the papers before taking action under S. 421. No distinction is made in the section between appeals relating to facts and appeals raising questions of law. The provision is perfectly general. Similarly as to posting the case to a subsequent date after the presentation for the purpose of being heard under S. 421, the words of sub-S. 1 seem to me to be plain that so long as a reasonable opportunity is given to the appellant or his pleader to be heard in support of the appeal there is no legal requirement, as to any postponement of the hearing after the presentation of appeal. I quite appreciate that in the great majority of cases when an appeal is presented, neither the appellant nor the pleader may be in a position to straightaway argue in support of the appeal and therefore it may be a wise rule in proceeding under S. 421 to give sufficient time to the appellant or his pleader and to inform him that he will be heard on a particular day in support of the appeal with a view to action being taken under S. 421. More than that I do not think that the section really requires; nor do I think that Ramesam, J., intended to lay down.

In this case the question really is whether the petitioners' pleader had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal, although undoubtedly he was allowed to address some argument to the Joint Magistrate. On the whole I have come to the conclusion that the pleader had not the required opportunity for the simple reason that he had not got all the records with him and had not fully conducted the case himself. It is not necessary to go into the slight discrepancies as to what happened between the accounts respectively given by the pleader and the Joint Magistrate. One thing however is clear that, whatever the pleader said might be, the Joint Magistrate conceived the idea that the occurrence took place in open daylight, whereas in fact it took place after 8 p. m. Such a hearing could not have been well informed on the part of the pleader or anything but casual on the part of the Joint Magistrate. Holding that the petitioner's pleader had not the opportunity given to him to which he was entitled under the section the dismissal of the appeal will be set aside and the appeal will be sent back to the District Magistrate of East Godavari to be heard by him or by some other competent Magistrate other than the one who disposed of it.

Sundar Singh—Petitioner.

Emperor—Opposite Party.Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 107 of 1930, Decided on 19th June 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 491—A arrested and remanded to police custody on suspicion of being connected with offence under S. 302 read with S. 120-B—Order of Magistrate not sufficiently clear—Existence of grounds for believing that A was connected with serious conspiracy—Custody in which A was detained held not to be "illegal."

A was arrested on suspicion of being connected with the offence under S. 302 read with S. 120-B of Penal Code and remanded to police custody by the Magistrate under S. 167, Criminal P. C. The order of the Magistrate was not sufficiently clear, no reasons having been given for remanding the prisoner to police custody. But there were some grounds for believing that the prisoner was concerned in a serious conspiracy.

Held: that in the circumstances the Magistrate's order could not be treated as more than an irregularity. The Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order. The custody in which the prisoner was detained could not therefore be considered illegal. [P 1041 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 167—Magistrate acting under S. 167 has to weigh evidence with respect to the offence—He does not therefore act purely in executive capacity.

A Magistrate acting under S. 167 has to weigh evidence to decide whether the prisoner should be detained in custody or not. Weighing of such evidence is essentially a judicial function. A Magistrate acting under S. 167 cannot therefore be said to be acting in executive capacity. [P 1042 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., Ss. 167 and 340—Proceedings under S. 167 fall within provisions of S. 340—Interview with legal adviser should not be refused to prisoner remanded to custody under S. 167.

Proceedings before a Magistrate under S. 167 fall within the provisions of S. 340. It is in the interests of justice that an accused person should have access to legal advice even while he is in police custody during the course of an investigation. An interview with the legal adviser should not therefore be refused to a prisoner who is remanded to police custody under S. 167: A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 551, Foll.

A. R. Kapur—for Petitioner.R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application by one Sundar Singh under S. 491, Criminal P. C., for the release of his son, Dhurydev, who is said to be "illegally" or "improperly" detained in custody by the police. In the alternative there is a prayer for bail and also for the legal adviser and relations of Dhurydev being permitted to see him, the police having refused to allow such interviews.

The first question for consideration is whether Dhurydev is being "illegally" or "improperly" detained within the meaning of S. 491, Criminal P. C. It appears that he was arrested at Delhi on suspicion of being concerned in an offence under S. 302 read with S. 120-B, I. P. C., and was thereafter remanded to police custody by a Magistrate under S. 167, Criminal P. C. It was urged that the order of remand was illegal as the Magistrate has given no reasons for remanding the prisoner to police custody as he was required to do, by sub-S. 3 of the aforesaid section. The order of the Magistrate is, no doubt, not sufficiently clear in this respect. Although he was not expected to pass any elaborate order, he should certainly have briefly indicated his reasons for remanding the prisoner to police custody. However it appears that there were some grounds for believing that the prisoner was concerned in a serious conspiracy and further information has been since obtained during the course of the investigation. In the circumstances, the defect in the Magistrate's order cannot be treated as more than an irregularity. The Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order and it is not for me to go into the merits of the evidence at this stage for the purpose of this petition under S. 491, Criminal P. C. The custody in which the prisoner is detained at present cannot therefore be considered to be "illegal".

It may be noted here that the prisoner when produced before me in Court did not complain of any ill-treatment by the police. It was urged by his counsel that the police custody became "improper" as the police refused to allow even the prisoner's legal adviser to have access to him. This is however a somewhat debatable point, and although I have come to the conclusion that the police were not justified in refusing the prisoner to be interviewed by his legal adviser, I think, this cannot, by itself, be considered to be a sufficient ground for setting him at liberty at once in the circumstances of the case.

As regards bail the police enquiry is still incomplete and I do not wish to anticipate its result. When the period of the present remand is over (as it will be shortly), it will be for the Magistrate to consider very carefully the evidence obtained and to decide whether there is any justification for further detention of the prisoner or whether he should be released forthwith on bail or otherwise.

The last and the most important point raised is the right of a prisoner in the custody of the police to have access to legal advice. There is no specific provision in the Code in this respect. The learned counsel for the petitioner who claims his right for his client has relied upon a Division Bench ruling of the Bombay High Court, viz. Crawford Bayley & Co., In the Petition of (1) which is certainly in his favour. The learned counsel for the Crown was unable to cite any authority to the contrary, but submitted that the Bombay ruling does not lay down the law correctly. His contention was that a Magistrate acts under S. 167, Criminal P. C., in his executive capacity and that S. 340, Criminal P. C., which gives the right to an accused person to be defended by a pleader, has no application to such proceedings. After carefully considering the matter I am unable to accept this contention. S. 167 requires a police officer to submit his diaries to the Magistrate within 24 hours of the arrest of an accused person and it is left to the latter to decide whether the accused should be detained in custody (whether of the police or any other custody) any longer. In deciding this question the Magistrate will presumably be guided by the evidence already available and the prospect of getting further relevant evidence as regards the alleged offence. The weighing of such evidence with respect to an alleged offence seems to me to be essentially a judicial function and it seems to be precisely for this reason that the matter is left to a Magistrate and not a police officer. If the matter were purely executive it could easily have been left to the decision of the investigating officer or his superiors in the Police Department. It will appear further from other provisions of the Code (see S. 497, Criminal P. C.) that from the very time of the arrest of an accused person by the police, Magistrates have power to consider the question of his release on bail and their orders in this respect are subject to revision by superior Courts. The position taken up by the learned counsel for the Crown that a Magistrate acts in a purely executive capacity until a formal police report regarding an offence is submitted under S. 173, Criminal P. C., cannot therefore, be sustained. There seems therefore no good reason why the proceedings before a Magistrate under S. 167, Criminal P. C., should not be considered to fall within the provisions of S. 340, Criminal P. C., as held by the Bombay High Court in Crawford Bayley & Co., In the petition of (1). S. 340, Criminal P. C., gives an accused person the right to be defended by pleader and this right necessarily implies right to previous consultation and advice. The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court have discussed the whole question fully and shown that it is in the interests of justice that an accused person should have access to legal advice even while he is in police custody during the course of an investigation. I would respectfully express my entire concurrence in that view. A similar view appears to have been taken by a single Judge of this Court (Fforde, J.) in Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 99 of 1929, though detailed reasons have not been given in that order.

As pointed out by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Crawford Bayley & Co., In the Petition of (1) the days are long gone by when the State deliberately put obstacles in the way of the accused defending himself and the present day trend is entirely in the opposite direction. A prisoner is remanded to police custody merely to facilitate investigation and there can be no justification for curtailing the liberty of an accused person except so far as this may be necessary in the interests of justice and for the purposes of investigation. Prima facie, it does not appear how the interests of justice could be defeated by allowing a prisoner to have access to legal advice. On the contrary the presumption is just the other way. It was suggested that in serious cases there is risk of the privilege being abused by a member of the legal profession. But it can be urged with equal justification that there is also risk of the abuse of their powers by the police. Justice and fair play obviously require that an accused person should have access to proper legal advice when he is accused of a criminal offence.

The right of a prisoner to have access to legal advice must of course be subject to such legitimate restrictions as may be necessary in the interests of justice in order to prevent any undue interference with the course of investigation. For instance a legal adviser cannot claim to have interviews with a prisoner at any time he chooses. Similarly, although ordinarily a member of the Bar may be presumed to understand his responsibility in the matter, if there are any good reasons to believe that a particular pleader has abused or is likely to abuse the privilege, that pleader may be refused an interview. But, in such cases the police must of course be prepared to support their action on substantial grounds.

As regards interviews with friends and relations the police have expressed their willingness to allow reasonable opportunities for such interviews in the presence of a police officer and I do not consider it necessary to pass any further order in this respect. The interview with a legal adviser must however for obvious reasons be allowed in the presence but not within the hearing of a police officer. I accept this petition to the extent of directing that the prisoner Dhruvdev shall be allowed reasonable opportunities for interviews with his legal adviser in the manner stated above so long as he remains in custody.

P, a pleader — Respondent.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 696 of 1929, Decided on 13th May 1930.

* (a) Legal Practitioners Act (18 of 1879), S 13—It is duty of applicant in proceedings under this section to go into witness box to substantiate his allegations and submit himself to cross-examination.

The proceedings under S. 13, Legal Practitioners Act (18 of 1879), are of a quasi criminal nature, and in the event of the charge of professional misconduct being established, the consequences to the legal practitioner concerned are very serious indeed. Such being the case it is the duty of the applicant who is more or less in the position of a complainant to go into the witness box and substantiate his allegation before producing any other witnesses, and what is more important, to submit himself to cross-examination. [P 1044 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 10—Statement of party unless substantiated by evidence of party in witness box cannot be treated as evidence against opposite party.

The statement under O. 10 cannot be treated as evidence in the case against the opposite party who has no opportunity of cross-examining his opponent who made the statement. The party to a suit must give evidence as a witness in respect of matters which are directly within his knowledge. [P 1044 C 2]

(c) Legal Practitioners Act, S. 13—Charge must be clearly established.

Charges of professional misconduct must be clearly established and should not be inferred from mere ground for suspicion however reasonable, or what may be mere error of judgment or indiscretion: A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 144, Foll. [P 1046 C 1]

(d) Legal Practitioners Act, S. 13 — Pleader's duty when client putting off settlement of fees stated.

When the client is, for some reason or other, putting off the settlement and payment of fee, a legal practitioner would be well advised if he served a registered notice upon him in good time intimating to him that if the client did not settle and pay his fee he would repudiate all his responsibility as a pleader: 37 Mad. 238 (F. B.) and A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 337, Expt.

(e) Legal Practitioners Act, S. 13—Vakalatnama signed on distinct understanding of settlement of fees—If client fails to settle fees, pleader is not bound to defend case.

Where a pleader signs a vakalatnama on the distinct understanding that a sum paid to him is really in the nature of a part payment, and that the client will settle the proper fee afterwards, and if the client fails to do so, it follows that mere acceptance of vakalatnama cannot cast upon the pleader the duty of defending the case. Judgment.—The parallel suits were proceeding against the firm Dogar Mal-Amir Chand, who were represented by Kishori Lal, applicant. One of the suits was valued at Rs. 700 and the other, with which we are concerned, at Rs. 2,000. As regards the former suit the complaint of the applicant Kishori Lal was that his pleader closed the evidence on his behalf without any authority from him and was thus guilty of professional misconduct within the meaning of S. 13, Legal Practitioners Act (18 of 1879). As regards the latter suit the complaint of Kishori Lal was that, in spite of his engagement as a pleader and the receipt of Rs. 15 in full payment of the fee agreed upon, P did not attend to the case and allowed it to be decreed ex parte against the applicant, the defendant in that case.

The learned District Judge sent the application of Kishori Lal, under the Legal Practitioners Act, to the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Ferozapore, and called for a report from him. The report of the Subordinate Judge is a full and detailed document and the conclusion at which he arrived is that the charge of professional misconduct has not been proved against the pleader in either of the two cases. The matter came up again before the District Judge and he agreed with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge. The applicant, Kishori Lal, filed an application for revision in this Court which has ultimately come up for hearing before us. No objection has been taken by the opposite party as to the maintainability of this revision and, therefore, we need not consider this aspect of the question.

The learned vakil, who argued the case on behalf of the applicant, did not raise any arguments as regards the suit for Rs 700. He, however, strenuously urged that the pleader had duly accepted and signed the vakalatnama on 28th May 1926, and on the same date had received a sum of Rs. 15 in full payment of his fee for conducting the case. It was further stated that on the same date the pleader prepared a draft (jawabidawa), and obtained the signatures of the applicant on a blank judicial paper on which the jawabidawa was to be subsequently written out, and that accordingly the jawabidawa was engrossed on the judicial paper and bore the signatures of the pleader, that 11th June 1926 was the date fixed for filing the jawabidawa, but the said jawabidawa was neither filed by the pleader nor did he himself put in an appearance. Reliance was also placed upon certain alleged acts of the pleader and his clerk as the trial of the case proceeded in order to prove that the pleader had accepted the duties and responsibilities of his office, and it is argued that on 7th August 1926 the clerk of the pleader attempted unsuccessfully to place the vakalatnama on the record of the Court, and that on 26th

October 1926 the pleader himself went into the Court and tried to file the vakalatnama in order to conduct the case, though he was not permitted to do so by the Court and that his clerk took notes of evidence in the case. On 28th October 1926 the suit was decreed ex parte against the applicant. He made an application on 8th November 1926 for setting aside the ex parte decree, but the said application was granted upon certain terms, the applicant being ordered to furnish security to the satisfaction of the Court. The applicant, however, never gave any security and the conditional order, which the Court had passed in his favour, automatically became an order dismissing the application. The applicant did not take any further steps in the matter.

It may be noted here that the applicant had no strong defence to the suit and, in fact, the only instructions that he gave to the pleader for preparing the written statement was that there were other persons also who were liable for the debt for which he was being sued and that a greater part of it had been repaid. No attempt was made to prove this last allegation and the learned District Judge was perhaps right in thinking that the applicant himself considered his position to be "hopeless" and apparently was not very anxious to contest the suit.

We may observe that the proceedings under S. 13, Legal Practitioners Act (18 of 1879), are of a quasi-criminal nature, and in the event of the charge of professional misconduct being established the consequences to the legal practitioner concerned are very serious indeed. Such being the case it was the duty of the applicant, who was more or less in the position of a complainant, to go into the witness-box and substantiate his allegation before producing any other witnesses, and what is more important, to submit himself to cross-examination. The applicant however did not adopt this obvious course and contented himself by making a statement as a party apparently under the provisions of O. 10, Civil P. C. Such a statement is on the same footing as pleadings in the case and is, in fact, intended to explain or amplify them. The statement, however, cannot be treated as evidence in the case against the opposite party who had no opportunity of cross-examining his opponent who made the statement. In adopting this procedure the applicant acted contrary to the observations repeatedly made by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the party to a suit must give evidence as a witness in respect of matters which are directly within his knowledge. He further adopted the reprehensible and embarrassing course of citing his opponent P as his witness. This action was also in defiance of the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council. As the applicant put P into the witness-box as his own witness, there is no sufficient reason why his evidence against the applicant should not be accepted unless, of course, it is found to be false in the light of other evidence on the record. No reliable evidence, oral or documentary, has been brought to our notice to falsify the statement on oath of P who was examined at length on behalf of the applicant in the present proceedings. P has stated that the sum of Rs. 10 was paid to him not on 28th May 1926, as stated on behalf of the applicant, but on 9th June 1926, and that this sum of Rs. 10 was not in full settlement of his fees, and that as the applicant did not settle the fees as promised, he (the pleader) neither attempted to file the vakalatnama on his behalf nor took any other steps to conduct the case for him. He further stated that the applicant saw him on 3rd August 1926, and again on 25th October 1926 in connexion with the other case. In this he is supported by Kamal Din, and Nadir Khan, witnesses. We do not see any reason why we should not accept the evidence of P who is a witness for the applicant himself. The applicant cannot have any grievance if we accept the evidence of the witness produced by him.

Reliance was placed on behalf of the applicant on the case reported as Muni Raddi v. Venkata Rao (1). In this case the pleader had undertaken the defence of a client in the Sessions Court and, having received his full fee, had deliberately absented himself without making any arrangement for the case, and had further put forward the false plea that he had not agreed to conduct his client's defence in the Sessions Court. This was rightly considered by the Court to be fraudulent conduct on behalf of the pleader and therefore highly unprofessional within the meaning of

S. 13, Legal Practitioners Act. In the present case it appears that the engagement of the pleader was not complete and although he had promised to do so the applicant never settled the fee in spite of his seeing the pleader on various occasions after 9th June 1926. Reliance was placed upon the observations of Sankaran Nair, J., that a vakil was bound to appear and conduct his case even if the fee or a portion thereof, was not paid, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. But these observations are more or less in the nature of obiter dicta, seeing that in the case, which was before the learned Judge, the pleader's fee had been admittedly paid. The learned vakil for the applicant also relied upon In the matter of P., a mukhtar, A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 337. That was a case in which a mukhtar, on the conviction of his client, had undertaken to file an appeal on his behalf on the understanding that the client's relations would pay him his remuneration. The mukhtar's remuneration was never paid and he filed the appeal long after the period prescribed by law had expired. It was held by the Special Bench of the Patna High Court that it was professional misconduct on the part of the mukhtar in not filing the appeal within time and that, when his fee was not paid, he ought to have communicated direct with his client and repudiated his obligation as a mukhtar. It may be observed that the application against the mukhtar arose out of criminal proceedings in which the duties and responsibilities of a lawyer stand on a different footing from those in an ordinary civil litigation. Besides, from the very nature of the case the movements of the client were restricted in that he was confined in jail and therefore it was incumbent upon the legal practitioner to put himself in direct communication with him when the friends and relations of his client failed to pay the fees. In the present case the facts are entirely different. There were no restrictions upon the movements of the applicant and, in fact, we are satisfied that on 3rd August 1926 and again on 26th October 1926, two days before the decree was passed ex parte against him, the applicant saw the pleader and there was nothing whatsoever to prevent him from settling the fee and paying it to him.

Emperor v. Rajani Kanta Bose (2) was also cited on behalf of the applicant, but that case is clearly distinguishable. There certain pleaders, who had received their fees, had boycotted the Court in view of a certain political hartal which had been observed in the locality. There is no similarity between the facts of that case and the present one. In fact at p. 793 of the Report there are observations by Woodroffe, J., to the effect that mere acceptance of the vakalatnama does not bind the pleader to appear in Court when such vakalatnama may be accompanied by special terms. In the present case we are satisfied that the pleader signed the vakalatnama on the distinct understanding that the sum of Rs. 10 which was paid to him was really in the nature of a part payment, and that the applicant would come and settle the proper fee afterwards. The applicant not having done so, it follows that mere acceptance of the vakalatnama could not cast upon the pleader the duty of defending the case. The pleader has produced his fee book, and we find an entry on 9th June 1926, showing the payment of Rs. 10 and not Rs. 15 as stated by the applicant. The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court appreciated the frankness and good faith of the pleader who returned to the applicant all the documents which are now being used against him to substantiate the charge of professional misconduct. As already stated we are satisfied that the applicant was not very enthusiastic in defending the suit for the very good reason that he knew that there was no real defence and that he did not care to spend money by paying the pleader a fee in addition to the decree which he fully anticipated would be passed against him. We fully realize the weight of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in A Pleader v. Judges of the High Court, Madras. A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 144 which runs as follows :

(2) A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 515=71 I. C. 81=24 Cr. L. J. 33=40 Cal. 782 (S.B.).

We are satisfied on a full consideration of the material on the record that the applicant has failed to substantiate the charge of professional misconduct against P. At the same time we must point out that in a case when the client is, for some reason or other, putting off the settlement and payment of fee, a legal practitioner would be well advised if he served a registered notice upon him in good time intimating to him that if he, the client, did not settle and pay his fee he would repudiate all his responsibility as a pleader.

We therefore affirm the order passed by the learned District Judge and dismiss the application. The applicant is ordered to pay the costs of the respondent up to a sum of Rs. 50 in case there is a certificate of fee filed by the counsel in this Court.

Criminal Appeal No. 452 of 1930, Decided on 12th July 1930.

(a) Penal Code, Ss. 302 and 326—Blow with spear on fleshy part of body is not necessarily fatal and offence does not fall under S. 302 but under S. 326.

A, B, C, D assembled together, three of them armed with spears with the intention of attacking another party of men. A gave only one blow with a spear on fleshy part of the body of one of his opponents.

Held : that such injury was not necessarily fatal and A could not be convicted under S. 302 and his case fell within the purview of S. 326, but as there had been a loss of life in the fight, a severe sentence was called for. A's companions having been acting in furtherance of a common intention were also guilty under S. 326 read with S. 34. [P 1048 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, Ss. 324 and 326—Simple injury caused by cutting weapon falls under S. 324 not under S. 326.

Where the injury caused is simple but is caused with a cutting weapon, it falls under S. 324 and not under S. 326. [P 1049 C 1]

Anant Ram Khosla—for Appellant.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Agha Haidar, J.—Fatteh Khan, Ghulam Hussain, Gul Khan and Muhammad Khan, Pathans of Daud Khel in the District of Mianwali, have been convicted and sentenced by the Sessions Judge as follows:

Fatteh Khan has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., for the murder of one Azim Khan and sentenced to death. He has also been convicted under Ss. 326 and 324, I. P. C., and sentenced to ten years' and two years' rigorous imprisonment respectively under these sections. It is provided that the sentence of imprisonment in the case of Fattah Khan shall be executed only if the sentence of death is not confirmed. The remaining three accused have been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of ten years and two years under S. 326 and S. 324, I. P. C., respectively. These sentences are to run concurrently. Fattah Khan has appealed to this Court through his counsel Mr. Anant Ram Khosla while the remaining three accused have preferred their appeal to this Court through Mr. Mohsin Shah.

The two parties to the fight seem to be on terms of bitter enmity towards each other. It is not necessary to enter into detailed account of this enmity in order to trace the motive of the occurrence. We may only mention here that one Mt. Munnare appears to have been the immediate cause of the present tragedy. A reference to the pedigree at p. 11 of the paper book would show that one Muzaffar is the son of Abdulla (P. W. 8). One of the pedigrees at p. 14 of the paper book would show that Mt. Munnare is the daughter of Amir Khan. It appears that she had been married to Muzaffar when she was a child of tender years, but six or seven months before the occurrence her father proposed to marry her to Muhammad Khan accused. Mt. Munnare however did not like the idea of being married to Muhammad Khan and went to the house of Muzaffar to whom she had been already married. This was resented by the party of Muhammad Khan, the disappointed candidate for the hand of Mt. Munnare. It may be mentioned here that Fattah Khan and Ghulam Hussain accused are the first cousins while Gul Khan is the uncle of Muhammad Khan. The question of relationship in the present case is not very important as it appears that the parties and some of their witnesses seem to be more or less related to each other. There is no doubt whatsoever that about the time of this occurrence feelings between the two parties were running high over the recent escapade of Mt. Munnare. In fact the party of the accused treated the action of Mt. Munnare in going to live with Muzaffar as an act of abduction on his part. The pedigree-table at p. 11 would show that Khawj Muhammad, Azim Khan, deceased and Muhammad Khan the injured party were close relations.

The case for the prosecution is that on 31st December 1929 while Azim Khan, Khawj Muhammad and Muhammad Khan were taking their cattle for watering purposes to Afzal Khanwala well, they were attacked by the accused in a body near the Salaranwala mosque. Muhammad Khan accused was armed with a dang while the remaining three accused carried spears. The attack seems to have been a sharp and short one in the course of which Muhammad Khan accused gave two dang blows to Khawj Muhammad who also received a spear wound from Ghulam Hussain. Gul Khan gave a spear blow to Muhammad Khan which struck his abdomen while Fattah Khan gave a single spear thrust to Azim Khan deceased which fell on his left buttock. Khawj Muhammad fell down and became unconscious. Azim Khan also fell down. The prosecution is silent about the five injuries received by Muhammad Khan, accused. They were all simple injuries and seem to have been inflicted by a blunt weapon like a lathi.

Abdullah (P.W. 8) lodged the first information report at the police chauki, Daud Khel, soon after and it is important to observe that in this report he mentioned the names of all the four accused persons. The police arrived at the spot soon afterwards and the injured persons were ultimately sent to the Civil Hospital at Mianwali.

Khawj Muhammad was examined by Dr. Rahmat Ali on 1st January 1930. He noticed an incised wound on the left side of his back 2" from the middle line and just below the last rib measuring $1\frac{1}{2}$ " x $\frac{1}{2}$ " x $2\frac{1}{2}$ ". At first he seems to have considered that this injury might prove dangerous but it turned out that the man was cured and discharged from the hospital on 15th January without any complications supervening, with the result that the doctor described the injury as simple. Azim Khan was examined by Dr. Gian Chand (P.W. 3), Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Daud Khel, at about 12 on 31st Decem.

ber 1929 soon after the fight. He found only one incised injury on the left buttock. Dr. Rahmat Ali also examined Azim Khan on 1st January 1930, and found the incised wound on the left buttock. The Civil Surgeon, Dr. A.R.D. Abreu (P.W. 1) was recalled before the Sessions Judge and stated that the wound on the buttock was dangerous to life and that Dr. Rahmat Ali, who described the injury as simple in his note dated 1st January might have been easily mistaken about the depth of the injury. The spear wound on Muhammad Khan, complainant appears to have been simple. He was cured and discharged on 5th January 1930. Azim Khan's wound took a dangerous turn and the unfortunate man died in the Civil Hospital on 10th January 1930.

All these facts are abundantly proved by the evidence of the five eyewitnesses, namely, Khawj Muhammad (P.W. 6) Abdullah (P.W. 8), Fatteh Khan (P.W. 9), Muhammad Khan (P.W. 10), and Isab Khan (P.W. 11). It may be mentioned here that Khawj Muhammad (P.W. 6) and Muhammad Khan (P.W. 10) are the two complainants who received injuries in the fight at the hands of the accused and therefore there cannot be any doubt that they were present and saw the fight with their own eyes.

Fatteh Khan, Gul Khan and Ghulam Hussain have each set up the plea of alibi. Fatteh Khan has examined no less than nine witnesses in support of his alibi. His witnesses state that the daughter of Alam Khan (D.W. 3) had died early in the morning on the day of the occurrence and that Fatteh Khan paid a visit of condolence to Alam Khan and remained with him till Peshiwala. This kind of evidence is hardly satisfactory for the purposes of proving an alibi. Alam Khan lived in the village Daud Khel where the occurrence took place, and even if the evidence of the witnesses for the defence on the question of alibi be accepted it cannot be said that Fatteh Khan, in spite of his visit of condolence to Alam Khan, could not be present at the scene of the occurrence and take part in the attack. Ahmed Khan, D.W. 1, and Shah Wali, D.W. 2, the witnesses for Fatteh Khan, put up a counter-story and state that Muhammad Khan accused was taking his bullocks towards his fields when Khawj Muhammad, Muhammad Khan, Azim Khan, deceased and Muzaffar Khan who were standing armed with spears near the Salaranwala mosque, fell upon him. They say that they used only the shafts of the spears and not the spear-head and thus caused injuries to Muhammad Khan. According to them Muhammad Khan ran towards his house and brought with him Gul Khan, accused, together with some other persons and a fight ensued. The evidence in this point ends in obscurity and we are left without any explanation whatsoever as to how Azim Khan and Khawj Muhammad came by their injuries. The fact of the matter is that this counter-story is contrary to all the probabilities of the case and we are not prepared to believe it.

The evidence of alibi adduced by Ghulam Hussain and Gul Khan is of the ordinary type and we need not discuss it beyond observing that it is wholly insufficient to prove the plea of alibi.

The only point which remains for decision is, what offence was committed by each of the accused. There can be no doubt that the four accused persons assembled near the Salaranwala mosque and that three of them were armed with spears. Thus, there cannot be any question that their gathering together was in furtherance of a common intention which in this case consisted of attacking their opponents. Fatteh Khan gave only one blow with a spear on a fleshy part of Azim Khan's body. Such an injury is not necessarily fatal, and we do not think that Fatteh Khan ever intended to cause the death of his victim or to cause such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to cause his death, or that his intention was of causing bodily injury, sufficient in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. In our judgment, his conviction under S. 302, I. P. C., cannot be maintained and his case properly falls within the purview of S. 326. But unfortunately there has been loss of life and the sentence, therefore, must be commensurate with the gravity of the offence. We therefore, while setting aside the conviction of Fatteh Khan under S. 302, I. P. C., convict him under S. 326, I. P. C., and sentence him to a term of seven years' rigorous imprisonment. In view of our finding that all the accused were acting in furtherance of a common intention, the remaining accused, namely, Ghulam Hussain, Gul Khan and Muhammad Khan also are guilty under S. 326, I.P.C., read with S. 34, I. P. C., of causing grievous hurt with a cutting weapon to Azim Khan. But as the blow which caused the fatal injury was struck by Fattah Khan, we would sentence the remaining three accused to a term of five years' rigorous imprisonment each.

Ghulam Hussain gave a spear blow to Khawj Muhammad, but, as already stated, Dr. Rahmat Ali had at first only a false alarm and Khawj Muhammad was in fact cured and discharged from the hospital on 15th January, 1930. The Court below is obviously in error when it holds that because Dr. Rahmat Ali at first thought the injury to be dangerous, it should continue to be considered dangerous even though subsequent events have established that it was nothing more than a simple injury. The injury was, therefore, simple, but as it was caused with a cutting weapon it fell under S. 324, I. P. C. In these circumstances we set aside the conviction of all the prisoners under S. 326, I. P. C., and convict them under S. 324, read with S. 34, I. P. C., for causing injury to Khawj Muhammad, and sentence each of them to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Gul Khan had given a spear wound to Muhammad Khan, but the injury has been certified by Dr. Rahmat Ali as simple and he was cured and discharged from the hospital as early as 5th January 1930. Therefore, we confirm the conviction of all the accused, and the sentence imposed upon them, under S. 324, read with S. 34, I. P. C.

All these sentences are to run concurrently. The net result is that the punishment which the accused will have to suffer will be seven year's rigorous imprisonment in the case of Fattah Khan and five years' rigorous imprisonment in the case of each of the remaining three accused, namely, Gul Khan, Ghulam Hussain and Muhammad Khan.

The convictions and sentences passed by the Court below are hereby set aside and in lieu thereof the convictions and punishments noted above are substituted. To this extent the appeal is allowed.

Criminal Petn. No. 139 of 1930, Decided on 4th August 1930, for transfer of the case.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 343—Accused is not in duty bound to produce his absconding co-accused—Court of justice should not bring pressure on accused to produce his absconding co-accused—Criminal trial.

It is not the duty of the accused person to produce his absconding co-accused persons before the Court, and a Court of justice is not justified in exercising any pressure upon an accused person before it with the object of coercing him to produce persons who are fugitives from justice. [P 1050 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 526—Adjournments by trying Court to bring pressure on accused person to produce his absconding co-accused is sufficient ground for transfer.

Where adjournments are repeatedly made by a trying Court to bring pressure on the accused person to produce his absconding co-accused persons, the accused must have had reasonable apprehensions in their mind that their case would not be tried in that calm and judicial atmosphere and with that detachment which every accused person is entitled to in a Court of justice. Therefore this is a sufficient ground for transfer of the case. [P 1050 C 2]

Aziz Ahmad—for Petitioners.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application for the transfer of a case from the Court of the District Magistrate of Rawalpindi to some other district. The three applicants before me have been charged with serious offences. They were taken into custody by the police on 30th January 1930 and produced before a Tahsildar Magistrate on 2nd February 1930 who remanded them till 10th February 1930. The case was repeatedly adjourned and remanded. These adjournments are at least seven in number. The District Magistrate in para. 1 of his explanation observed that the further adjournments had been granted in the hope of arresting two absconders. This reasoning may appeal to the learned District Magistrate but I regret to say it does not appeal to me. It is all very well for the District Magistrate to say that the prosecution had reasons of their own for obtaining these adjournments in the hope of arresting the ab-sconders, but the result of this procedure, to say the least, is that an accused person, even if ultimately acquitted, is financially ruined, leaving aside the question of mental worry and trouble.

Then the learned Magistrate in para. 4 of his explanation says that he had taken certain drastic steps as executive measures against the total population of the village who are believed to have been assisting the continued absence of the absconders. This may explain the steps taken by the authorities, but I doubt very much whether it would be considered a satisfactory explanation in the present case. But the learned Magistrate as he goes on, neutralizes the effect of this explanation for what it was worth by observing that it was carefully explained to and thoroughly understood by the accused and their counsel that the steps were taken in order to secure the attendance of the absconding accused which could not be secured by Ss. 87 and 88, Criminal P. C. In my judgment this is not a proper explanation and in fact it goes a long way to support the arguments of the counsel for the applicants that the accused cannot expect to have a fair and impartial trial in the District of Rawalpindi. The Magistrate may have reasons of his own for cancelling licenses and adopting other administrative measures. I am not concerned with them. But certainly he is not justified in adopting measures with a view to bring pressure to bear upon the accused in the hope of their producing the absconders. It is not the duty of the accused person to produce his absconding co-accused persons before the Court and I am perfectly clear in my mind that a Court of justice is not justified in exercising any pressure upon an accused person before it with the object of coercing him to produce persons who are fugitives from justice.

The concluding sentence of the explanation of the learned Magistrate embodies a very laudable sentiment when he says that he would leave no means untried by which fugitives from the Courts can be induced to abandon their absconding. This is very commendable indeed. But the question is whether after employing such means in the shape of pressure upon the accused persons whom he is trying, as a Magistrate he should be permitted to go on with the trial of the case, however open his mind may be. In my judgment on the affidavit filed by the applicants read with the explanation of the learned District Magistrate the accused must have had reasonable apprehensions in their minds that their case would not be tried in that calm and judicial atmosphere and with that detachment which every accused person is entitled to expect in a Court of justice. I therefore order that this case should be transferred to the neighbouring District of Attock at Campbellpur. The District Magistrate of Attock may either try the case himself or send it for trial to any other Magistrate subordinate to him and competent to try it.

There is an application for bail on behalf of one Suleman who had been absconding and who after the presentation of the application now under consideration has been arrested. I understand the three accused persons had been let out on bail at a very early stage of the proceedings. I do not see any reason why the same privilege should not be extended to Suleman who has now been produced before the Court as an under-trial prisoner. I therefore order that Suleman should be released on bail provided he gives security to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate. This security should not under any circumstances exceed the sum of Rs. 2,000 on which his co-accused have already been let out.

Shamair Chaudhri—for Petitioners.

Addl. Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Order.—In this and the connected petitions, Criminal Misc. Nos. 126 to 130 of 1930, the various petitioners apply for transfer to another district of certain criminal cases pending against them in the Court of Mr. W. Jackson, Magistrate, First Class, Gurgaon. As all these cases are closely connected with one another and the petitions have been argued together by counsel for both sides, they will be disposed of in this judgment.

The petitions are supported by a large number of lengthy affidavits and in reply several counter-affidavits and written statements have been filed by the learned Additional Government Advocate. These documents contain numerous allegations and counter-allegations of a serious nature, but I do not think it necessary to deal with most of them. Some of these allegations appear to be irrelevant to the questions which require decision by me at this stage, while others relate to matters which are likely to form the subject of investigation at the trial, and on which for obvious reasons, it is not desirable to express any opinion at present. I shall therefore confine myself to those points, only which I consider are absolutely essential for the proper disposal of these petitions.

It is common ground between the parties that in March last disputes relating to the question of kine slaughter arose between the Hindu and Mahomedan residents of Majra Jharsa, which is situate at a distance of about one mile from the civil station of Gurgaon. These disputes are alleged to have increased in intensity early in April, and as a breach of the peace was apprehended, proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C., were started against certain members of each community in the Court of Mr. Said Zaman Khan, Magistrate, 1st Class. Some of the persons proceeded against moved this Court for transfer of the cases and by order of Currie, J., (Cr. R. No. 83 of 1930) they were transferred to the Court of Mr. W. Jackson, Special Magistrate, Gurgaon. It is stated that Mr. Jackson has examined most of the evidence which the parties intended to produce in these cases and they are now nearing completion. It may be made clear that in the petitions before me we are not concerned with those cases.

It is alleged that soon after proceedings under S. 107 had been started in the aforesaid cases, a number of lawyers and other citizens of Gurgaon including the President and Secretary of the District Bar Association, the Vice-President and two members of the Small Town Committee, two Kursi Nashins and a Bazar Chaudhri, constituted themselves in a "defence committee" in order to arrange for the defence of the Hindu accused and to make representations to the authorities in connexion with disputes at Jharsa. Some of the lawyer members of this committee appeared as counsel for the accused in the security case and others joined in deputations which waited upon the Commissioner and other officers to support the position which had been taken up by the Jharsa Hindus. The Commissioner passed orders early in May 1930, permitting the slaughter of kine in the village on certain conditions, and also the construction of a new slaughter-house near the Government Agricultural Farm for the supply of beef to the civil station. These orders are stated to have become known at Gurgaon on 9th, one day before the Id celebrations. It is alleged that on the night between the 9th and 10th a new slaughter-house was actually constructed near the Farm, which certain Hindus attempted to demolish the next day. Against these persons five different cases were started: one under Ss. 307-332-149, I. P. C., another under Ss. 332-353 and the remaining three under Ss. 447, 143 and 147, respectively. Besides this certain other persons were prosecuted under S. 34, Police Act, and proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C. were taken against the members of the defence committee including the lawyers, as, (so it is alleged) information had been received that they were "instigating the members of the Hindu public to destroy the slaughter-house," and that this was likely to give rise to a breach of the peace. All these cases were assigned to Mr. Jackson for trial.

About this time Lala Raghubar Dyal, Advocate and President of the Bar Association, who is one of the accused in the S. 107 case, filed a criminal complaint under Ss. 342-500-504 against Mr. Said Zaman Khan, E. A. C., and Munshi Karar Hussain, Tahsildar. This complaint has since been dismissed in limine by the District Magistrate on the ground that sanction under S. 197, Criminal P. C., had not been obtained beforehand. A petition for revision of this order of dismissal is stated to be pending before the Sessions Judge.

Of the other lawyer members of the defence committee who had been proceeded against in the security case Messrs. Anand Jiwan, Roshan Lal and Har Swarup, pleaders, were engaged to defend the accused in the case under Ss. 307-147 which, as stated already, had been instituted against some persons who were alleged to have taken part in the incidents of 11th May. Before much progress could be made with this case a fresh case under Ss. 307-117 was instituted against these lawyers (Anand Jiwan, Roshan Lal and Har Swarup) on 17th June 1930, on the allegation that they had abetted the commission of the very offences for which their clients had been challaned originally. In this case three other lawyers, Messrs. Raghubar Dyal, Pokhar Das and Gajraj Singh, and two Kursi Nashins, Janki Das and Shanker Lal, who were all members of the defence committee, were also made accused persons.

In order to defend themselves in the newly started case under Ss. 307-117 the aforesaid persons engaged two other local pleaders, Lala Din Dyal and Thakur Anand Pal, who were neither members of the defence committee nor are they alleged to have been concerned in any other way in the incidents of 11th May. But on 30th June 1930, after the house of the three lawyers accused, Roshan Lal, Anand Jiwan and Har Swarup, had been searched, the police proceeded to the house of these two pleaders, Anand Pal and Din Dyal, and after searching them and the office of Anand Pal carried away a number of documents, including those which their clients had entrusted to them for the conduct of the case.

The learned counsel for the petitioners has urged that the local authorities have acted in a "high-handed manner" in first proceeding under S. 107, Criminal P. C. against the members of the defence committee, then instituting a fresh case of abetment against such members of the committee as persisted in defending the accused in the S. 307 case, and lastly in searching the houses of Messrs. Anand Pal and Din Dyal who had undertaken to defend the lawyer accused in Ss. 307-117 case, removing therefrom papers connected with their defence. He has argued that all this was done deliberately, and of set purpose, to hamper the defence of the accused persons and of "striking terror" amongst those who were rendering legitimate assistance to them. He has also pointed out certain irregularities in the searches, and has asserted that it has now become practically impossible for his clients to secure adequate legal advice at Gurgaon.

On behalf of the Crown the learned Additional Government Advocate has denied that these acts were done with any such sinister object and has contended that the security proceedings against the defence committee and the case under Ss. 117-307 against the lawyer accused, were started as a result of information received during the investigation into the incidents of 11th May. He has also stated that the house of Messrs. Anand Pal and Din Dyal were searched for the reasons explained by Mr. Hopkins, Superintendent of Police, in his affidavit, dated 13th July 1930, that in the course of search of Har Swarup's house information was received that some papers relevant to the "case might be found in the possession of Thakur Anand Pal. The house of this pleader was therefore searched and information was duly sent to the Ilaga Magistrate."

The learned Additional Government Advocate argued that all this took place "in the ordinary course."

It is not necessary for me at this stage to express any final opinion on these two rival suggestions, or on the legality or otherwise of these prosecutions and searches. But accepting for the moment the case for the Crown, that all was done innocently and "in the ordinary course."

I think there can be no room for doubt that the acts enumerated above are sufficient to raise a reasonable apprehension in the minds of the petitioners that they cannot have a fair and impartial trial at Gurgaon. Whatever the explanation might be, the broad fact remains that most of the persons who had taken upon themselves the duty of defending the accused persons in these cases had been either themselves prosecuted or otherwise disgraced. All this might be mere coincidence, but the sequence of events is calculated to create an impression in the mind of an ordinary citizen that it is not safe to assist these accused persons in their defence. There seems to be no doubt that the action of the police in searching the houses of Anand Pal and Din Dyal was very hasty and ill-advised, even if it was not illegal, a matter on which I desire to express no opinion. Even if any relevant documents were believed to have been in the possession of these pleaders, and the police had the right to insist on their production, the proper course to adopt would have been to ask them to produce them rather than to subject them to the indignity of a search. It would be a sad state of affairs, indeed, if the impression were to get abroad that every time a legal practitioner has been engaged to defend an accused person and is entrusted by his clients with papers which are relevant to his defence, he has to run the risk of his house being searched by the police without any warning and the papers seized.

Another matter on which there has been much argument before me relates to certain conversations which are alleged to have passed between Mr. Said Zaman Khan, Ilaqa Magistrate, and certain lawyers at the house of the former on 12th May, one day after the alleged riot. In this connexion five affidavits sworn to by Lala Prabhu Dyal, advocate, and Messrs. Pearey Lal, Shiv Narain Mathur, Nagar Mal Gupta and Prabhu Dyal Garg, pleaders, have been filed before me, stating that in the course of these conversations, Mr. Said Zaman Khan stated that the authorities had 'enough material against 20 Hindu lawyers' and that they would be proceeded against

"if they showed any interest in the case put up by the police against the accused in connexion with the alleged occurrence of 11th May 1930."

Counsel for the petitioners has strongly relied upon these affidavits as suggesting that the lawyers-petitioners were prosecuted because they continued to defend the accused implicated in the "alleged occurrence." In reply the learned Additional Government Advocate has drawn my attention to a statement which had been sent by Mr. Said Zaman Khan denying that any such conversations took place. He has also placed on the record three letters purporting to have been written by three other pleaders Messrs. Pohap Singh, Mashtaq Ahmad and Pandit Shiv Narain in reply to demi-official letters sent to them by the District Magistrate on 4th July 1930. In two of these letters it is stated that no such conversation took place in their presence, while the writer of the third does not pretend to remember everything that was said on the occasion. Mr. Shamair Chand has emphasized the fact that where as on other points sworn affidavits have been filed even by the District Magistrate, the Superintendent of Police and the Special Magistrate, Mr. Jackson, the denials relating to these conversations are contained in unsworn statements, and in unproved letters which are stated to have been written to the District Magistrate in reply to the demi-official letters sent by him. He therefore says that these documents should be left out of consideration, and the affidavits of his clients accepted without further investigation. He has also stated that of the pleaders, whose letters are produced by the Crown, one is Pohap Singh, and that the petitioner Gajraj Singh had stated before Mr. Jackson, two months earlier, that this false case had been instituted against him at the instance of the faction to which Pohap Singh belongs. As stated already I do not propose to express any opinion on the merits of the alleged incident at Said Zaman Khan's house as it was admitted that this matter would be raised at the trial. It is however of importance for one of the present purposes as indicating the seriousness of the allegations which require investigation.

What has been stated above is sufficient to show that these cases have assumed an importance of their own, and that they should be tried in a calm and quiet atmosphere where all proper and legitimate facilities can be provided, both to the prosecution and the defence. Certain incidents have unfortunately taken place at Gurgaon, which rightly or wrongly lend colour to the idea that such an atmosphere does not exist at Gurgaon. These petitions therefore fall within the rule laid down in Sardari Lal v. Emperor (1), Amar Singh v. Sadhu Singh (2) and Chitranji Lal v. Emperor (3), and I am constrained to hold that they must be tried in another district.

But while I think that the cases should be transferred to another district, I wish to make it clear that the allegations made in the petition against Mr. Jackson are without substance. The allegation that he had been entertained at certain "parties" with a view to influence him was withdrawn by Mr. Sharmair Chand on seeing Mr. Jackson's affidavit, and as to his findings in the judgment in the S. 34 case, I do not find that they have any direct bearing on the cases against the petitioners or are likely to prejudice them in their trial. I therefore wish to place it on the record that should Mr. Jackson be posted to the district to which these cases will be sent for trial he shall not be debarred from trying them.

Of the places suggested for the trial of these cases I consider that taking all things into consideration Hissar is the more suitable.

I therefore accept these petitions, and direct that the criminal case mentioned therein shall be tried at Hissar by such Magistrate as may be nominated by the District Magistrate, and that if Mr. Jackson happens to be posted there he shall not be debarred from trying them.

Criminal Appln. No. 137 of 1930, Decided on 4th August 1930, for transfer of the case.

Criminal P. C., S. 576—Accused applying for transfer without knowledge of Magistrate—Magistrate examining 12 prosecution witnesses and the accused—Accused, in answer to questions, disclosing his application for transfer to High Court—Magistrate making order refraining from further proceedings till order of High Court—At the end of the order Magistrate cancelling bail bond of the accused holding that there was prima facie case against accused—Case was fit for transfer.

Where an accused applied for transfer of his case to the High Court without informing the trying Magistrate and where the Magistrate examined a number of witnesses for the prosecution and examined the accused and the accused in answer to one of the questions disclosed that he had applied for transfer and the Magistrate made an order stating that he refrained from taking further proceedings until the order of the High Court, but at the same time cancelled the bail, holding that there was prima facie evidence against the accused.

Held: that this was not either a correct or a consistent attitude for the learned Magistrate to adopt. Once having correctly expressed an opinion that he "refrained from further proceedings" in view of the application made to the High Court, he ought to have stayed his hands completely for the time and certainly he ought not to have taken the serious and drastic step of cancelling the bail bonds of the accused and that this proceeding was likely to produce a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not have a fair and impartial trial before the Court, and this was therefore a fit case for transfer. Judgment.—This was an application for the transfer of a case pending in the Court of Mr. Lincoln, the District Magistrate of Muzaffargarh. So far as the affidavit accompanying the application is concerned, on a perusal of the allegations contained therein, I do not think that it makes out any case for the transfer.

It appears that on 11th July 1930 a notice was issued on the application by a learned Judge of this Court and further proceedings were stayed. Before 11th July the Magistrate however does not appear to have been informed that an application for transfer had been made to this Court, and on 11th July 1930 in the ordinary course a number of witnesses for the prosecution were examined. It must have taken the best part of the day inasmuch as no less than 12 witnesses were examined on 11th July. At the conclusion of this fairly voluminous evidence the statement of Takaya Ram accused was taken down, and in answer to one of the questions put to him he stated that he had applied to the High Court for the transfer of the case. After this statement the Magistrate passed an order dated 11th July 1930 in which he clearly stated that in view of the statement of Takaya Ram that he had applied to the High Court for the transfer of the case from his Court, he refrained from taking further proceedings until the next hearing by which time he thought that the order of the High Court would be communicated to him. It is quite clear that he had no knowledge of this application for transfer before the accused Takaya Ram made his statement.

(1) A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 261=71 I. O. 1006=8 Lah. 418.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 361=86 I. O. 703=26 Cr. L. J. 858=8 Lah. 396.

The learned counsel for the applicant has admitted that no application under S. 526 (8), Criminal P. C., had been made to the Magistrate. The Magistrate made this mistake that while observing that he "refrained from further proceedings" he, at the conclusion of his order cancelled the bail which had been allowed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Alipur, holding that there was prima facie evidence against both the accused and remanded the accused to the lock-up. This was not either a correct or a consistent attitude for the learned Magistrate to adopt. Once having correctly expressed an opinion that he "refrained from further proceedings" in view of the application made to the High Court, he ought to have stayed his hands completely for the time and certainly he ought not to have taken the serious and drastic step of cancelling the bail bonds of the accused and sending them to the lock-up.

I do not propose to take any action on the present application on the basis of the affidavit which has been filed along with it, but having regard to the somewhat inconsistent attitude adopted by the learned Magistrate in the matter I think it would be expedient for the ends of justice if the case were to be transferred to some other competent Magistrate in the same district. The evidence which has been so far recorded would stand and it would not be open to the accused to insist upon the witnesses for the prosecution being examined afresh. In making this order I do not cast any reflection upon the impartiality or integrity of the learned Magistrate. I fully realize that the applicant has not acted in a frank and straightforward manner in not informing the Court, early in the day on 11th July 1930, that he had made an application for transfer in the High Court and that he reserved this information until after a number of witnesses for the prosecution had been examined; but this procedure of cancelling the bail bond of the applicant after the Court has already decided to refrain from all further proceedings was something like a parthian shot which might have produced a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not have a fair and impartial trial before the Court. Under all these circumstances I order the transfer of the case from the Court of the District Magistrate.

Mr. Khaliq Dad Khan, Sub-Divisional Officer, has himself shown a disinclination to try the case. If there is no other competent Magistrate in the district to whom the case might be transferred, in that case it will be necessary to transfer the case to the neighbouring District of Multan. The District Magistrate of Multan may either try the case himself or place it on the file of any other competent Magistrate in the District. In the meantime the order of the District Magistrate cancelling the bail bond of the accused will be vacated. It would, of course, be perfectly competent to the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred for trial, to make such order as he deems necessary having regard to the materials on the record. His discretion in the matter shall not be hampered in any way.

Alamelammal — Respondents.

Criminal Revns. Nos. 571 and 572 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petns. Nos. 519 and 520 of 1929, Decided on 27th March 1930.

Criminal Trial—No subordinate Court can decide whether its proceedings should be treated as null—if it is thought that there is mistake matter must be referred to High Court.

It must be taken as the procedural law in the Presidency of Madras that no subordinate Court can sit in revision upon its own record, and decide whether upon a certain view of the facts its proceedings should be treated as null. If it is thought that a mistake has been committed, the matter must be referred to the High Court: 42 Cal. 365, not foll.; 2 Weir 307 Expl.; 11 Weir 308, Ref. [P 1056 O 2]

A. Ramswami Aiyar—for Petitioner.

P. Govinda Menon—for Respondents.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 15, in default two weeks' rigorous imprisonment under S. 352, I. P. C., in the following circumstances. The case was filed before the First Class Bench, Vellore, on 19th February 1929 and posted to 26th February. On 26th February, according to the diary extract, it was adjourned to 1st March. On 1st March the complainant was absent, and the accused, the present petitioner, was acquitted under S. 247, Criminal P. C. On the 5th March the complainant's vakil represented that the posting to the 1st was a mistake for the 5th. Thereupon an entry was made in the diary for the 5th March:

"Alamelu Ammal prefers a complaint against Ekambara Mudali. Her sworn statement is recorded. The case is taken on file under S. 352, I. P. C., and posted to 19th March 1929."

This was merely a revival of the old complaint dismissed on 1st March 1929. There was, as a matter of fact, no fresh stamped complaint and no sworn statement on 5th March. There was a complaint on plain paper dated 5th March and a sworn statement dated 26th March. The petitioner complains that having once been acquitted he cannot be retried for the same offence. The President thinks that his Court can act as a Court of revision and decide which of its decisions may or may not be quashed. In any circumstances there is no legal authority for making false records in the Court's diary. If the President thought he could treat the order of acquittal as a nullity, he should have done so, proceeding with the case of 19th February on 5th March as though nothing had happened on 1st March. But such procedure is quite contrary to the Code, which has never contemplated a Court sitting in revision upon its own completed and pronounced judgments. The President, if he thought there had been a miscarriage of justice, should have referred the matter to the District Magistrate, who, if so advised, could have acted under S. 438.

A case very similar to the present case is considered in Achambit Mandal v. Mahatab Singh (1), and there it is held that the acquittal following upon a mistake about the posting date is a nullity, and the trial may proceed as if it had never been pronounced. This ruling is in terms based upon High Court proceedings, 17th August 1875 No. 1793 (2), but the Madras decision is no authority for the Court acting in revision upon its own proceedings. A Third Class Magistrate posted a case to a certain date without informing the parties, and on their non-appearance acquitted the accused. The District Magistrate ordered him to restore the case to file. The Sessions Judge questioned the legality of his order and this Court, holding that the Third Class Magistrate's procedure was substantially irregular, set aside the order of acquittal. It did not confine itself to returning the record with the observation that there was no cause for interference, which it would have done if it had held, as the Calcutta case assumes, that the Third Class Magistrate could himself restore the case. That the District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a retrial was ruled in the next case but one in Weir's Collection: see 11 Weir 308 C. P. 342. It must be taken as the procedural law in this province that no subordinate Court can sit in revision upon its own record and decide whether, upon a certain view of the facts, its proceedings should be treated as null. If it is thought that a mistake has been committed the matter must be referred to the High Court. The petition is allowed; the sentence is cancelled; the fine is ordered to be refunded; and the President is enjoined that his diary must be a plain record of fact and not a pious adaptation to circumstances.

Criminal Revn. No. 1419 to 1422 of 1929, Decided on 14th January 1930, from order of Presy. and Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta D/- 26th September 1929.

Criminal P.C., S. 206—Conservancy Overseer of Calcutta Corporation is public servant—On written complaint by such officer it is not necessary to examine complainant before issuing process—Calcutta Municipal Act, S. 554—Penal Code S. 21.

A conservancy officer of the Corporation of Calcutta is a public servant within the meaning of S. 21, I. P. C. and as such on the written complaint of such officer made in the discharge of his official duties it is not necessary to examine the complainant before issuing process. [P 1057 C 2]

Suresh Chandra Talukdar and Mohendra Kumar Ghose—for Petitioner.

Mr. Nurul Huq Chowdhury—for Opposite Party.

Order.—These four rules arise out of four separate prosecutions for putting up scaffoldings in a public lane belonging to the Corporation of Calcutta without obtaining licenses for so doing from the Corporation. The petitioner was apparently charged with obstructing this lane on four separate occasions. For each of these obstructions he was convicted and fined Rs. 20.

The ground which has been urged on his behalf by Mr. Talukdar is that the separate prosecutions and convictions were not maintainable and illegal, because the obstruction was one and the same in each of these cases and therefore he could not be tried and convicted four times for the same offence. Whether the obstruction for which he was prosecuted was the same in all the four cases or was a different obstruction is obviously a question of fact. When the petitioner was prosecuted on these four charges he never alleged in his defence that the obstructions complained of were one and the same. This point obviously turns upon a question of fact which was not raised by the petitioner when the cases were tried, and I have no material before me on which I can possibly decide whether the cases referred to the same obstruction or different obstructions.

Mr Talukdar had then argued that the convictions and sentences are bad in law, because the learned Magistrate did not examine the complainant according to the mandatory provisions of law before he issued the processes. The answer to this contention lies in proviso (aa) to S. 200, Criminal P. C. which provides:

"when the complaint is made in writing nothing herein contained shall be deemed to require the examination of a complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court or by a public servant acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties."

The person who made the complaints was a Conservancy Overseer and purported to act in the discharge of his official duties. He was clearly a Municipal officer or a servant of the Corporation and therefore under S. 554, Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923 he is a public servant within the meaning of S. 21, I. P. C. There is therefore no substance whatever in this contention.

Lastly Mr Talukdar has argued that in the facts and circumstances of the case the conviction is improper. As far as I can understand Mr. Talukdar he would seem to urge that as the building is now finished and the whole occurrence took place some time ago the prosecution was improper. He does not suggest that it was illegal. Why it would in such circumstances be considered improper I entirely fail to understand. The mere fact that the building the construction of which caused the obstructions has been finished would be no reason for condoning the offence of obstructing the road during the construction of the building.

These are the only points which Mr. Talukdar has argued. The result is all four rules stand discharged.

Criminal Revn. No. 1311 of 1929, Decided on 10th December 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Jalpaiguri, D/- 29th August 1929.

Penal Code, S. 363—Enticing away minor girl whose mother had lost right to guardianship by virtue of marriage—Accused must be given benefit of doubt.

Probodh Chandra Chatterji and Bireswar Chatterjee—for Petitioners.

Satindra Nath Mukherjee—for the Crown.

C. C. Ghose, J.—This matter was argued before us on Friday last and has been argued today. We have had the advantage of hearing Mr. Satindra Nath Mukherjee on behalf of the Crown. But having examined the record we are of opinion that the case against the accused is not a clear one. The matter really depends upon this : as to whether Jhapuran Bibi had lost her right to the lawful guardianship of her minor daughter Amiran Bibi. If she has lost her right then the accused must be given the benefit of the doubt and their conviction set aside. If however she has not lost her right then the conviction and sentence must remain. Now, Mr. Mukherjee has gone into the matter and has, with great candour, admitted before us that Jhapuran Bibi had married a person who was not related to the infant within the prohibited degrees as laid down under the Mahomedan law. In other words Mr. Mukherjee admits that Jhapuran Bibi had married a person who was an outsider so far as the family were concerned. It follows therefore that Jhapuran Bibi had lost her right to be the lawful guardian of Amiran Bibi. If that was so then the conviction of the accused under S. 363, I.P.C., cannot be sustained at all. Mr. Mukherjee had addressed to us a lengthy argument with the object of showing that although Jhapuran Bibi might have ceased to be the lawful guardian of the infant Amiran Bibi she was still entitled to the lawful custody of Amiran Bibi, she having entrusted herself with the lawful custody of the infant before she married an outsider. This is a specious, ingenious and attractive argument. But having regard to the facts in this case the whole point is whether, in the circumstances, the accused should or should not have been given the benefit of the doubt. We are of opinion that the circumstances were and are such that it is our primary duty to examine the case of the accused with very great scrutiny and if, as we have come to the conclusion that Jhapuran Bibi has ceased to be the lawful guardian of Amiran Bibi on her marriage with an outsider, the accused must be given the benefit of the doubt. It follows therefore that the conviction and sentence must be set aside.

The accused who are on bail will be discharged from their bail bonds.

Manmatha Nath Roy (Jr.)—for Petitioner.

Nirmal Chandra Chakravarty—for the Crown.

Graham, J.—In this case a rule was issued on the District Magistrate of Burdwan to show cause why an order of the Magistrate of Asansol dated 14th April 1930 refusing the petitioner's request for a de novo trial should not be set aside or why such other or further order should not be made as might appear fit and proper to this Court. An application for revision of the order in question was made to the District Magistrate of Burdwan and was rejected by him on 26th April. It appears that the petitioner, who was a Tahsildar at Asansol under the Maharaja of Cossimbazar, was sent up for trial on a charge of criminal breach of trust under S. 408, I. P. C. The case was at first in the file of S. K. Guha and in its early stages was apparently proceeded with on the footing that it was a trial. No less than 67 witnesses were examined for the prosecution. Thereafter, it appears that the trying Magistrate left the district and was succeeded by another Magistrate Rai Sahib Hiralal Roy. As a consequence of that Mr. Guha recorded on 29th March 1930 an order in these terms:

"As I am not going to make over charge immediately the case need not be transferred just now. In the exercise of the power under S. 347, Criminal P. C., I direct that evidence shall be taken under S. 208, Criminal P. C., the accused is therefore called upon to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses forthwith and file a list of defence witnesses whom he wishes to summon under S. 208, Criminal P. C."

After that some of the witnesses were cross-examined and eventually Rai Sahib Hiralal Roy having succeeded Mr. Guha recorded an order on 9th April 1930 to the following effect:

"After going through the record I find that my predecessor decided under S. 347, Criminal P. C., to proceed in accordance with the provisions of S. 207, Criminal P. C. The defence wants the matter to proceed in accordance with Ss. 252 and 254, Criminal P. C."

After hearing the parties the Magistrate passed the order which forms the subject matter of the present application. He stated therein that after carefully considering the arguments on both sides he thought that in view of his predecessor's decision to proceed under S. 207, Criminal P. C., he ought to abide by that decision and he accordingly followed the same course, and rejected the prayer for a de novo trial. The petitioner thereupon moved the District Magistrate with the result which has already been stated above.

The main contention which has been urged before us is that the learned District Magistrate erred in law in holding that it was entirely within the discretion of the trying Magistrate to grant the request for de novo trial or not, and it has been strenuously argued that he ought to have held that the accused had a right to a de novo trial. The matter seems to depend mainly upon the interpretation to be placed on Ss. 347 and

"If in any enquiry before a Magistrate or in any trial before a Magistrate before signing judgment, it appears to him at any stage of the proceedings that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Sessions or High Court, and if he is empowered to commit for trial, he shall stop further proceedings and commit the accused under the provisions hereinafter contained."

Section 350 provides for cases of conviction or commitment upon evidence partly recorded by one Magistrate and partly by another. The learned advocate for the petitioner has contended that the proceedings were a trial and that that being so he was entitled to demand as of right a de novo trial. The answer to that however seems to be that the Magistrate had undoubtedly power at any stage of the proceedings to decide that the case was one which he ought not to try and which ought to be committed to the Sessions, and according to this section he would ordinarily commit the case for trial provided the evidence had been completed. In this particular instance however the evidence had not yet been completed and therefore it was not possible for the first Magistrate to make an order of commitment. He contented himself therefore with merely recording an order that the case was one which should be committed. From that moment what had hitherto been a trial became an enquiry, and the only reason why the case was not there and then committed for trial was that the enquiry was incomplete it being left by the Magistrate to his successor to finish the enquiry and make the necessary order for commitment. The argument advanced by the learned advocate for the petitioner seems really to amount to this that he wishes to tie the Magistrate down to the view which he took of the case in its earlier stages. It seems to be almost tantamount to saying "once a trial always a trial." I do not think that that view can be supported. It is to be borne in mind that the proceeding before the Magistrate was one continuous proceeding and the power which the first Magistrate possessed to take action under S. 347 existed equally in the case of the second Magistrate. Furthermore, it appears to be clear from the record that the second Magistrate did not blindly accept the decision of his predecessor but that he brought his own mind to bear on the matter and came to the same conclusion that the case was one which ought to be committed to the Sessions.

Coming now to S. 350 it is important to note that the proviso to sub.S. (1) of that section refers to the case of a trial only, and it is only in that case that the accused may when the second Magistrate has commenced his proceedings demand that the witnesses or any of them should be re-summured and reheard; or in other words, that there should be a de novo trial. The principle which underlies this proposition is obvious. Where however the proceedings are in the nature not of a trial but merely of an enquiry preparatory to commitment the necessity of any provision for a de novo trial does not exist. In my judgment there has been no error of law in this case such as to render it necessary for us to interfere in the exercise of our revisional powers.

On the merits I find it difficult to understand why the petitioner who, it might be imagined, would be anxious to have a speedy trial should be so insistent upon a de novo trial in holding the examination of 67 witnesses over again and the inevitable delay and expense which would result therefrom.

In my opinion this rule must be discharged.

GRAHAM AND PANCKRIDGE, JJ.

Cyril C. Baker—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 137 of 1930, Decided on 2nd July 1930, from order of Chief Presidency Magistrate.

Opium Act (1 of 1878), S. 90—Meaning of "possession".

Possession implies knowledge, and there would be no possession when there is no knowledge on the part of the ostensible occupant of the cabin or room as the case may be. Possession without knowledge can hardly have been meant since in that case the element of criminal intention or knowledge would be entirely wanting. [P 1061 C 1, 2]

Where there is undoubtedly ground for grave suspicion regarding possession against the accused, but the element of reasonable doubt is not excluded, it would not be safe to conclude that the accused had the knowledge which is necessary to convict him of the offence. The onus of proving that knowledge is upon the prosecution, and relying solely upon the bare fact that the opium was found in the accused's cabin without proof of any additional or extraneous facts to establish any connexion between him and the opium is not sufficient to discharge that onus.

Charles' Bagram and Sudhansu Mouli Chowdhury—for Appellant.

Monindra Nath Mukherji—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the order of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate convicting the appellant, Cyril C. Baker, of an offence under S. 9, Opium Act (1 of 1878) and sentencing him to six months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rupees 1,000 or in default of payment thereof to a further term of three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts are shortly as follows: The appellant is, or was, at the time of the alleged occurrence, Assistant Wireless Operator of the B. I. S. N. Co's "S. S. Edavana," which was due to leave on the night of 23rd January or morning of 24th January last for Rangoon and the Straits. On the evening of 23rd January at about 7 p.m. a party of Customs Preventive Officers went on board the ship and searched the appellant's cabin, which was an ordinary 2nd class cabin on the lower deck having in it two berths and a settee. The accused accompanied the officers from the top deck and opened the door of the cabin with a key which he produced either from his pocket or from the top of a ledge outside the door of the cabin. Upon that point there was some controversy at the trial. This much however is clear that the door was locked and that it was opened by a key produced by the accused. On search being made twenty-seer packets of opium were found concealed in the covering of the settee and the mattresses of the upper and lower berth. The accused was thereupon taken into custody, and was in due course sent up for trial and convicted and sentenced as stated.

The defence set up was that the accused knew nothing whatever about the opium and that to use his own expression it was "planted" there by someone else. It was suggested that a Goanese servant, or "boy," who was employed to wait on the accused and the other wireless operator, was the real culprit, and in support of that suggestion reliance was placed on the fact that this "boy" mysteriously disappeared from the ship on that same evening just about the time of the search; that he was found missing when the ship left next morning, and that he has not since been heard of. To prove this fact an entry in the ship's log (Ex. A) was put in by the defence from which it appeared that the "boy" was entered as having deserted the ship, that a small sum was due to him as wages, and that this and his effects were subsequently made over to the Shipping Master at Rangoon.

As the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate has observed in his judgment the facts were almost all admitted. The opium was found in the accused's cabin after he had himself opened the door with the key which he produced. The question therefore was whether he was in possession of the opium within the meaning of the word as used in §. 9 (c), Opium Act. That again depends upon what is meant by possession and whether it means mere physical or de facto possession, that is to say, in the sense of something that is found in a place which is in the exclusive occupation of some person or whether something more is required, and whether it connotes conscious possession with knowledge. It has been argued on behalf of the Crown that so soon as it is established that the opium was found in the de facto possession of the accused, that is to say in the cabin exclusively occupied by him, the effect will be that under §. 10 of the Act the presumption will be that the accused will be deemed to have committed the offence unless he can satisfactorily account for his possession. The presumption will however only come into play when it has been proved that the accused has dealt with the opium in any of the ways described in §. 10. So that we come back again to the question whether he was in possession. In regard to that we take the view that possession implies knowledge, and that there would be no possession when there is no knowledge on the part of the ostensible occupant of the cabin or room as the case may be and when it is shown that the opium was placed there by some one else. Such possession as this can hardly have been meant since in that case the element of criminal intention or knowledge would be entirely wanting.

Proceeding then upon the footing that the possession must be conscious possession the question is whether it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the accused was in possession of the opium. Now there can be no doubt that up to a certain point the facts go very much against the accused. The opium was admittedly found in a cabin occupied exclusively by him, the door of which was kept locked and was opened with a key which he himself produced.

The quantity of opium too is remarkable being no less than 20 seers in weight in packets of 20 one-seer each concealed as already stated under the cover of the settee and in the mattresses of the two bunks. At first sight these facts seem to be almost conclusive against the accused, and it is difficult to believe that anyone else could have placed them there or that at all events that the accused could have been ignorant of the presence of the opium. If he had that knowledge he would of course be guilty.

But the case is complicated by the evidence regarding the mysterious disappearance of the Goanese boy, and the importance of this piece of evidence is this, that it gives rise to a doubt whether the boy could have been the culprit and whether it is possible that the accused was, as he claimed, ignorant of the fact that the opium was in his cabin. To my mind the fact which militates mostly against this theory is the fact that such a large quantity of opium was found, since it does seem difficult to believe that the Goanese would have dared to place such a large quantity of opium in his master's cabin knowing as he must have done that his master might enter the cabin at any moment and discover its presence with the consequences which would naturally ensue therefrom.

Whether the accused had knowledge of the opium or not one fact is we think abundantly clear and that is that the "boy" was concerned in the offence either alone and independently, or as a confederate of the accused. The evidence in that connexion is significant as it shows that he disappeared suddenly just about the time when the search was made. According to the testimony of the first wireless operator the "boy" was serving him when he began his dinner at 7 p. m. and he then disappeared and could not be found. He was not seen again and next morning was entered in the log as having deserted the ship. Indeed he left in such a hurry that he abandoned, as stated above, his personal effects, and also a small amount of pay which was due to him. The learned Magistrate thought that his disappearance might be explained by his having had something to do with the information, but there is no evidence to support that conclusion, nor does it seem probable, if that was the reason, that the boy would have delayed his departure until the customs officers were actually on board. Had that been the reason for his departure it seems probable that he would have left much earlier, and have taken his personal effects with him. The suddenness of his departure suggests rather that he cannot have been the informant.

The "boy" had access to the cabin and the suspicious circumstances in which he left the ship go to show we think that he undoubtedly had knowledge of the fact that the opium was in the cabin.

But the question still remains whether the accused also had this knowledge. Prima facie, as I have said, it is difficult to believe that the "boy" would dare to secrete so large a quantity in the cabin with the risk of its being discovered at any moment. But there are some facts in this connexion which have to be taken into consideration. The accused was according to the evidence on duty on the top deck and it was about the time apparently when he usually had his dinner. It seems probable whoever placed the opium where it was found that it was only intended to be a temporary resting place, and that it would afterwards be removed to some safer place. There is a port-hole just over the settee where some of the packets of opium were found. It is possible that the "boy" who as we have held had undoubtedly taken a guilty part in the matter, was alone responsible for placing the opium where it was found, and that taking advantage of the temporary absence of his master he hid the opium in the cabin intending afterwards to remove it to some other place. In this connexion it may be borne in mind that the cabin was on the lower deck and that the porthole would afford a convenient means of smuggling the opium on board. The sudden and unexpected arrival of the customs officers just before the ship was due to sail may have upset any such plan.

There are other circumstances which deserve consideration. We agree with the learned Magistrate that the fact that the accused took the officers to his cabin does not help him because he had no option in the matter, and it was a case of force majeure. At the same time there is nothing in the evidence to show that the accused showed any reluctance to accompany the officers or that his demeanour was that of a guilty man. On the other hand he at once disowned any knowledge of the opium and said that it must have been "planted."

I may mention at this point that the theory has for the first time been propounded on behalf of the Crown that the entire story about the "boy" is a myth, and that it was a subsequent afterthought designed with the object of exonerating the accused. We do not think that such a suggestion ought to have been made. It was never part of the case for the prosecution at the trial nor was any cross-examination directed towards showing that the boy had never in fact existed. All that was suggested was that it had not been given out on that night that the boy was missing. The evidence to prove that the boy did exist is overwhelming, and the learned Magistrate has accepted that view with which we agree.

On a careful consideration of the evidence and of all the facts and circumstances the conclusion at which we have arrived is that while there is undoubtedly ground for grave suspicion against the accused the element of reasonable doubt is not excluded, and that it would not be safe to conclude that the accused had the knowledge which is necessary to convict him of the offence. The onus of proving that knowledge was upon the prosecution and in relying solely upon the bare fact that the opium was found in the accused's cabin without proof of any additional or extraneous facts to establish any connexion between him and the opium they have failed to discharge that onus. It is apparent that careful investigation might have been expected to establish some of these missing links. We are not prepared on the evidence as it stands to hold that it proves beyond reasonable doubt that the accused was aware of the presence of the opium in his cabin, and we think that he is entitled to the benefit of that doubt. The result therefore is that we allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence, acquit the accused, and direct that the fine, if realized, be refunded. The appellant will be discharged from his bail bond.

Judgment.—This rule has been issued on the ground that the petitioner not having been a party to any proceeding before the Magistrate who made the complaint against him under S. 476, Criminal P. C., the case instituted against him on such complaint should be withdrawn. The fact is that the petitioner was the Sub-Inspector of Gangajalhati Police Station in the District of Bankura. One Jugal Kishore Singh, a constable, lodged a first information report with the petitioner against certain persons charging one of them with escaping from his lawful custody and the others for rescuing him. This information was enquired into by a superior officer to the petitioner who found it to be false and concocted with the help of the petitioner and others. Mr. Bell, Superintendent of Police, Bankura, then lodged a complaint in Court under S. 211, I. P. C., against all the persons concerned including the petitioner. Jugal Kishore filed a protest petition and the case was enquired into and ultimately dismissed as false by the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. D. R. Ghose. Mr. Ghose on dismissing Jugal Kishore's complaint asked the petitioner and other persons to show cause why they should not be prosecuted under certain sections of the Indian Penal Code.

On considering the cause shown the learned Deputy Magistrate made a complaint against them under S. 476, Criminal P. C., for offences under Ss. 120-B-211, 193, 466, 466-109. There was an appeal by the petitioner to the Sessions Judge of Bankura against the order made by the Deputy Magistrate under S. 476-B. The learned Judge in a careful and lucid judgment dismissed the appeal but made certain slight alterations in the order made by the Deputy Magistrate. The petitioner moved this Court and obtained this rule on the ground that he was not a party to the proceeding before Mr. D. R. Ghose and that officer had no jurisdiction to make a complaint against him under S. 476. Before proceeding further it may be noted that the petitioner has raised an argument before us which is more academical than of any practical importance. If we set aside the complaint against the petitioner made by the Court under S. 476 the result will be that Mr. Bell's complaint existing against the petitioner will proceed. But as the point has been raised and strenuously argued it is necessary to give our opinion on it. We have already held in giving our decision in Criminal Admitted Appeals Nos. 934 and 935 of 1929 decided on 5th May last that the Court may make a complaint against a person under S. 476, for an offence under S. 211, I. P. C., if it is of opinion that the proceeding before the Court was caused to be started by that person though he was not a party to a proceeding before it. Here we may shortly give our reasons for that view. We have expressed therein, (1) under S. 211, I. P. C., a person who institutes, and also a person who causes to be instituted, a criminal proceeding which is proved to be false may be prosecuted for an offence under that section; and under S. 195, Criminal P. C., Cl. (4), a person who abets the commission of an offence may also be prosecuted under that section; (2) S. 476 does not speak of a party to a proceeding. It says that the Court can order further enquiry in a criminal case in respect of any offence referred to in S. 195 (1) (b) (c) which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court.

The words "in" and "in relation to" must be given their meaning; otherwise there is no sense in using those words. An offence may be committed by a person in relation to a judicial proceeding though he may not be a party to the proceeding or though it may not have been committed by that person in a judicial proceeding. (3) The offences with which the petitioner is charged are covered by S. 195 (1) (b) which are not restricted to the party committing the offence in or in relation to a proceeding in Court which is similarly worded as S. 476. A different consideration may arise in respect of an offence mentioned in Cl. (c), S. 195 (1). We are fortified in this view of ours by a Full Bench decision of the Rangoon High Court in Emperor v. Syed Khan (1).

The distinction seems to be this: that if a false information is lodged to the police with the conspiracy of several persons then all of them may be prosecuted for lodging false information. If the person who lodges the information goes to the Court without the assistance or collusion of the abettors the Court may not have jurisdiction to order prosecution of the persons other than the man who actually gave the information. But where it is apparent that several persons combined to lodge a false information with the police and also lay a false complaint in Court the Court will have the power to pass orders against all the persons under S. 476 who had thus conspired. The case law on this point is not very clear as will appear from the judgment in the case of Jadu Nandan Singh v. Emperor (2) where all the cases have been noted; but it is to be noticed that the preponderance of judicial opinion is that in cases coming under S. 195 (1) (b) the Court has authority to order the prosecution under S. 476 in respect of offences mentioned therein whether committed by a person to a proceeding or by a person not apparently connected with the proceeding. In Dharmadas Kaur v. Emperor (3) sanction was given for the prosecution of two persons on the allegation that they had instigated the complainant to lodge a false information. That order was set aside by this Court on the ground that the information was lodged only before the police and, therefore, the Court had no jurisdiction to sanction the prosecution of those persons. The decision of the Court did not rest on the ground that the party against whom sanction was given was not a party to the proceeding. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the order passed by Mr. D. R. Ghosh, Deputy Magistrate directing the prosecution of the petitioner, was passed with jurisdiction. This rule, therefore, will stand discharged.

"As the proceedings have been so long protracted as remarked by the Sessions Judge we expect that action in the matter will be taken at once. Let the record be sent down at once.

In re Shamdasani (No. 1)—Applicant.

* Criminal Appn: No: 146 of 1930, Decided on 15th April 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), S. 526 — Derogatory allegations in another case against complainant—Subsequent case about accounts only — Criminal liability to be considered of accused and not of complainant—Fair trial could be had.

The observations alleged to be made by the Magistrate in another case, which are derogatory of the complainant, cannot be held to indicate that the complainant will not have a perfectly fair trial in deciding, first, a matter of accounts only, and, secondly, a question as to the criminal liability not of the complainant but of the accused in the case, [P 1066 U 2]

(b) Criminal Trial — Complainant filing successive applications for transfer—Applications frivolous and vexatious — High Court ought to exercise its inherent power under S. 561-A — Such conduct also can amount to contempt of Court — High Court can also direct complainant to lodge in Court a sum as security for costs occasioned to his opponent—Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), S. 561-A.

Where successive frivolous and vexatious applications for transfer are resorted to as a means of preventing the ends of justice being attained, the High Court ought to exercise its inherent power under S. 561-A. Further conduct of this type can amount to contempt of Court which can be punished in various ways. There is also another remedy. The High Court may direct a complainant who resorts to such application for transfer to lodge a certain sum, say Rs. 1,000 as security for the costs occasioned to his opponent by these repeated adjournments and applications in respect of them. [P 1066 C 2 ; P 1067 C 1, 2]

Marten, C. J. — This is an application No. 140 of 1930, by Mr. Shamdasani, the complainant in a case filed on 13th June 1929, and still pending before the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate, asking that all proceedings had before the learned Magistrate be set aside and that the case be transferred to some other Court for disposal according to law. This is the third application of a similar nature, there having been two previous applications, viz. Criminal Revision No. 71 of 1930 filed in this Court on 17th February 1930, and Criminal Revision No. 104 of 1930 filed in this Court on 14th March 1930.

The prosecution which has been instituted by the complainant is in respect of certain alleged false balance sheets which have been published. The learned Magistrate has held an inquiry for some eight days, viz., on 9th October, 27th November, 4th, 5th and 6th December 1929 and 1st, 8th and 15th February 1930, into the allegations made by the complainant. Then, on 15th February, the hearing appears to have been prolonged up to 6-30 p.m.; and thereupon the complainant made an application for transfer alleging bias in the learned Magistrate and that he feared he would not get a fair trial. Subsequently, on 17th February, the first application to this Court was made. The result under S. 526 (8), Criminal P. C., was that the Magistrate had to postpone the case.

The first application, which I will call "A," was refused by the High Court on 7th March 1930. In the judgment delivered by my brother Mirza, J., the point of bias was thus dealt with :

"With regard to the second part of the application, namely that the Magistrate is prejudiced against the applicant and is not likely to do justice to his case with an impartial mind the materials placed before us do not in our opinion justify such a conclusion. If the applicant entertains an apprehension that he will not get justice at the hands of the Magistrate we would be constrained to say that the apprehension is not one which we would regard as reasonable. The application therefore is summarily rejected."

Accordingly on 11th March 1930 the inquiry was resumed by the learned Magistrate, and practically at once another application for a transfer was made on similar grounds. That was filed in this High Court on 14th March 1930, in which it was alleged that the cumulative effect of the incidents on the mind of the complainant was that the mind of the learned Magistrate was not free from some bias in the matter, and he did not approach the case with that judicial impartiality so essential to the administration of justice. That application, which I will call "B," came before my learned brothers on 26th March 1930, and was summarily dismissed.

Accordingly, the learned Magistrate on 29th March 1930, once more resumed the hearing of the case and once more an application was forthwith made for a transfer of the case on the same grounds of bias, which is the application "C" now before us. It is based on this additional circumstance that on 28th March 1930 in another case the Magistrate made certain observations derogatory to Mr. Shamdassani which of themselves show that the Magistrate is not a fit person to continue the hearing of the present inquiry. Moreover Mr. Shamdassani alleges that those observations were defamatory, and he is accordingly petitioning the Local Government for sanction to take proceedings against the learned Magistrate for defamation in respect of those observations. And this, he contends, is an additional reason why the Magistrate should not continue the present inquiry, whether or no the requisite sanction to prosecute is eventually given by the Local Government.

We have carefully considered what has been urged before us by the complainant in the present case, but in coming to our conclusion we must remember the surrounding circumstances. The complainant puts himself in the position of one who is vindicating public justice and who accordingly is bringing repeated prosecutions against certain persons who are alleged to have filed improper balance-sheets. The point for decision before the learned Magistrate will therefore be whether these particular balance-sheets are improper, and, if so, whether the respondents are under any liability under the criminal law in respect of them. As regards the first point it will, I take it, be largely a question of accountancy and so on. Therefore we are a long way away from a case where there is a mere conflict of evidence between a complainant and an accused or where the result depends on the credibility of or character of the complainant. Moreover it has to be borne in mind, as the complainant himself tells us, that he has been bringing proceedings of a somewhat similar nature in these Courts for the last six years. Consequently it is impossible for any Judge or Magistrate to be unaware of the activities of Mr. Shamdassani in his desire that the law should be put in motion against any directors or auditors and others of limited liability companies who put forward or are alleged to put forward inaccurate balance-sheets.

Therefore bearing these facts in mind we do not think the observations which the learned Magistrate is alleged to have made—and for the purpose of deciding this application we accept the words which the complainant says he uttered—show a bias which would influence the learned Magistrate in deciding whether these balance-sheets are false or not. We do not think they indicate that the complainant will not have a perfectly fair trial in deciding, first a matter of accounts only, and, secondly, a question as to the criminal liability not of the complainant but of the accused in the case. Therefore as regards this present application before us we unhesitatingly reject it. I repeat that in our opinion there is no adequate reason to suppose that the complainant will not get a fair hearing.

But the matter does not quite end there. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that this is the third application for a transfer on the ground of bias and so on which has been presented to this Court since 17th February 1930. We also cannot shut our eyes to the fact that repeated transfer applications of this kind might in certain events enable a complainant, or for a matter of that an accused, to stop a trial or enquiry altogether under S. 526 (8), because as soon as one application for a transfer was rejected he could proceed forthwith to make another with only a possible liability for costs under S. 526 (6-A). But, fortunately, in our judgment, it is not open either to a complainant or to an accused to hinder the administration of justice in that way. We hold it to be clear that under S. 561-A, Criminal P. C., we can if necessary exercise the inherent power of the High Court to prevent the abuse of the process of any Court; and in such a case as I have indicated we ought unhesitatingly to apply that power.

Section 561-A runs:

"Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Code, or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice."

To my mind it is clear that one of the ends of justice is to have a case properly heard and concluded within a reasonable time. Accordingly, if frivolous and vexatious applications are resorted to as a means of preventing the ends of justice being attained, then I would hold that the Court ought to exercise its above inherent power to prevent its process being thus abused.

So too in certain cases, speaking for myself, conduct of this sort might, I think, amount to contempt of Court which could be punished in various ways. For instance, in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 7, p. 293, para. 629, it is said:

"Abusing the process of the Court is a term generally applied to a proceeding which is wanting in bona fides and is frivolous, vexatious, or oppressive, the ordinary remedy in such a case being to apply to strike out a pleading or stay the proceedings, or to prevent further proceedings being taken, without leave. Beyond this the Court has jurisdiction to punish abuse of process by committal or attachment as a contempt.

That means committal to prison. Then note (t) says:

"The following acts of abuse of process have been held punishable as contempts: taking out process without any colour of right to it; making use of process in a vexatious manner or to serve the purposes of oppression or injustice... And many other examples are given.

Now we have seriously considered whether in the present case we ought not to issue an order of the nature indicated in S. 561-A. But we propose to give the complainant one more chance. We have indicated what in principle we hold to be the powers of the Court. We have also indicated that in a proper case those powers ought to be exercised by this Court. We also consider that in the present case the Magistrate should continue to hold his inquiry into this present complaint and to bring the matter to a final conclusion without permitting any more adjournments than are necessitated by the other urgent work of his Court. Accordingly, if the complainant repeats what he has done in the past, namely that as soon as one application for a transfer is refused by the High Court he promptly makes another, then I must warn him that if the matter comes up again before the High Court he will be in grave risk not only of having an order under S. 561-A passed against him but also of having proceedings directed against him for contempt of Court.

There is also another remedy which we think as a matter of principle the High Court in an appropriate case could adopt. That would be to direct such a complainant as we have here to lodge a certain sum in Court, say a thousand rupees, as security for the costs occasioned to his opponent by these repeated adjournments, and the applications in respect of them.

With this warning then, which we trust the complainant will pay very careful attention to, we will pass our order on the present application, namely that it should be dismissed. As regards the question of costs under S. 526 (6-A), to which we drew the complainant's attention, the present application is made ex parte for a rule nisi. Accordingly, on the present application we do not propose to make any order as regards costs.

Mirza, J.—I agree.

Broomfield, J.—I also agree.

Velinker—for complainant.

Marten, C. J.—This is an application by the accused in a case brought against him for defamation asking us to review the order of the learned Additional Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Brown, passed on 10th April 1930, on an application made by the accused for time on the ground that he meant to apply to the High Court for transfer under S. 526, Criminal P. C. The order made by the learned Magistrate was:

"I grant Shamdassani time until 8-30 p. m. on Saturday to make an application before the Chief Presidency Magistrate for a transfer of this case to some other Court. The time for an application to the High Court has not yet arrived as he has a right to go first to the Chief Presidency Magistrate."

The question is whether in effect the accused can be obliged to go first to the Chief Presidency Magistrate for a transfer of the case under S. 528, or whether he is under S. 526 entitled to go to the High Court direct. It may be, as stated by Mr. Velinker, for the complainant, that the practice in the Presidency Magistrates' Courts has been that any application for transfer of proceedings in any Court other than that of the Chief Presidency Magistrate is normally made in the first instance to the Chief Presidency Magistrate and not to the High Court. As regards the mofussil Courts it was laid down in In re Fonseca (1) that ordinarily the High Court does not transfer a case pending before a Magistrate unless the party applying for transfer has moved the District Magistrate before coming to the High Court. That was a case in 1904. But the present sub-S. (8), S. 526, has been incorporated by the legislature since that date, and incidentally it makes it imperative on the Magistrate to grant an adjournment if either the complainant or the accused signifies his intention of applying to the High Court for a transfer.

We think that although the learned Magistrate's order may have been made following the practice in the Presidency Magistrates' Courts, and although it may be that in many cases it would be a convenient course to go first to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, yet on the other hand, if an accused claims the right to go direct to the High Court, we do not see how his right as a matter of law can be excluded under the Code as in the present circumstances. For instance the accused may not wish to incur the expenses of a double application, first, to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and, secondly, to the High Court. In some other cases it may be that neither the complainant nor the accused would desire the extra delay which the double application would cause. But, however that may be, it is we think reasonably clear that in the present case the learned Magistrate's order was not strictly correct in point of law if the accused desired to go to the High Court direct. We would therefore make the rule absolute and direct the learned Magistrate to adjourn the case for a reasonable time for the application in question to be made to the High Court.

I should add that we were told by counsel for the complainant that subsequently the case came again before the learned Magistrate and he has already adjourned it to 16th April in order that an application to the High Court for a transfer be made. But we have not got any official copy of the learned Magistrate's subsequent order before us. All we have is the revisional application as regards the order of 10th April. Therefore it is clearly to be understood that we are merely dealing with the order of 10th April, and that we are not prejudging any subsequent order which the learned Magistrate has made, or holding that any further order by him will be necessary. Nor again do we intend to give by means of this transfer application any loophole for unreasonable delay in the disposal of this particular case which we understand has already been heard for very many days by the learned Magistrate. Our order accordingly will be, rule absolute.

the order under S. 106, Criminal P. C., should not be set aside. It is urged for the petitioner that since the conviction was only under S. 379, I. P. C., in both the cases the orders under S. 106 are improper inasmuch as an offence under S. 479 does not involve any breach of the peace. There are a number of rulings as regards what amounts to an offence involving a breach of the peace as referred to in S. 106, Criminal P. C. I do not think it necessary to go into details of these cases. It appears to me that the trend of these rulings shows that unless the offence is one which necessarily involves a breach of the peace there must be an express finding by the Court that the offence did in fact involve a breach of the peace and I find that in both these cases there is such a finding.

In Case No. 448 the appellate Court found that the accused formed an unlawful assembly no doubt as the number was 50 or 60 men although no charge was framed against the accused under this section. The offence committed was accompanied by force and it certainly involves a breach of the peace. In Case No 449 the finding of the appellate Court was also that the offence committed involved a breach of the peace and the learned District Magistrate remarked that as the appellant did not desist from the wrongful act, even after his conviction in the case, he considered it necessary that the accused should be bound down to keep the peace. In these circumstances, I think that the orders under S. 106, Criminal P. C., in both these cases are justified according to law. The rules are therefore discharged

B. M. Sen—for the Crown.

. Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal by three accused persons who have been tried before a Special Tribunal sitting under the powers conferred by the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. The charges were in respect of an alleged dacoity or attempted dacoity upon a certain bus which on 11th September last was going from Rajshahye to Natore carrying passengers and also stopping at the post offices on the way in order to pick up the mails. The bus in question was being driven by witness 3 in the case Ramkrishna and there were certain employees of the Bus Company and there were also certain passengers who had got into the bus. In the driver's seat there was the driver, Satis the manager of the company and a certain other person. In the mail box or the middle part of the bus, there were witness 1 Ashutosh and witness Balavi (P. W. 17). The witnesses Khitish, Sukumar and certain others were in the back portion which has been referred to as the body of the bus. What happened was that after the bus had reached Puthia motor stand which was about 19 miles from Rajshahye and about 9 miles from Natore, one of the passengers in the bus asked the driver to stop on the ground that his watch had been dropped. The driver was unwilling to do so but some of the other passengers apparently induced him to stop and he stopped the bus though the engine was left running. Thereupon, certain passengers inside the bus got out, raised the cry "hands up," one or more of them broke the headlights and punctured the front tyres and one or more stood over the driver threatening him with a dagger and threatening the people in the mail box to get down. The passenger who had been sitting in the front next to the manager got down and fired two shots with a revolver. He may have intended and probably did intend to hit the driver but he hit the manager Satis who was sitting next to him once in the arm and once in the chest. One of the dacoit passengers is said to have remained at the door of the bus with a dagger in order to prevent any of the other passengers in the bus from getting out. As the driver was not hit by the revolver he started the bus and in the end the bus got away and ultimately reached Natore. It appears according to the prosecution case that the accused Sushil who was at the back of the bus guarding the door was taken by surprise as the bus went off and he appears to have been thrown from the bus and to have sustained certain injuries in that way.

The commissioners in a very careful judgment have set out the whole narrative of the events which throw light upon this case. We find that certain persons went to the police station. We find what the people in the police station did, how they came along a part of the road, how they made a search list of what had been discovered and how they came ultimately to the police station of Natore. Curiously enough late in that evening the accused Sushil was brought to the police station, and it appears that he had been found in the field or premises of a certain agriculturist at a considerable distance to the south of the road along which the motor bus was going. The agriculturist called in his munib who advised him that the police should be given notice and Sushil was taken to the thana. There is evidence that he at first, at all events, gave a false name and said that he belonged to a place called Sherpur. It would appear from the medical evidence that he had sustained a certain amount of concussion because there was bleeding from his ear, which showed that this had happened, and it is probably true that he was in a semiconscious condition at the time when he was found and also even at the time when he was taken to the police station. Proceeding upon the suspicious feature of this discovery near about the spot where the attack upon the bus had taken place, of a young man suffering in this way the police appear to have commenced investigation as to the antecedents and past history of Sushil, and in that way they discovered that Sushil and his co-accused Dharani were students of the Rangpore College, and they further found that these two had come on the 2nd to a mess at Rajshahye and that they had afterwards returned there on the 4th and stayed in the room belonging to the accused Rakhal until the 11th, the date of the occurrence. It appears that on the 7th Rakhal joined them and there is evidence to show that at about 6-30 p. m. on that day Rakhal was seen in Rajshahye, so that he was not a person who could have taken part in the attack on the bus, if the prosecution evidence is to be believed. In the end the commissioners have given full and adequate reasons for their finding that there was this attack upon the bus as alleged by the prosecution. They have also given reasons and good reasons for finding that more than five persons took part in the attack and they have further given reasons for finding that the object of this attack on the bus was to secure the mail, there being indeed no other object that could very well be served by this attack so far as the evidence discloses.

The case therefore comes back as regards each accused to the question whether it is shown that he was a party to the attack; in other words whether the evidence of identification is sufficiently ample to justify the Court in holding that each prisoner has been satisfactorily identified.

So far as Rakhal is concerned the prosecution in the end abandoned the case that he did take any part in the actual attack. So we have to deal, first of all, with the prisoner Sushil and then with the prisoner Dharani in considering whether it is proved that they took part.

As against Sushil I am of opinion that the evidence which has been very plainly and clearly marshalled in the judgment of the tribunal is amply sufficient to show that he was one of those who took part in the attack. To begin with, there was found on him at the time of his discovery a ticket which had been issued for this very bus for the journey with which we are concerned. The witnesses who identified him are P. W's 1, 16, 17, 18, 19 and 21, and they identified him as the one who remained inside the bus near the door to prevent other people from descending. Then we come to this: that curiously enough on this very evening, some time after this occurrence, Sushil is found not very far away in a wounded condition by the witness who speaks to having seen him there. There is further the fact which is clearly proved that when he was asked to give an account of himself after he had been taken to the thana he gave a false name and a false address. It appears also that a revolver and a dagger were found some 400 yards away from the place where Sushil was found. This last fact certainly by itself is no very secure foundation to identify the accused; but it certainly points to this: that whoever assisted Sushil to the place where he was found threw away these articles in the course of the journey. Having regard to the corroborative evidence and the direct evidence, I cannot think it possible that this Court should differ from the opinion of the members of the tribunal who found that Sushil's complicity in the dacoity was amply proved.

In the case of Dharani, the evidence is not quite so extensive. The evidence against Dharani consists, first of all, of the evidence of association with Sushil staying with him at a mess in Rajshahye both being students of the Rangpore College. I need not say that that of itself would be a highly insufficient foundation for conviction of Dharani merely upon evidence which implicated Sushil and certain others. There is also the fact that when Dharani was arrested he immediately denied that he had ever been in Rajshahye in his life. That may be some evidence that he was endeavouring to extricate himself from being accused of something connected with Rajshahye; but again that in itself is no evidence that Dharani was taking part in the dacoity.

The evidence to implicate Dharani is the evidence of P. W. 2 Satis, the manager who was shot and of P. W. 3 Ram Krishna, the driver, and the real question in this case is, having regard to a certain amount of antecedent corroboration in the evidence of association, whether these two witnesses' evidence is sufficient. Now, it appears that on 7th October a certain number of people, including some people who were present in the bus at the time of the occurrence, were brought to the jail to see if they could identify, among others, Dharani. None of the eyewitnesses identified him on 7th October, but neither the driver nor Satis was present at this identification. Another identification was held on 7th November and it is true that other persons as well as Dharani, who were suspects, were put among the persons paraded. On this occasion Satis and the driver both identified Dharani as the person who took part in the attack going in front and threatening the driver, and they did not apparently identify certain other suspects who were shown to them.

The question is whether we can rely upon the evidence of these two witnesses. In my opinion, the evidence of the driver Ram Krishna is very definite and strong. To begin with, he says:

"I say that Dharani first stood over me with a dagger and broke the lights after. He was on my right. I saw him in the light of the headlights. If this had not been there I would not have recognized him. I mean that I could see him by the headlight when he was standing over me, but I could not have seen him in the lights if the headlights had not been on."

He says of Dharani:

"He was in the bus at the time. He it was also who punctured the tyres, broke the lights and stood over me with the dagger."

Satis says:

At Rajshahye, I identified Dharani At Baneswar he asked me the cause of the delay."

That was because the bus had to wait there for mails.

"He also was the man at Putia who broke the headlights and pierced the tyres."

And in cross-examination he says:

"I first noticed Dharani at Baneswar. I saw him get in behind at Baneswar. He did not sit beside me. I identified Dharani only. I made a statement to the police. I did say to the police that I recognized the man who sat by me but not the other dacoits well. The man who shot the revolver was the man who sat next to me," and so forth. In my judgment, the criticisms of the evidence of these two witnesses are not sufficient to induce one to think that there is any reasonable doubt about the identification of Dharani; and, in my opinion, the conviction of Dharani by the tribunal must be upheld.

I come last to the case of Rakhal. With regard to Rakhal, I am clearly of opinion that the evidence is entirely insufficient to bring home to him the charge of conspiracy under S. 120-B, I. P. C. Indeed, it is difficult to see that the evidence against Rakhal amounts to very much more than some circumstances of suspicion. It is said that his movements were peculiar and suspicious. He was employed, it seems, by an Insurance Company and his business no doubt was to get people who would take policies and arrange for agencies with other people who would extend the business of the company. It would seem that he was at Berhampore about the 4th of the month. It would seem that on the 7th he came to Rajshaye and stayed there till the 11th. It is true that his two co-accused were then putting up with his consent in his room in the mess. It seems that he left Rajshaye on the evening of the day of the occurrence, that next morning he was found at the Ranaghat station, that he spent the time from 11th to 13th again at Berhampore and that he was not finally arrested till some time after that at the house of a relative. All this is very well; but it has nothing in the world directly to do with the attack on the bus. It amounts merely to some evidence of association with Sushil and Dharani, and it shows that he was sufficiently friendly with them to be putting them up in the mess in Rajshahye where he was living. It does not seem to me that it is possible, by saying that when 11th October had passed he was anxious to escape observation or even was doing his best to conceal his whereabouts, that the prosecution can complete what is necessary in order to show that he was a person who concerted with others and agreed with them that this attack on the bus should be made. The commissioners said that, as he no longer did any business with the Insurance Company, he was thus prepared to sacrifice his employment and his pay rather than to give any clue as to his whereabouts. Be it that he was most anxious to escape observation. The commissioners inferred from this:

"We do think that the other points which we have mentioned above have established beyond reasonable doubt that Rakhal's friendship with the other two accused was not unconnected with the project of dacoity and we find it impossible to hold the facts proved to be consistent with his innocence."

I can only say that to my mind the facts proved are in no way conclusive of an agreement on the part of Rakhal that this attack on the bus should be made. No doubt it may be, for anything that I can say, that the absence of any further evidence against Rakhal is due entirely to the fact that he let the younger people do the work and undertake the peril of his scheme, but that must remain entirely in the region of hypothesis. Until we are first convinced by proper proof that Rakhal was a conspirator, no such consideration can arise. We have to be satisfied that he was agreeing and intending that this attack upon the bus should be made before we can find him guilty of a charge such as has been framed against him. In my opinion, the appeal of Rakhal must be allowed and he must be acquitted and released. As regards the other two accused Sushil and Dharani, nothing has been said upon the question of sentence. The tribunal have sentenced both of them to six years' rigorous imprisonment each. In my opinion, that is a very proper sentence and ought not to be interfered with. Their appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 336 of 1930, Decided on 19th August 1930, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Bahraich, D/- 23rd July 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., (1898) S. 164 — Duty of Magistrate recording confession explained—Data or materials necessary to form estimate as to voluntary nature of confession stated.

It is the Magistrate's duty to satisfy himself in every reasonable way that the confession is made voluntarily, and it is further the imperative duty of the Magistrate to record those questions and answers by means of which he satisfies himself that the confession is in fact voluntary. It is only by recording those questions and answers prior to taking down the story of the accused that the Magistrate recording the confession furnishes data which enable the Court of Sessions and the High Court or the Chief Court to arrive at the same conclusion as that to which the recording Magistrate has come as regards the voluntary nature of the confession. Without these data or materials it is impossible to form any estimate as to the voluntary nature of a confession: A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 587 and A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 17, Ref. [P 1075 C 1, 2]

(b) Practice—Appellate Court—Genuineness and truth of confession and fact of its being voluntary are within exclusive province of Court of Sessions and of High Court—Ready made opinions of recording Magistrate without materials to prove independent opinion will not be accepted.

The Court of Session or the High Court cannot merely accept the ipse dixit of the Magistrate recording the confession as to its being voluntary. The genuineness and the truth of the confession and the fact of its being voluntarily made are matters which are within the exclusive province of the Court of Session and of the High Court, and neither of them can blindly accept the ready-made opinions of the recording Magistrate on these points without having before it materials from which it could arrive at an independent opinion on these questions.

(c) Criminal P. C., (1898), S. 533—Scope.

Section 533 is intended primarily to cure a defect of form only and not one of substance: A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 237, Foll. [P 1076 C 1]

(d) Criminal Trial—Proper recording of confession is of supreme importance in criminal trials.

The proper recording of confessions which can be shown on the face of them to be voluntary and apparently true is of the highest and supreme importance in criminal trials.

Judgment.—These are two connected appeals from a judgment of the Addl.

tional Sessions Judge of Gonda at Bahraich convicting the appellants Prag Kurmi and Mt. Bishna Kurmin of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C. and sentencing each of them to undergo the extreme penalty of the law. Prag Kurmi and his wife Mt. Bishna have both appealed. The reference in confirmation of the sentences of death is also before us.

The case for the prosecution is as follows:

The deceased Thakur Nanhu Singh was in the service of a zamindar Maulak Ram, and the accused Prag was himself in the employ of Thakur Nanhu Singh. The latter though a married man was of very loose character, being fond of wine and women. For the last year or so he carried on an illicit intrigue with the married daughter of his servant Prag. Her name was Mt. Naraini. Prag resented the efforts of his Thakur Master to debauch his daughter. He entreated Nanhu Singh to desist from his evil designs, but his entreaties fell on deaf ears. Boldly and shamelessly Nanhu Singh took Mt. Naraini with him wherever he went and he even quartered himself at the house of Prag and made Prag's wife and daughter cook food for him; for his was apparently a masterful and domineering personality. In this unsatisfactory manner things went on till 14th January last which was Khichri day, the festival of Makar Shankrant. On that day Nanhu Singh came to Prag's house and told Prag that he (Nanhu Singh) was going to stay there for the night, and ordered Prag to go and sleep at his (Nanhu Singh's) house that night. Prag went away from his house in compliance with his master's orders. Nanhu Singh then ordered Dhonrey Chamar to go to the bazar and buy for him some flour (ata) and ghee and about half a rupee worth of country liquor. Dhonrey went and purchased these articles and gave them to Nanhu Singh. Nanhu Singh drank up the country liquor at once and gave the flour and ghee for the preparation of his evening meal. Dhonrey then went back to his own house. Half an hour later, as his food had not been cooked by then, Nanhu Singh himself went to Dhonrey Chamar's house to have a smoke and chat with him. Over his evening pipe full of the country liquor he had just imbibed, Nanhu Singh opened out his heart to Dhonrey and bitterly complained to him that though he (Nanhu Singh) had lavished so much money on Mt. Naraini that faithless woman had no love for him (Nanhu Singh) and had run away to her mother-in-law's house at Gajodharpur with Nanku Brahman. After having thus unburdened himself of the sorrow which lay at his heart, Nanhu Singh went back to Prag's house to have his evening meal. Dhonrey, it is said, accompanied him again to his house and it was only after Nanhu Singh had sat down to eat his food that Dhonrey betook himself to his own home.

Next morning (15th January 1930) when Nanhu Singh did not turn up to give orders to the zamindars servants, then Dhonrey asked Ram Jiawan another servant as to where Nanhu Singh was. Ram Jiawan told Dhonrey that he had learnt from Prag that Nanhu Singh had returned late in the night to his own house. Dhonrey then went the next day (16th January 1930) to Nanhu Singh's house and asked his wife about him. Mt. Bitti, Nanhu Singh's wife, told Dhonrey that her husband had not been seen by her since khichri day. The following day the 17th January Prag gave to Nanhu Singh's wife Mt. Bitti at her house a quilt (razai) and sheet (chaddar) belonging to Nanhu Singh, saying that they were left at his house by Nanhu Singh.

Mt. Bitti then made a search for her husband and she informed her brother-in-law Kanchan Singh about his brother's disappearance. On 24th January 1930 Kanchan Singh reported at P. S. Hazurpur that his brother was missing. The thanadar sent for Prag and his wife and daughter, but only Mt. Bishna was found at home. The corpse of Nanhu Singh was recovered from a tank upon certain information given by Mt. Bishna. A Panchayatnama or inquest report was prepared and the corpse was sent to Sadr for post-mortem examination. The Civil Surgeon of Bahraich reported that the probable cause of death was "asphyxia probably by suffocation due to pressure on mouth, nose and chest." Subsequently Prag, Mt. Naraini and Ram Bali Khan were arrested and incriminating statements obtained from them also by the police. All four accused were then put up before a First Class Magistrate, B. Bhagwati Prasad Sinha to have their confessions recorded. These confessions were recorded on 4th February 1930. The Chemical Examiner reported that the viscera of the deceased Nanhu Singh sent to him for analysis showed traces of some deleterious substance having the properties of dhatura poison. In the light of the Chemical Examiner's report the Civil Surgeon of Bahraich in his deposition before the committing Magistrate enlarged upon his opinion as to the probable cause of death given in his post-mortem report and stated that the deceased may have been first rendered powerless by the administration of some poison like dhatura, and then strangled to death, by pressure on the throat mouth and chest. We shall show later on that this opinion of the Civil Surgeon as to the probable cause of death of Thakur Nanhu Singh has a very direct and crucial bearing on the question as to the genuineness and truth of the confessions of the accused. The investigating police officer after completing his investigation prosecuted Prag and his wife Mt. Bishna and his daughter Mt. Naraini on a charge under S. 302, I. P. C. and he prosecuted Ram Bali Kahar on a charge under S. 201, I. P. C. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has acquitted Mt. Naraini of the charge of murder holding her confession to be false, and believing that on the day when the deceased was killed she was not in her father's house but that she had been taken by Bhiku Kurmi and Nankhu Brahman to Gajodharpur, a day prior to khichri day, i. e., 13th January 1930.

He has however convicted Prag Kurmi and Mt. Bishna his wife on the charge of murder and sentenced each of them to undergo capital punishment. He has also sentenced Ram Bali Kahar for an offence under S. 201, I. P. C., to undergo seven years' rigorous imprisonment, and to pay a fine of Rs. 100. Ram Bali has not appealed, and we are, therefore, not concerned in the present appeals with the question of his guilt or innocence.

It is admitted on all hands that the case for the prosecution against the appellants Prag Kurmi and his wife Mt. Bishna rests primarily upon the confessions made by them. If the confessions are held to be not voluntary and not genuine and true, then it is conceded that the rest of the evidence on behalf of the prosecution is far too inconclusive and insufficient to justify the conviction of the appellants on the capital charge of murder.

The confessions of Prag and Mt. Bishna are typed in Roman Urdu, and the only thing on the record of these confessions in the Magistrate's own handwriting are his signature "B. P. Sinha" at the foot of the confession and at the bottom of the certificate required by law under S. 164, Criminal P. C.

It is with regret, with stern regret, that we note that Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha the Deputy Magistrate who recorded these confessions, has completely disregarded the standing orders of Government as to the method in which confessions ought to be recorded. Paras. 852, 853 and 853-A of the Manual of Government Orders, Vol. I, lay down definite rules in this matter for the guidance of all Magistrates throughout British India. These standing orders of the Government are based upon instructions issued by the Government of India and embodied in G. G. O., Home Department, (Police) No. 36-C dated 5th January 1916. In the record of the confessions of Prag and Mt. Bishna (not to speak of the confessions of Mt. Naraini and Ram Bali) in the present case there is nothing to show that Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha informed any of these confessing prisoners that he was a Magistrate of the first class empowered under the law to record a confession which could subsequently be utilized in the Court of Session and be sufficient to base a conviction of the confessing prisoner on the capital charge of murder. Had he done so, one of the confessing accused could not subsequently with any show of reason or decency, have urged (as did Mt. Naraini afterwards) that the person recording the confession was understood by the prisoner, to be a police officer and not a Magistrate.

As pointed out by Government in para. 853-A of the Manual of Government Orders quoted above, it is the Magistrate's duty to satisfy himself in every reasonable way that the confession is made voluntarily; and it is further the imperative duty of the Magistrate to record those questions and answers by means of which he has satisfied himself that the confession is in fact voluntary. It is only by recording those questions and answers prior to taking down the story of the accused, that the Magistrate recording the confession furnishes data which enable the Court of Session and the High Court or the Chief Court to arrive at the same conclusion as that to which the recording Magistrate has come, as regards the voluntary nature of the confession. Without supplying these data or materials it is impossible for the trial Court (i. e., the Court of Session) or for this Court to form any estimate as to the voluntary nature of these confessions. The Court of Session or this Court cannot merely accept the ipse dixit of the Deputy Magistrate recording the confession as to its being voluntary. The genuineness and truth of the confession and the fact of its being voluntarily made are matters which are within the exclusive province of the Court of Session and of this Court and neither the Court of Session nor this Court can blindly accept the ready-made opinions of the recording Magistrate on these points without having before it materials from which it could arrive at an independent opinion on these crucial questions on which the fate of the accused hangs.

In the present case there is a complete absence of these questions and answers tending to show that the confessions were made voluntarily. The data therefore upon which this Court could have formed a sound and well-founded opinion as to the voluntary nature of the confessions of Prag and Mt. Bishna (with whom alone we are at present concerned) are entirely missing. The learned Additional Sessions Judge, in a legitimate attempt to help the prosecution, examined Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha before him. In his deposition, before the Court of Session Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha stated that he satisfied himself in each case that "the statements" (i. e., the confessions) were voluntary. We find that with the exception of Prag's confession there is no note of any kind at the commencement of the confessions of Mt. Bishna, Mt. Naraini or Ram Bali to show what steps this Deputy Magistrate took to satisfy himself that these confessions were voluntary. Further in his cross-examination, Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha admitted that he did not remember what questions he asked the accused prior to recording their statements, nor did he enter them on the proceedings connected with the recording of those statements. That being the case, it is not possible for this Court to form any opinion as to the voluntary nature of these confessions, and even the Deputy Magistrate who recorded those confessions was, according to his own deposition in the Court of Session, not in a position to say then that these confessions were voluntarily made.

Convictions and beliefs in respect of the voluntary nature of a confession that have been strained through the crucible of a record of confession properly and carefully prepared, with due prudential regard to the interests of the confessing accused, and after making him fully realise the dreadful and terrible consequences of making a confession which will send him straight to the gallows, differ immeasurably in solidity and weight from those airy beliefs to which Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha has given expression in the typed certificates which he has perfunctorily signed at the foot of each of these four confessions of Prag, Bishna, Naraini and Ram Bali as required by S. 164, Criminal P. C. We do not agree with the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich in considering that these grave and serious defects in the procedure of Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha which go to the root of the matter and which injuriously affect the accused in their defence on the merits can be cured by the provisions of S. 533, Criminal P. C. That section in our opinion is primarily intended to cure a defect of form only, and not one of substance. Thus, for instance, if perchance Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha had omitted to append at the foot of each of these confessions the certificate required by S. 164, Criminal P. C., but had, on the other hand, brought on the record an account of all the steps he took to satisfy himself that the confessions were voluntarily made and if he had questioned the confessing prisoners with a view to ascertaining the exact circumstances in which these confessions were made and the connexion of the police with them, and if he had endeavoured to record the confessions of each of the four accused brought before him in as much detail as possible with a view to affording material and internal evidence from which their genuineness could be judged and whether they were freely made or were the outcome of suggestion, and the questions and answers referred to above were fully recorded so as enable one to detect any misuse of his powers on the part of the Magistrate, then in that case we would have been ourselves the first to apply the provisions of S. 533, Criminal P. C., to cure that defect, for obviously it was one of form only and not of substance.

In the present case however the facts are very different. The Deputy Magistrate, Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha, when he was asked to record the confessions of the accused failed to realise that he was asked to create new evidence on behalf of the prosecution, to forge, in fact, the strongest link in the chain of evidence that was to send these accused to the gallows. In these circumstances it behoved him not only as a Magistrate discharging his legitimate judicial duties but even as a mere man clothed with ordinary decent human instincts and human sympathy to take a little human interest in these unfortunate fellowmen brought before him and to make them fully understand where they stood and before whom, to remove from their minds all fear of the police and all wordly hope of pardon or any other benefit, to bring to them the fact that there was no police round about them at the time they were brought before him to confess, and above all that there was no need for them to make any statement or confession of any kind and thereby to put the halter round their necks unless they desired to make their peace with God or were urged by some irresistible impulse to do so. The record of the confessions before us shows how utterly callous and indifferent B. Bhagwati Prasad Sinha was as to the fate of these accused. He did not look upon the recording of these confessions as work of the highest importance inasmuch as he was asked to create fresh evidence of supreme importance in a murder case. Such work called for the sound and discreet exercise alike of the powers of the intellect as of the heart. But the labour of recording these confessions did not strike B. Bhagwati Prasad Sinha in that light. He looked upon his work as Treasury Officer as his legitimate work and the recording of these confessions as a piece of forced labour (begar) to be finished somehow in the quickest manner possible. We regret to have to make these trenchant observations, but the proper recording of confessions which can be shown on the face of them, to be voluntary and apparently true is of the highest and supreme importance in criminal trials, especially in those of murder and dacoity and the consequences of B. Bhagwati Prasad Sinha's mistakes are tragic indeed, for, thanks to his blunders, the murder of Nanhu Singh must now go unpunished.

We next turn to consider the truth of these confessions of Prag and his wife. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has expressed "grave doubts as to the truth of the contents of the confession of Mt. Naraini."

He has believed the evidence of the defence witnesses Bhiku and Nanku and others who deposed that Mt. Naraini had gone to Gajodharpur to her mother-in-law's house on 13th January 1930, a day before Nanhu Singh came to Prag's house and was murdered on the night of 14th January 1930. We have carefully examined the evidence of Dhonrey Chamar. He deposed in the Court of Session, as well as before the police in the course of the thanadar's investigation (Ex. B), that the murdered man Nanhu Singh complained to him that Mt. Naraini, in spite of all the love and money that he had lavished on her, had proved a fickle and faithless woman and had deserted him that Khichri day by running away with Nanku Brahman to her mother-in-law's house at Gajodharpur. The evidence of the defence witnesses of Mt. Naraini, namely Bhiku (D. W. 1), Parbhu (D. W. 2), Raghubar (D. W. 3) and of Nanku Brahman (D. W. 4), fully corroborates the truth of the remarks of Nanhu Singh quoted by Dhonrey as to Mt. Naraini's absence from her father's home that fatal Khichri day. We have read and re-read the original deposition of Dhonrey in Urdu, and we are satisfied by the turn of the phrase used by Dhonrey that Nanhu Singh was referring not to any previous visit of Mt. Naraini to her mother-in-law's house but to the very last visit of hers made the day before Khichri day. There is also internal evidence to corroborate this fact in the statement of Dhonrey (Ex. B) in which Dhonrey nowhere mentions the presence of Mt. Naraini at her father's house on the day that Nanhu Singh arrived there on 14th January 1930. In his statement (Ex. B) Dhonrey does not state that Nanhu Singh gave the flour and ghee to Mt. Naraini to cook his evening meal. For the first time in the committing Magistrate's Court, Dhonrey introduces the story of Nanhu Singh giving flour and ghee to Mt. Naraini to cook puris for him. We have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that this portion of Dhonrey's evidence in Court is false. We have no doubt that Mt. Naraini was not at her father's home on the night of the murder, and that her confession as well as the confessions of her father and mother on this point are absolutely false. It is beyond our powers to explain why father, mother and daughter all three, chose to make a false confession on this point, but the fact remains that they did so, and that being our opinion, these confessions must be rejected on this ground also as being utterly worthless and unreliable.

Then again there is a clear contradiction between the confession of Prag and that of his wife as to who mixed the poison in the food which Nanhu Singh ate. According to the confession of Prag poison was mixed in the food by Mt. Naraini, whilst Mt. Bishna in her confession stated that it was she who mixed the powder in the food which Nanhu Singh ate. According to both these confessions Nanhu Singh fell down in a heap the moment he had eaten the poisoned food and died shortly afterwards. Now the medical evidence goes directly against this portion of the confession. The Civil Surgeon deposes, that death was due to asphyxia, probably by suffocation due to pressure on mouth, nose and chest. Even when the Chemical Examiner's report was received which showed that the viscera of Nanhu Singh contained some deleterious substances like dhatura, the Civil Surgeon stuck to his opinion that although the man may have been rendered powerless by the administration of poison, still his death was caused by suffocation. Not a word is said by either of the confessing accused that anybody throttled Nanhu Singh by pressing his mouth, and nose or chest. According to the medical evidence death was not due to the administration of poison and so the accused cannot, even on their own confessions be held guilty of an offence under S. 328, I. P. C. The confessions of both accused do not reveal the commission of any such acts as resulted in the murder of Nanhu Singh whose death in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon was caused by asphyxia. In plain English the accused Prag and Mt. Bishna do not admit that they suffocated Nanhu Singh after having administered some poisonous stuff to him. On this point, as to the cause of death of Nanhu Singh, we prefer to accept the testimony of the Civil Surgeon rather than the tainted confessions of Prag and Mt. Bishna. In arriving at this conclusion we have been also influenced by the further consideration that the living do not give up their secrets with the candour of the dead.

The results of our scrutiny of these confessions of Prag and Mt. Bishna have thus far shown that not only are these confessions not voluntary, but they are also false in two important and essential particulars, namely as to the presence of Mt. Naraini on the night of the murder and as to the manner in which Nanhu Singh was done to death. Envisaging the story told in these confessions of Prag and Mt. Bishna as a whole we find that there are many other latent defects besides the shortcomings pointed out above. If Nanhu Singh realized that the Kurmin, Mt. Naraini, had no love for him, would he venture to give her a poisonous powder to be administered to her own father? When and where was poison given by Nanhu Singh to Naraini? How long did Naraini keep it with her? When did she tell her father about it? Where did she keep it? Who really administered the powder to Thakur Nanhu Singh? Why was this powder administered in Prag's house where his whole family ran the risk of being charged with murder when it could have been secretly administered with much greater safety at Nanhu Singh's own house? These and many other similar and cognate questions arise out of the story told in these confessions, but no answer can be given to any of these queries, because the record of the confessions is incomplete, apart from any question as to the falsehood of these confessions.

We have given these confessions of Prag and Mt. Bishna our very best consideration, and we have come to the conclusion after much serious thought that these confessions are not only, not voluntarily made, but are also false and untrue, and we have therefore no hesitation in rejecting them as worthless and of no evidentiary value, and in fact not even admissible in evidence.

The principles that have guided us in arriving at the conclusion to which we have come, have received judicial recognition from all High Courts in India. In Emperor v. Panchkauri Dutt (1) it was laid down by the Calcutta High Court that to ensure the voluntariness of a confession the Magistrate must question the accused before the latter makes his confession, that the Magistrate must make a real endeavour to ascertain whether the prisoner was about to make a voluntary confession by questions directed to the eliciting of facts which would enable him to judge of the character of the confession, that it was not sufficient for the purpose merely to ask the accused whether his confession was voluntary or to put a few formal questions or some set formulæ which the prisoner could scarcely comprehend. It was further held in that case that the omission to warn the accused that he was before a Magistrate was material. It was also laid down in this ruling that if there was a doubt as to the admissibility of a confession, then the prosecution must satisfy the Court affirmatively that it was made voluntarily, otherwise the Court should reject it.

In Farid v. Emperor (2) it was held by a Bench of the Lahore High Court consisting of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Martineau, J., that as the Magistrate failed to question the confessing prisoner as to whether he was making his statement voluntarily, and as that omission prejudiced the accused in his defence, on the merits the confession was inadmissible in evidence, and the defect which was one of substance and not of form only could not be cured by S. 533, Criminal P. C. In Raj Bahadur Singh v. Emperor (3) a Bench of this Court, to which one of us was a party, laid down in some detail what particular steps a Magistrate should take so as to satisfy himself that the confession was voluntarily made before he started recording the confession of the accused.

The circumstances of each case vary, and the form of the question put by the Magistrate so as to satisfy himself that the prisoner is in fact making a voluntary confession may also in consequence vary, but fundamental principles must ever remain constant, and their application needs only the exercise of a little intelligence and a little sympathy and understanding on the part of the Magistrate of the needs and the limitations of the confessing prisoner.

The confessions in the present case, it may be noted, were retracted by Prag and Mt. Bishna in the Court of Session; but before the committing Magistrate both Prag and Mt. Bishna admitted the correctness of their confessions. In face of their absolute denial of the charge of murder before the committing Magistrate, these acknowledgments of the correctness of their confessions are meaningless and inconsistent with their plea of not guilty, and merely betray the low standard of intelligence of these Kurmi accused, besides revealing the fact that the confessions in question were not made voluntarily.

If the confessions are rejected as inadmissible in evidence and as false then the rest of the prosecution evidence merely consists in the recovery of the corpse of Nanhu Singh at the instance of Mt. Bishna and the story of the illicit connexion between Mt. Naraini and Nanhu Singh as furnishing the motive for the murder of Nanhu Singh by these appellants.

Even if the story as to the illicit connexion between Nanhu Singh and Mt. Naraini be accepted as correct, that will not help to advance the case for the prosecution on the actual charge of murder in the absence of any evidence, direct or circumstantial, connecting these appellants with the murder of Nanhu Singh. As to the evidence regarding the recovery of the corpse at the instance of Mt. Bishna, that only goes to prove that Mt. Bishna knew something about the disposal of the corpse, but it will not by itself be sufficient to justify the charge of murder of Nanhu Singh by Mt. Bishna. Even the presence of Nanhu Singh at the house of Prag, though it may raise grave suspicions against Prag as to his complicity in the murder, would not, in the absence of any other evidence, direct or circumstantial, connecting him or his wife with the murder of Nanhu Singh, justify this Court in finding either of them guilty of murder. For the reasons given above we are constrained to allow these appeals. We accordingly set aside the convictions and sentences passed upon the appellant Prag and Mt. Bishna, acquit them of the offence charged and order their immediate release.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 70 of 1930, Decided on 25th July 1930, from order of Spl. Sess. Judge, Bahraich, D/- 11th January 1930.

(a. Penal Code, S. 400—Nature of evidence necessary for conviction under S. 400.

The term "belong" in S. 400, implies something more than the idea of casual association; it involves the notion of continuity and indicates a more or less intimate connexion with a body of persons extending over a period of time sufficiently long to warrant the inference that the person affected has identified himself with a band, the common purpose of which is the habitual commission of dacoity: 13 O. C. 243, Ref. [P 1082 O 2]

It is not necessary for a conviction under S. 400, I. P. C., that the person convicted must have taken part in any one dacoity. Evidence showing the actual participation by an accused in any given dacoity is evidence both of his association with the gang and of his object in such association. Evidence which though not believed for the purpose of a conviction under S. 395, I. P. C., may yet be relied upon for the purpose of a conviction under S. 400, I. P. C. A conviction under S. 400, I. P. C., cannot be considered bad in law merely because the evidence on the record would also have justified

a conviction of a specific offence under S. 895, I. P. C. : 13 O. C. 235 and A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 321, Ref. [P 1032 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 133—It is not safe to convict on the sole testimony of accomplice unless corroborated in material particulars by direct or circumstantial evidence.

The evidence of accomplices is always admissible and is always relevant, but under a very old practice of the Courts in England some evidence is accepted only with great caution and after the closest scrutiny and is not usually accepted against any individual person unless it is corroborated. Although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justified. The practice in India is the same as the practice in England. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime, it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime: A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 369, Ref. [P 1033 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial — Identification of accused — Evidence of identification is admissible though its value is weakened subsequently.

The power to identify varies according to the power of observation and observation may be based upon small minutiae which a witness cannot describe himself or explain. It is impossible to lay down any useful principles as to the exact amount of identification which is required in any particular case. The Court will consider the value of the evidence of identification against each accused, and satisfy itself as to whether the man is or is not guilty: A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 430, Ref.

The evidence which goes to prove that a person has identified another person as having taken part in a particular offence either in jail identification proceedings or elsewhere is admissible though the value of such evidence is weakened perceptibly as a general rule by failure to identify subsequently in Court: A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 598, Ref. [P 1033 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 14 — Evidence of previous conviction, admissible aliunde, should not be excluded—It is admissible to prove habit and association for conviction under Penal Code, S. 400.

Where the evidence of previous conviction or the evidence that a man has been bound over under the preventive sections can be considered only as evidence of character it must be excluded, but where such evidence is admissible aliunde, it should not be excluded. Where the accused is charged under S. 400, I. P. C., such evidence is admissible, not as evidence of character but as evidence to prove habit and association. [P 1033 C 2]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 403—Acquittal on charge of dishonest possession of property stolen in dacoity is no bar to prove that the accused actually took part in the dacoity.

Where a man has been tried and acquitted on a charge of being in dishonest possession of property stolen in a dacoity knowing or having reason to believe that the property was stolen in a dacoity it is open to the Crown to prove that he actually took part in the dacoity, for the latter was not the offence of which he was acquitted. Even if he has been acquitted on a charge of dacoity it is open to the Crown to prove that the day before the dacoity he was seen in the neighbourhood of the dacoity: A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 430, Ref. [P 1033 C 2]

H. K. Ghosh—for the Crown.

Judgment.—These appeals (Nos. 70 to 90, 157 to 184 and 197 of 1930) arise out of a gang case known as the Bahraich gang case. This was the principal case (Sessions Trial No. 1 of 1929). Seventy persons were sent up for trial in this case. In the supplementary case (Sessions Trial No. 4 of 1929) only one person, namely, Gur Charan was tried. Gur (sic) Charan also appealed and his appeal is No. 91 of 1930. Thus 71 persons in all were placed on their trial on a charge under S. 400, I. P. C. Of these 71 persons, 16 were acquitted and the remaining 54 convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich. The charge against one man, namely Ramzan, was withdrawn. It appears that he was seriously ill and has since died. Of the 54 persons convicted by the learned Judge, 20 were sentenced to transportation for life and the remaining 34 to ten years' rigorous imprisonment each. 51 out of 54 persons convicted by the learned Judge have appealed to this Court. The remaining three persons, namely, Nanhu, Parbhu Din and Ram Prasad, who have been sentenced to transportation for life, have not appealed. It is to be noted that out of the 54 persons convicted, 51 were found guilty by all the four assessors who assisted the learned Judge in the decision of these cases. The only three persons who were not found guilty by the assessors were Ajudhia Prasad, Babadin Singh and Mohammad Zaman Khan alias Kanabadoh.

The appellants were not represented by any counsel in this Court at the hearing of these appeals; but we have examined the record carefully to see whether the evidence on record is sufficient to justify the conclusion that they were concerned in the crime. We should like to note also that the learned Government Advocate has laid before us the whole evidence, in a fair and proper manner. The charge against each appellant was that he belonged to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoities during the period between January 1924 and October 1927.

There are jungle tracts in the northern part of the Bahraich District which have since time immemorial given refuge to criminals of every description. This area is near the border of the Nepal State. The evidence on record shows that the dacoits had their rendezvous in this area, which was the scene of their operations. Bands of dacoits used to sally forth from these jungles for the purpose of committing dacoities. There are 28 dacoities which we have to take into consideration in disposing of these appeals. The detail is as follows:

1. Santalia Sarak Danda ...	January 1924.
2. Gajpatipurwa ...	1st Feb. 1924.
3. Raniser Badla ...	15th Feb. 1924.

26. Manohra Chak ...	25th Oct. 1927.
27. Chaugoin ...	26th Oct. 1927.
28. Ganeshpur ...	26/27th Oct. '27.

Balraj Singh, Mahadeo Singh, Hukum Singh and Turab were convicted in the Ganeshpur dacoity under S. 396, I. P. C., on 8th March 1928. They were sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court. The sentences were confirmed by this Court on 5th April 1928. It appears that these men were hanged some time in May 1928.

Two persons, namely, Banwari Bania and Danku Gararya were made approvers and examined as such in the principal case. Banwari speaks of eight dacoities in which he himself has taken part along with the members of his gang. These dacoities were committed at Santalla Sarak Danda, Sahdei, Sungai, Ramlalgaon, Haringa (Bhagwanpur), Manohra Chak, Chaugoin and Ganeshpur. Danku gives evidence about one dacoity only which was committed at Pairwa on 9th May 1927. All other dacoities out of the 28 dacoities mentioned above have been proved by other evidence. It appears that the Bahraich police had been on the look-out for the dacoits long before October 1927. They tried their best to capture the gang and armed police were posted on duty at various places in the district. The Superintendent of Police visited different places with mounted and armed police and the Nepal Government police also started similar operations on their side of the border. Sub-Inspector Umrao Singh received information on 15th May 1927 that dacoits had assembled at the house of Ram Bilas accused on the pretence of celebrating the Janco ceremony of the son of Ram Bilas. He gave the necessary information to the Superintendent of Police, Mr. Waddell, who with the Sub-Inspector and the Circle Inspector and armed and mounted police raided the house of Ram Bilas. Ram Bilas was found at the house of one Bansidhar in the same village. He was captured and a bag of ammunition was found at the head of his bed. Bansidhar made over a gun to the police admitting that it belonged to Ram Bilas. Bachan and Sattan accused were also arrested at the same time. Ram Bilas was convicted under the Arms Act and proceedings were taken against Bachan and Sattan under the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Banwari (approver) was arrested on 28th October 1927 in Abdullaganj forest with his companions Walidin, Beraï and Nanbu Lonia immediately after the night on which the Ganeshpur dacoity was committed. He made a confession before Mr. Mohammad Abbas Khan, Deputy Magistrate, on 30th October 1927 naming his associates and several of them were arrested by the police. The information which the police received from Banwari helped them in arresting Turab, Mahadeo Singh, Banney Chhutkao, Baolu, Hukum Singh and others. Then many other persons of the gang were arrested. Danku (approver) was arrested in August 1927 and he also gave useful information to the police about the gang. It was decided after the arrest of Banwari, Danku and others that the arrested persons should be tried together in a gang case and the charge of the case was made over to the Special Dacoity Police. Rai Sahib Nand Kishore Inspector was placed in charge of the case and Umrao Singh, Sub-Inspector was appointed to help him. It appears that Danku had committed several dacoities before he had committed the dacoity at Pairwa in May 1927. He had however committed only one dacoity out of the 28 dacoities mentioned above. He and his small gang had joined Banwari's gang in the beginning of May 1927 and the Pairwa dacoity was then committed on 9th May 1927. Hukum Singh, Balraj Singh, Turab, Nazar Muhammad Khan, Banwari, Danku and Ram Bilas were said to be the leaders of the gang. It appears that Nazar Muhammad Khan was a resident of Nanpara and had removed to Nepal and was sent to jail there. He however succeeded in escaping from the jail and is now one of the accused in this case. Turab while lying under sentence of death in the Fyzabad jail made a full and detailed confession before Mr. Ramakant, Deputy Magistrate, on 10th and 11th April 1928. This confessional statement was produced before the learned Judge, but he rejected it on the ground that Turab was hanged before his statement could be taken in Court and that the statement in question could not be used against any of the accused in the present case. The learned Government Advocate has asked us to admit the document in evidence under S. 32, Cl. (3), Evidence Act. It need not be decided in this case whether or not the confessional statement in question is admissible in evidence as we are satisfied that the rest of the evidence on the record sufficiently establishes the guilt of the appellants before us.

We have carefully considered the whole evidence produced in this case. The prosecution have produced evidence to prove the dacoities mentioned above.

They have also produced evidence of identification and evidence of specific and general association and also evidence of recovery of arms and ammunitions and some of the stolen property. Some evidence has also been produced to prove previous convictions of some of the accused. Evidence of this description is generally produced in gang cases.

Before discussing the case of each individual appellant, we think it proper to refer to some principles of law, which should be borne in mind in considering the evidence produced in gang cases under S. 400, I. P. C.

Section 400, I. P. C., is in the following terms:

"Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall belong to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine."

The term "belong" in S. 400, I. P. C., implies something more than the idea of casual association; it involves the notion of continuity and indicates a more or less intimate connexion with a body of persons extending over a period of time sufficiently long to warrant the inference that the person affected has identified himself with a band, the common purpose of which is the habitual commission of dacoity: see Hira Lal v. Emperor (1).

It is not necessary for a conviction under S. 400, I. P. C., that the person convicted must have taken part in any one dacoity. Evidence showing the actual participation by an accused in any given dacoity, is evidence both of his association with the gang and of his object in such association. Evidence which though not believed for the purpose of a conviction under S. 395, I. P. C., may yet be relied upon for the purpose of a conviction under S. 400, I. P. C. A conviction under S. 400, I. P. C., cannot be considered bad in law merely because the evidence on the record would also have justified a conviction of a specific offence under S. 395, I. P. C.: see Gaya Din v. Emperor (2) and Lala v. Emperor (3).

The evidence of accomplices is always admissible and is always relevant, but under a very old practice of the Courts in England such evidence is accepted only with great caution and after the closest scrutiny, and is not usually accepted against any individual person unless it is corroborated. Although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justified. The practice in India is the same as the practice in England. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime: see Ram Prasad v. Emperor (4).

The power to identify varies according to the power of observation and observation may be based upon small minutae which a witness cannot describe himself or explain. It is impossible to lay down any useful principles as to the exact amount of identification which is required in any particular case. The Court will consider the value of the evidence of identification against each accused, and satisfy itself as to whether the man is or is not guilty: see Khilawan v. Emperor (5).

The evidence which goes to prove that a person has identified another person as having taken part in a particular offence either in jail identification proceedings or elsewhere is admissible though the value of such evidence is weakened perceptibly as a general rule by failure to identify subsequently in Court: see Parbhu v. Emperor (6).

In criminal proceedings, evidence that an accused person has a bad character is inadmissible unless evidence has been given that he has a good character, in which case it becomes admissible. But S. 54, Evidence Act, does not apply to cases in which the bad character of any person is itself a fact in issue. If the evidence of bad character is introduced in order to establish a relevant fact, which cannot be proved aliunde, the evidence of bad character is admissible. One illustration is, where evidence is given in a case of murder to prove that the accused had committed a theft, such evidence would ordinarily be excluded as evidence of character. But in a particular case its introduction would be justified to prove a motive for the accused having murdered a person who had brought a charge of theft against him. Where the evidence of previous conviction or the evidence that a man has been bound over under the preventive sections can be considered only as evidence of character it must be excluded, but where such evidence is admissible aliunde it should not be excluded. Here the provisions of S. 14, Act. 1, 1872 have application. Such evidence is admissible, not as evidence of character but as evidence to prove habit and association. Once a man has been acquitted on a charge of that nature it is not open in a subsequent criminal prosecution to prove that he actually committed that offence. The case is of course different where the prosecution is endeavouring to establish an offence with which he was not charged in that case. For example, where a man has been tried and acquitted on a charge of being in dishonest possession of property stolen in a dacoity knowing or having reason to believe that the property was stolen in a dacoity it is open to the Crown to prove that he actually took part in the dacoity for the latter was not the offence of which he was acquitted. Even if he has been acquitted on a charge of dacoity it is open to the Crown to prove that the day before the dacoity he was seen in the neighbourhood of the dacoity: see Khilawan v. Emperor (5) at pp. 768 and 769 (of 5 O. W. N.).

After having been through the voluminous record we are not prepared to disagree with the finding of the learned Judge that there was really a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoities and that the evidence given by the approvers is sufficiently corroborated, by other reliable evidence on the record. The approvers' evidence is not the only evidence in this case. They have given evidence of about nine dacoities only and other dacoities are proved by other reliable evidence. "It is satisfactorily established that the appellants before us really belonged to a gang of dacoits. The learned Judge has tried the case with great care and intelligence. He has tested the evidence carefully, and if any criticism can be directed against his treatment of the evidence, that criticism can only be that he has tested the evidence too strictly. This fact makes his findings all the more strong.

We now proceed to discuss the case of each appellant individually. It will be convenient to take up the appeal of each appellant in the order in which the individual cases were taken up by the learned Sessions Judge. (Their Lordships after considering the conviction of each accused held that it was proper in all the cases and proceeded.) The result is that all the 51 appeals fail and must be dismissed. The appellants belong to a dangerous gang of dacoits. Having regard to their criminal activities we think the sentences are not excessive.

We have to express our appreciation of the good work done by Mr. Mohammad Akbar Khan in conducting the prosecution in these cases. We also entirely agree in the remarks made by the learned Additional Sessions Judge as to the admirable work done by Rai Sahib Pt. Nand Kishore Tiwari in these cases.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Kheri convicting the appellant Gendan Lal of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentencing him to transportation for life.

The case for the prosecution is as follows:

On the morning of 28th March 1930 the deceased Ghurai with his brothers Chotai (P. W. 5) and Kedar (P. W. 6) went to cut the standing crops in the wheat fields of Ram Dayal. Some two gharis before sunset the three brothers returned to their home in Barwar. When they reached the field of Debi Din in Fakhrapur nine men who lay in ambush rushed out of an arhar field with lathis in their hands. These nine men were Debi Din, Sundar, Bisheshwar, Ram Bilas, Salik, Gangaram, Ramzani, Mahadeo and lastly Gendan Lal, the appellant before us. Bisheshwar ordered Ghurai to stop. Ghurai refused to do so and tried to run away, but Bisheshwar quickly struck him a lathi blow on the head with the result that Ghurai fell down on the ground. Debi Din then called out to his men to kill Ghurai as he lay senseless on the ground and thereupon all the nine men jointly began to beat Ghurai's prostrate body with their lathis. Hearing the order of Debi Din, and seeing their brother Ghurai fall down and being belaboured by lathi blows by all these nine men, Chotai (P. W. 5) and Kedar (P. W. 6) raised an alarm and ran towards their home in Barwar. When they reached the abadi or populated site of the village, they met Har Dayal and they told him that their brother Ghurai was killed by these nine men whose names they also took. They also told Bhola, Piare Lal, Ramdin and Din Dayal the same story, and then, accompanied by Din

Dayal and about fifteen or twenty other men, the two brothers, Chotai and Kedar, went back to the spot where Ghurai had been attacked. Ghurai was found lying dead in the field of Debi Din. Chowkidar Gendai, with two or three other men, was left to watch the dead body and Chotai and Kedar and others returned to Dir Dayal's house. Din Dayal wrote out the report to the dictation of Chotai and Kedar and the two latter signed it (Ex. 3). Maiku chowkidar took this written report (Ex. 3) to the thana; Chotai and Kedar refused to go with the chowkidar to the police station as they feared that their enemies might kill them on the way. The thana munshi came to the village the next day and after preparing a panchayatnama or inquest report sent the corpse of Ghurai to Gola for post-mortem examination. The thanadar came the same day in the afternoon and after completing his investigation prosecuted eight men, viz. Debi Din, Ram Bilas, Sundar Lal, Salik Ram, Bisheshwar Dayal, Ramzani, Mahadeo and Gendai on a charge under S. 302, I. P. C. Gangaram could not be arrested and he was shown as absconding.

The motive for the murder of Ghurai was alleged to be the longstanding enmity between Ghurai on the one hand and Debi Din and Bisheshwar on the other. About a year ago Ghurai married Mt. Ram Kali, daughter of Din Dayal. Debi Din and Bisheshwar wanted that Mt. Ram Kali should be married to Gangaram, the same accused person who is at present absconding. Gangaram is the brother-in-law of Bisheshwar accused. Din Dayal refused to marry his daughter to Gangaram whose Brahmin subcaste was according to him inferior to his own. When Ghurai's marriage to Ram Kali was settled Bisheshwar and Debi Din threatened Ghurai and told him they would be even with him one day. Ghurai made a report under S. 506, I. P. C., at the thana in Asarh last. Ghurai was in the service of Debi Din. After his marriage with Ram Kali, Ghurai was again threatened by Bisheshwar, Debi Din and Gangaram who told him that they would yet be the death of him. Ghurai then left his brothers and began to live with his wife in Raja Ram's house. It so happened that Raja Ram was also once beaten at night, and his house was set on fire on another occasion. This is the alleged motive for the murder of Ghurai. It is significant to note that no personal enmity between Ghurai and appellant is alleged, nor is the appellant Gendai said to have any motive for joining in the murder of Ghurai.

Of the eight men prosecuted by the police, the learned Additional Sessions Judge has acquitted seven holding that they were falsely implicated in this case. He convicted Gendai alone on a charge under S. 302, I. P. C. and sentenced him to transportation for life. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has given very good reasons for acquitting Debi Din and the six others prosecuted along with Gendai; and it has been strenuously argued on behalf of Gendai, appellant, by his learned counsel, Mr. St. George Jackson, that the same reasons which led the learned trial Judge to acquit these men apply with equal force to the case of his client also.

The excellent reasons given by the learned Additional Sessions Judge for holding that Debi Din, Bisheshwar and others were not concerned in the murder of Ghurai command the assent of our intellect. It has been held, and rightly held, that Bisheshwar did not begin the attack on Ghurai by striking the first blow and that Debi Din did not tell his men to beat Ghurai all in a body as the latter lay on the ground. The medical evidence clearly shows the falsity of this portion of the prosecution story, for the medical officer in charge of the dispensary deposes that there were five contused wounds all on the head of the deceased and there was only one other injury, viz. a bruise, on the left knee. Except for these injuries the rest of the body of Ghurai bore no marks of hurt. Had eight or nine men, as alleged by Chotai and Kedar, struck Ghurai repeatedly as he lay flat on the ground, there would have been innumerable injuries on the side, ribs, thighs, buttocks and legs of the deceased besides the injuries on the head. The absence of all injuries on the lower part of the body except the bruise on the knee goes to show that the story that all eight or nine men struck Ghurai as he lay on the ground with lathi blows is not true. Gendai, according to the evidence of the two eyewitnesses to the murder, viz. Chotai (P. W. 5) and Kedar (P. W. 6) only took part in the murder of Ghurai when the latter was struck down by Bisheshwar and when Debi Din ordered all his associates to beat the fallen man. The medical evidence gives the lie direct to this portion of the prosecution story, and the account as to the commencement of the attack on Ghurai by Bisheshwar has been discredited and disbelieved by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Kheri. The only other evidence which goes to implicate the appellant Gendai, is that of Murlidhar, P. W. 12. His evidence is to the effect that three hours before sunset he saw Gangaram and Gendai in Chak Muhammadpur Khairulla and that the field where Ghurai was killed is about two hundred yards from the place where he saw Gangaram and Gendai. This evidence, even if believed to be absolutely true, does not bring home to the appellant his guilt. From the mere fact that a cultivator was seen in a certain field or chak in his village at about three hours before sunset some time before the commission of the murder, no inference can be drawn against him that he must have committed or taken some part in the murder that followed later on. The evidence of Murlidhar, P. W. 12, is therefore quite inconclusive and no inference inimical to the appellant can legitimately be drawn from his testimony.

It has been argued on behalf of the prosecution that the principle, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus" cannot be applied to criminal trials in India and that the fact that Debi Din and six others have been acquitted by the learned trial Judge is no reason for acquitting the appellant Gendai. That is true, but before Gendai can be convicted of the murder of Ghurai it must be shown by the prosecution that over and above the evidence which was rejected by the learned Additional Sessions Judge as against Debi Din and six others, there is other reliable and untainted evidence which goes to prove clearly and beyond any reasonable doubt the guilt of the appellant Gendai. No such evidence is, however, forthcoming. The evidence of Murlidhar, P. W. 12, as shown above, is quite inconclusive. P. W. 13 Nawazi does not mention the appellant as having been seen by him near the spot prior to the commission of the offence. There remains then the evidence of Chotai (P. W. 5) and Kedar (P. W. 6) against the appellant. Except for mentioning the fact that Gendai was one of the assailants who under the orders of Debi Din joined in beating Ghurai to death these witnesses say nothing more against Gendai. Gendai is a mere servant of Debi Din. He had no personal motive in killing Ghurai or joining others in murdering him. His master and Bisheshwar Dayal, who are alleged to have deeply resented the marriage of Ghurai with Mt. Ram Kali, have been found not guilty of the charge of murdering Ghurai upon the evidence of these two very witnesses Chotai and Kedar. It is therefore next to impossible to convict Gendai, the servant of Debi Din upon this very same tainted evidence of Chotai and Kedar in the absence of any other evidence tending to incriminate him. Unless the case of the appellant can be differentiated from that of the other accused who have been found guiltless of the charge of murder, and unless it can be made manifest by cogent and convincing reasoning that though these witnesses Chotai and Kedar were giving false evidence against Debi Din and six others, they were nevertheless giving true evidence against the appellant, the appellant's conviction based solely upon the tainted testimony of Chotai (P. W. 5) and Kedar (P. W. 6) cannot be legally sustained. The learned Assistant Government Advocate has not been able to point to any other evidence on the record to corroborate the evidence of Chotai and Kedar except the evidence of Murlidhar, P. W. 12. Murlidhar's evidence, as has been pointed out above, is inconclusive and does not serve to prove the guilt of the appellant. From a perusal of the evidence of Chotai and Kedar, the case of the Crown against the appellant Gendai cannot be differentiated from the case against Debi Din and others, are adequate and convincing. It would be a work of supererogation to recapitulate those reasons in this judgment. Those reasons apply with equal force to the case of the appellant Gendai as they do to that of his master Debi Din, and others. The motive for the murder in the case of the appellant is far weaker (if not completely absent) than in the case of Debi Din and Bisheshwar Dayal. Chotai and Kedar are partisan witnesses. There is no independent eye-witness of the occurrence to corroborate and give strength to their partisan and tainted testimony. It is a matter for deep regret that the brothers of the murdered man, thanks to their own folly and wickedness in trying to implicate innocent men in this serious crime, have by their own conduct enabled the guilty to escape with the innocent. Apart, however, from these moral reflections, this Court is primarily concerned with the question as to whether the guilt of the appellant Gendai is proved beyond any reasonable doubt upon the evidence on the record. No good reasons have been given by the learned Additional Sessions Judge as to why, after rejecting the evidence of Chotai and Kedar as against Debi Din and six others, he thought it proper to act upon it as against Gendai, the appellant. The finding of the learned Additional Sessions Judge against Gendai is summed up as follows :

"Gendai is admittedly in the service of Debi Din. He therefore must have some sympathy for the failure of Gangaram in not getting his desired wife. Both these men were seen by the above witnesses (this is not correct as a matter of fact) hovering round the field of Debi Din on the day and about the time when Ghurai was killed. It is therefore probable that Ghurai was attacked with lathis by Gendai and the abettor Gangaram in the presence of P. W. 5 and P. W. 6 (i. e., Chotai and Kedar.)"

It is impossible to accept this finding of the learned trial Judge. As Gangaram was not on his trial before the learned Judge, the latter should not have expressed directly or indirectly any opinion as to his guilt. In the second place, the finding against Gendai is only based upon a probability that he along with another man attacked Ghurai with lathis and killed him. Probabilities and suspicions are not sufficient grounds in law upon which to found a conviction of an accused in a criminal trial especially in a murder trial where the maximum punishment is death. The reason given by the learned trial Judge for not passing sentence of death upon Gendai is wholly inadequate. The fact that the prosecution witnesses have told lies and have falsely implicated innocent men is good reason for rejecting their testimony, but no reason for not passing sentence of death upon the person who was found guilty of the brutal murder of Ghurai. The shortcomings of the prosecution witnesses furnish no legitimate grounds for palliation of the brutal conduct of the appellant, if he were really held guilty of the horrible murder of Ghurai who was done to death by lathi blows on his head.

The appellant, however, is entitled to the benefit of the very serious doubts which the learned Additional Sessions Judge had as regards the guilt of his co-accused. The case of Gendai cannot be separated from that of the other accused tried along with him, and, for the excellent reasons set forth at great length in the judgment of the learned trial Judge, the appellant Gendai is also entitled to an acquittal. When the prosecution witnesses are found to be untruthful as to the greater part of their evidence, it would be dangerous to convict the accused on the residue without corroboration: see Hari Krishna v. Emperor (1).

For the reasons given above, this appeal is allowed and the conviction and sentence passed upon the appellant Gendai are set aside. He is acquitted of the offence charged and ordered to be released immediately.

Criminal Revn. No. 1429 of 1929, Decided on 20th January 1930, against order of Dy. Mag., Mymensingh, D/- 31st August 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S 162 — Magistrate can make use of general diary to corroborate case of complainant.

There is nothing improper in a Magistrate making use of the general diary for the purpose of corroborating the case of the complainant and showing that the complainant made the same remarks at the time of recording the diary as he did in the Court. . . [P 1038-C 1]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 106—"Offence involving breach of peace"—Meaning explained.

The expression "offences involving a breach of the peace" means offences in which a breach of the peace is an ingredient and not offences provoking or likely to lead to a breach of the peace: 43 Bom. 554; 33 All. 771 and 30 Cal. 366, Ref. [P 1088 C 2]

B. C. Chatterjee and Birendra Kumar De—for Petitioner.

G. Gupta and Bireswar Chatterjee—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner in this case has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 under S. 504, I.P.C., and further to give security for his good behaviour under S. 106, Criminal P. C. The case against him was briefly that he filthily abused the complainant in such a way that the complainant was likely to lose control of himself and to commit a breach of the peace.

The Rule has been granted on grounds Nos. 3, 4 and 5 of the petition to this Court. The first ground urged by Mr. Chatterji is that the general diary entry, Ex. I, is not admissible for the purpose of proving the falsity of the defence case and it cannot legally be used in evidence to disprove the defence and the learned Magistrate was wrong in using the said entry, Ex. I, against the petitioner. As a matter of fact the learned Magistrate has used the general diary entry, Ex. I, for the purpose of corroborating the case of the complainant and showing that the complainant made the same remark then as he does now in Court and that there is no difference in his cases. There is nothing improper in the use that the learned Magistrate has made of the entry.

The next ground taken is that the Magistrate's finding with regard to the motive of the petitioner is wholly erroneous and the learned Magistrate acted under a misapprehension in proceeding upon the basis that the petitioner had filed his application for removal of Sashi Babu from the common managership before 1st November 1928. It does appear that as a matter of fact this application was not filed before 1st November 1929. Even however if the Magistrate was wrong on this question of motive, there still remains the positive evidence of witnesses that abusive language was used; the question of probability or improbability of the petitioner's losing temper at the sight of the complainant is not really so material when we have positive evidence that he had actually used the abusive language.

The last ground taken by Mr. Chatterji has more substance in it, namely that the order under S. 106, Criminal P. C., passed in the present case is bad in law. Mr. Chatterji argues that a breach of the peace is not a necessary ingredient of an offence under S. 504, I.P.C. The only portion of S. 106, Criminal P. C., under which the present offence could come is "other offence involving a breach of the peace," and S. 504, I.P.C., does not necessarily involve a breach of the peace. I think this contention is correct. There is no doubt that the decision in the case of Emperor v. Syed Yacoob (1) supports the case of the opposite party as also the decision in the case of Emperor v. Manik Rai (2). These words "offence involving a breach of the peace" were considered and construed in the case of Arun Samanta v. Emperor (3) where it was held that the expression "offences involving a breach of the peace" means offences in which a breach of the peace is an ingredient and not offences provoking or likely to lead to a breach of the peace. No doubt the learned Judges in that decision were considering the meaning of the words "offences involving a breach of the peace" as used in S. 110, Criminal P. C., Cl. (e). But I see no reason why any different meaning should be placed on identically the same words in S. 106, Criminal P. C., to what has been placed upon them in S. 110, Cl. (e), Criminal P. C. The order therefore binding over the petitioner is apparently bad in law and must be set aside. It is accordingly set aside and with this modification the Rule is discharged.

I. R. 1925 P. C. 1, Foll.* [P 1092 C 2]

S. M. Gupta—for Appellants.

G. M. Agarwala—for the Crown.

Rowland, J.—There are seven appellants the first five of whom have been sentenced to death under S. 302 read with S. 34. One Ananda Sahu has been sentenced to transportation for life under S. 302 read with S. 34, and one Jogi Sahu has been sentenced to transportation for life under S. 120-B, I. P. C. The first six appellants have also been convicted under S. 201 read with S. 311, no separate sentence being imposed.

The case comes before us on reference by the Sessions Judge under S. 374, Criminal P. C., as well as on appeal by the convicts.

The prosecution examined 245 witnesses to prove that in pursuance of a conspiracy to which the appellants and others not before us were parties, Banamali Pati was on 23rd May 1928, at about 11 a. m., murdered in the village street of Balanga by the first six appellants who thereafter dragged his body to the kacherry, loaded it on a cart and carried it to the burning ghat where they began to burn it but were driven away and the half-burnt remains of the body rescued by villagers of Shambhu Bharathi, Patna. The defence was a denial of the facts alleged. No defence evidence was offered. The case may be divided into two parts. First, the incidents of the 23rd May and secondly, the motive and conspiracy.

Now the general outlines of the story of the occurrence of the 23rd May are established by such abundant and overwhelming evidence that the learned advocate for the appellants has not been able to challenge its correctness. The day was a market day at Balanga and the several stages of the occurrence are deposed to by seven witnesses who have spoken to the actual commencement of the assault on Banamali, 29 witnesses, who without claiming to have seen the first blow struck, witnessed the assault while it was still continuing, and a still larger number of witnesses who saw the removal of the body and the attempt to burn it at the ghat. It will, therefore, be sufficient to say with reference to the story in its outlines that the evidence in support of it is entirely unshaken. We have, however, been asked to hold that as regards the details of the actual killing the witnesses are discrepant and cannot be relied on as having observed correctly the parts played by individual accused. It is argued that the eyewitnesses of the first class who claim to have seen the first blow struck have given accounts which do not fit together and we are asked to infer that some if not all of these have confused what they saw with what they have heard from others and are not really to be regarded as eyewitnesses.

The first attack is made on the evidence of P. W. 1 Bhikari Sahu, who laid the first information in the case, Ex. 1. The witness is a gomashtha in village Balanga of the zamindar Babu Ashutosh Chandra Mitra under Banamali Pati who was the zamindar's naib. His information was laid at the police station, Nimapara, nine miles east of Balanga, at 6 p. m. on the afternoon of 23rd May 1928, the murder having been committed between 11 a. m. and noon. In his first information he states that Banamali Pati was going from the kacherry to his house to take his food, the witness accompanying him. When they arrived before the house of Bhikari Pati, this accused came out of his house to the village road and asked Banamali to settle his paddy dispute. While the conversation was going on Bhikari was joined by Gobind Misra, brother of Bhikari Pati, Anand Pati, brother of Bhikari Pati and after them by Sama Khatua, Uchhab Sahu, Panchu Sahu and Nidhi Misra. All of a sudden Bhikari Pati brought out a curved knife and stabbed Banamali in the neck, Banamali fell down and Bhikari stabbed him on the belly with a three-forked spear; the other accused stood by. Someone suggested to beat the witness and he fled.

The beginning of the occurrence is differently described in the prosecution evidence at the trial where the case is that Banamali, as he went along the village street followed by Maga Barik, Bhikari Pati and Maguni Jena as well as Bhikari Sahu, was accosted by Anand Pati and Gobind Misra who complained that he had got their house thatched by Bowris (an untouchable caste; Anand and Gobind are Brahmins). Gobind and Anand caught the hands of Banamali and were then joined by Bhikari Pati, Shama Khatua, Panchu Sahu, Nidhi Misra, Uchhab Sahu and Ananda Sahu. The first blow was struck by Sama with a tara or lathi on the back of the neck of Banamali who fell down and was then stabbed in the stomach by Bhikari. Some witnesses have said that Panchu Sahu also stabbed Banamali in the neck. The explanation given by Bhikari Sahu for the discrepancy between his first information and his evidence in Court is that at the time of laying the first information he was both agitated and exhausted as he had had no food since early morning and, therefore, he made a confused statement. After laying this information he went away and had a bath and food. He then returned to the police station and asked to have his information read over to him. This being done he said that it was not correct in some particulars and made a second statement which was also recorded in first information form and is Ex. A. In this statement he mentions that Banamali leaving the kacherry was accompanied by Bhikari Satpathy as well as the witness; he does not mention Maguni Jena or Maga Barik; he mentions Gobind Misra and Anand Pati as the first persons who met and accosted the naib and refers to the thatching of the house by Bowris as the subject of the conversation. As regards the remainder of the assailants' party he said that they came from the Khamar house of Gangadhar Pati, whereas in the first information they are apparently described as coming from the house of Bhikari Pati. His evidence in Court regarding the actual murder agrees generally with Ex. A but he says that he did not notice where Sama, Uchhab and Panchu came from and he is not sure whether Nidhi came out of his own house. The discrepancies between the successive statements made by Bhikari Sahu would be prima facie a good foundation for an argument that Bhikari was not a real eyewitness, but was telling a hearsay story and filling in details from his imagination; but that the evidence of other eyewitnesses has so abundantly proved the presence of Bhikari Sahu in the street at the time of the murder that I can feel no doubt that he is a genuine witness. It is however quite probable that he did not see or was unable to observe clearly the first onset and ought to be regarded as a witness falling in the second class of eyewitnesses, who did not see the first blow but saw the progress of the assault as it continued.

Another witness with regard to whom a somewhat similar conclusion can be arrived at is P. W. 5 Maguni Jena. This witness was following Banamali from the kacherry towards Banamali's house as he had some grievance to tell Banamali. Banamali said he would attend to the matter later and the witness turned his back and began to go towards the hat which is in the opposite direction. He had gone about 25 cubits when Banamali was attacked. In chief he described the assault as if he had seen it all, but in cross-examination it appears that he turned round on hearing a noise. By this time the whole party of the assailants had surrounded Banamali; the witness went nearer but was chased away by Sama. This witness perhaps should be classed like Bhikari Sahu with the witnesses who did not see the first onset, but witnessed the occurrence in its later course. Regarding Bhikari Satpathy (P. W. 4) I can see no reason to doubt that he witnessed the occurrence from its very commencement. Maga Barik (P. W. 6) is a boy of, about 15 years of age who was working as personal servant to Banamali, and was following him from the kacherry to his house; he was carrying mangoes, a betel box and some cups when the assault began; he fled to the kacherry. I have no doubt that this witness is actually an eyewitness of the commencement of the assault and the first blow; he did not stay to witness its completion. The next witness who claims to have seen the first blow struck is Daitari Das (P. W. 8). He was rubbing his body with oil near the house of Mani Sahu. That house, as the map shows, is very close to the place of occurrence. Mani Sahu (P. W. 9) confirms the presence of Daitari Das outside the house; Mani himself was inside and came out and saw the later stages of the occurrence. Daitari Das confirms the description of the occurrence given by other witnesses. Raja Barik (P. W. 23) is not a resident of the immediate neighbourhood though he lives in the village. He says that he happened to be passing on the way from Hatsahi to his house. He is mentioned in the second statement of Bhikari Sahu (Ex. A) as one of the persons who had seen the occurrence, and I see no reason to doubt that he is a genuine witness. His account of the occurrence agrees with the prosecution case and he confirms the presence of Maguni Jena, Bhikari Sahu, Maga Barik and Bhikari Satpathy. He went towards the place of occurrence but was driven away by Sama.

There is one other witness Nidhi Misra. He is alleged to have been one of the conspirators and one of the party of murderers. He was made an approver and before the committing Magistrate supported the prosecution case. At the trial, however, he said that he did not see the murder and that he was on good terms with Banamali. He said that he had been drugged by Inspector Narsing and Inspector Khetra Mohan and tutored to make a false statement in the committing Magistrate's Court. Babu Khetra Mohan Das, Inspector, is P. W. 239. He denies that Nidhi Misra was drugged or tutored. Narsing Charan Das, Inspector, is P. W.

245 and he makes a similar denial and states that he did not see Nidhi Misra at any time in the jail or met him anywhere except in the Court or lock-up of the town thana. Nidhi had alleged that the intoxicant was administered to him in jail. The Assistant Jailor, Kripasindhu Panda (P. W. 147) has been examined and deposes that in the jail Nidhi had no interviews except with his wife and son and had no intoxicant. I have no doubt that Nidhi's statement at the trial is entirely false and has been invented by him to explain away his previous evidence.

The principles which will be followed by a Court of Session in deciding what use to make of evidence given in the committing Magistrate's Court and tendered under S. 288 at the trial when the witness has resiled from the previous statement have been fully discussed in the case of Emperor v. Jehal Teli (1). It is there laid down that the deposition given before the committing Magistrate is evidence to the same extent as it would have been evidence if it had been given before the trial Court. It is pointed out that such evidence cannot be effectively utilized unless it is shown by other evidence that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for the evidence given at the trial. That is the view which prevails in the Patna High Court and all Courts subordinate to it. This Court has considered recently the case of a confessing accused who had retracted at the trial the confession previously made by him in Sheonarain Singh v Emperor (2) where it has been held that the law is not correctly stated by saying that a retracted confession carried no weight except against the maker and was not to be used against any one of the other co-accused. The correct position is that where a confession has been retracted the tribunal will consider whether it is corroborated in material particulars and whether the statement as a whole is a truthful statement and may in either of these cases give full weight to it. It has also been held in Ratan Dhanuk v.

Emperor (3) that the evidence of an approver is to be treated as on the same footing with that of any other witness if the initial suspicion attaching to an accomplice's evidence is removed and the trial Court considers the evidence to be truthful evidence. Applying these principles it is clear that there is no reason for not regarding the deposition of Nidhi in the committing Magistrate's Court as evidence along with the evidence of other witnesses both as to the murder itself and as to the conspiracy.

The Sessions Judge was of opinion that Nidhi's evidence before the committing Magistrate was substantially truthful evidence and the record contains ample corroboration of almost all the facts deposed to by Nidhi. His account of the murder itself agrees with that of the other witnesses in that Gobind Misra and Anand Pati accosted and detained Banamali on the road, while Bhikari, Sama Khatua, Ananda Sahu, Uchhab Sahu, Panchu and the witness came out. He adds another name Madhua Toka which is not given by the rest of the eyewitnesses. The first assault is described by other witnesses as given by Sama Khatua, whereas Nidhi says that Sama, Anand, Uchhab and Madhua all attacked Banamali with lathis. The witness says that Bhikari stabbed Banamali two or three times after he fell and that Gobind Misra and the witness kept people at bay on one side, while Panchu Sahu, Bhikari Pati, Uchhab and Anand Pati did the same on the other. There is one statement in Nidhi's evidence of which no direct corroboration is forthcoming but which is of importance. He says that at 9 a. m. or so Bhikari Pati had asked him to be ready for Banamali Pati at his front door, and there is one more statement of importance that Jogi Sahu had promised to send men to the cremation ground to help in setting fire to the body. This statement also is not corroborated though Baja Barik (P. W. 23) has said that on the day of occurrence before the murder he had seen Jogi talking with Sama. The above and other evidence as to the occurrence itself establishes the charge of murder against Gobind who with Anand Pati detained Banamali, against Sama who made the first assault and against Bhikari who completed the slaughter of the victim.

Accused 4 to 6, it has been argued came later, and the part taken by them may not have been more than keeping off intruders after the murder was completed, so that they should be regarded as accessories after the act. It is true that some witnesses are not clear as to the exact stage at which the three Sahu accused came on the scene, but there are a good many others who are quite definite that these men were there and were actually driving off spectators while Bhikari was still continuing to stab Banamali. The weight of evidence certainly is that all these accused came on to the road armed before the murder was completed. If the murder was a pre-arranged matter and these accused had parts assigned to them from beforehand such as keeping away intruders, it is of no avail to them to say that they struck no blow on the deceased. The Sessions Judge quite rightly relies on and follows the Privy Council decision in the case of Barendra Kumar Ghosh v. Emperor (4).

The whole of the circumstances of the murder itself indicate that it was pre-arranged, and even if Sahu accused had arrived at a late stage their presence, armed and so conveniently near the scene could hardly be regarded as accidental. The Sahu accused are not near neighbours. The house of Ananda Sahu is at plot 148 of the map (Ex. 27) and is 330 feet east of the place of occurrence, that of Uchhab Sahu is plot 211 of the map and is 1,015 feet east, and that of Panchu Sahu is plot 217 of the map and is 1,260 feet east. They must have come beforehand prepared for the part they had to play. Nothing contradictory to the prosecution case appears in the medical evidence; the body was extremely charred by burning and no lathi marks were visible. The Civil Surgeon says that on flesh so charred he would not expect to find them. He speaks of three penetrating wounds in the chest and abdomen which were the cause of death. These, according to the direct evidence are all to be ascribed to Bhikari Pati. The first six accused are, therefore, guilty under S. 392.

The last appellant Jogi, however, took no part in the murder and has been convicted only of conspiracy. I have, therefore, to examine the evidence as to the conspiracy and as to his part in it. The charge of conspiracy was not a part of the first information (Ex. 1) though that information mentions that at one time some of the accused had conspired to murder Banamali and there had been a police case about it. Bhikari Sahu the informant, filed a petition of complaint (Ex. 2) on 30th June 1928, the date on which the charge sheet of this case was submitted, alleging that there was sufficient evidence of conspiracy before the police and praying that the accused be put on their trial on a charge of conspiracy. It was on this petition that the Magistrate took cognizance of the conspiracy charge along with the case of murder. The prosecution case was that the conspiracy had its origin in January 1925, when the opponents of Banamali led by Sama and Jogi Sahu began to meet together to concert measures against him.

There is nothing criminal about the first steps taken which were to petition successively the Settlement Officer, the landlord, Banamali's master, and the Superintendent of Police against Banamali. These petitions had no result. Then come meetings at which a few of the party formed an inner circle and deliberated in secret; Jogi is one of them. Sama declares to Kela Behera (P. W. 133) that Banamali must be killed and says the same thing in the presence of Arjun Baral (P. W. 195) and Bhima Baral (P. W. 209), the latter of whom says that Jogi joined in the proposal. In July 1926 an attempt on Banamali's life was apprehended. He was to be attacked on leaving the train at Satyabadi. He was warned and took another route, but on 18th July 1926 a number of his enemies including Jogi had in fact collected at Satyabadi and one Baidhar Sahu was found in possession of a knife. The incident was reported to the police and Banamali desired a prosecution under S. 120, I.R.C., but sufficient evidence was not forthcoming. As a sequel to this incident

Sama, Jogi and others severely assaulted Bhalu Padhan (P. W. 183), a servant of Banamali, who had been a witness in the case. Sama and Jogi were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment. In jail Sama in Jogi's presence again declared his intention of killing Banamali as deposed to by Gokhulanand (P. W. 121).

There is evidence of other meetings which it is difficult to date exactly. In all of these Sama is prominent; in some Jogi is not mentioned but wherever he appears it is as Sama's companion and close associate. Jogi himself is said to have threatened the life of Dhuli alias Jogendra (P. W. 219), a gomastha under Banamali in presence of Narain Pati (P. W. 214) whose statement in evidence is corroborated by the fact of his having written at the time a warning letter (Ex. 67) to Banamali. There is evidence of several occasions on which an attack on Banamali was apprehended, but no attack was made as he got warning and took precautions. There can be no direct evidence that on those occasions the purpose of attacking him was formed until we come to the time regarding which Nidhi's evidence is available. Nidhi speaks of three occasions on which preparations were made to attack Banamali but proved abortive. Among the names given by Nidhi of persons who on these occasions went out to kill Banamali we do not find the name of Jogi, but it appears in Nidhi's evidence that Jogi, Sama and others persuaded him to join Sama's party and openly declared their intention to kill Banamali; that on the occasion of Banamali's visit to Bayabar tola it was Jogi who gave the conspirators information of his movements; and further that on the day of the murder Jogi had promised to send men to help in burning the body. There is independent evidence, which I have already referred to, that Jogi was seen talking to Sama on the morning of the murder and we have it from Chama Prusti (P. W. 148) that on the day after the murder Jogi told him that Banamali would have been killed a day sooner had he passed by the route by which he was expected to go. I have dealt already with the admissibility of Nidhi's evidence. I find, in agreement with the Sessions Judge, that his deposition before the committing Magistrate was a substantially truthful statement and is corroborated in many particulars by independent evidence.

Taking the evidence as a whole there is, I think, no room for doubt that there was a conspiracy to put Banamali to death; that Jogi was a party to it, and that Jogi had not dissociated himself from the party of the conspirators up to the date of the crime. I would, therefore, uphold the conviction of Jogi also. It remains to consider the question of sentence in the case of accused 1 to 5. The murder, I have held, was deliberate and was done in pursuance of an intention formed long before and tenaciously pursued in face of repeated disappointments. It is difficult to see how any penalty other than the death penalty can be regarded as adequate. We have examined the record to see whether the character of the deceased was such as to furnish any extenuation of the guilt of those who killed him. Only an intolerable tyranny on his part would suffice to mitigate the crime and the evidence does not show that there was any such thing. The several accused had no doubt their grievances but these were ordinary personal grudges which though furnishing a motive do not supply any excuse for murder.

First, as regards Bhikari and Gobind, Bhikari was formerly a personal body-guard of Banamali. He was fined in a criminal case of which Banamali financed his defence. He resented Banamali's demand for repayment of money spent in the case and for payment of paddy due to the landlord and of advances made by Banamali to Bhikari's father. Sama Khatua was also formerly a personal guard of Banamali whom he left because the latter, after financing the defence of a case in which Sama was prosecuted, refused to help him in appealing against the conviction and demanded repayment of the money spent in defending the case. The petition to the Settlement Officer is an attempt to review an old claim of the tenants to some tanks and grazing ground which had been recorded in the name of the landlord as long ago as the previous Record of Rights. The visit to the landlord was in connexion with rent receipts and with settlement of waste lands. Sama Khatua's enmity was no doubt aggravated by the Khaturi case and by his conviction of assault on Bhalu Padhan. Sama had also dispute with Banamali regarding certain lands which Sama had purchased, but over which Banamali's uncle Muli held a mortgage. Eventually the dispute terminated in favour of Muli. Accused 4 to 6 hardly appear to have any definite grievances of their own; they seem to have come in mainly as partisans of Sama. Jogi had a dispute with Banamali regarding land of one Panchei Bewa which was sold to each of them. Of the rival purchasers Banamali, was successful. Jogi was convicted under S. 352 in a case brought by Jaga Maharana which Jogi attributed to the influence of Banamali and was also convicted of assault on Bhalu Padhan. None of these matters furnish any justification or extenuation of the crime. I would, therefore, accept the reference and confirm the death sentence on accused 1 to 5 and dismiss the appeal of all the accused.

We desire to pay tribute to the care and patience displayed by the learned Judge in trying this case. His judgment, although in view of the volume of evidence necessarily of great length, is extremely clear and well ordered and deals most fairly with every contention which could be raised by the defence. We would also compliment Mr. Gupta upon the way in which he fulfilled his very onerous duties on behalf of the appellants. His task was hopeless but he faced it with great courage and discretion.

COURTNEY-TERRELL, C. J., AND DHAVLE, J.

Banti Pande—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal.Revn. No. 257 of 1929, Decided on 2nd July 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Muzaffarpur, D/- 2nd April 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 211—Proceedings erroneously taken and in good faith by Magistrate not empowered so to do—Complainant is not liable for false complaint under S. 211.

If a Magistrate not empowered by law to take cognizance of an offence under S. 190 (1) (a) erroneously and in good faith does so, although his proceedings shall not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being so empowered, it will not have the effect of making the complainant liable for prosecution for a false complaint by reason of the Magistrate's having taken cognizance of it without power to do so: A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 400, FolU: 17 Cal. 574 and 32 Mad. 258, Dist. [P 1097 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 4—"Complaint". presupposes accusation with view to action.

It is of the essence of a complaint that the accusation should have been made with a view to action being taken under the Code of Criminal Procedure. An express request to that effect is unnecessary, but whether a statement is made with a view to action being taken upon it as upon complaint must be determined in the light of the circumstances.

(c) Penal Code, S. 211—"Falsely charging"—Meaning explained.

"Falsely charging" means a false accusation made to any authority bound by law to investigate it or to take any step in regard to it. 32 Mad. 258, Ref. [P 1098 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, S. 211—"Accusation in dying declaration made to Magistrate stands on no better footing than one made to another."

An accusation contained in a dying declaration made to a Magistrate stands on no better footing than an accusation made to a private individual, such as the compounder in the hospital, without any statutory obligation to move in the matter at all: 11 I.C. 617; 17 Cal. 574; 30 Cal. 415; 19 Bom. 51 and 26 Mad. 640 Ref. [P 1098 C 2]

(e) Penal Code, S. 182—Essential ingredient stated.

It is an essential ingredient of an offence under S. 182 that the offender should intend to cause, or should know it to be likely that the information given by him to the public servant will cause the public servant to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given or known by him, or to use the lawful power of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person. A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 717, Ref. [P 1099 C 1]

(f) Penal Code, Ss. 192 and 194—False dying declaration by man, who does nothing to communicate with authorities does not come under either S. 192 or S. 194.

While a false dying declaration may well, in certain circumstances, go in as evidence, the intent that it may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding and cause an erroneous opinion to be entertained touching a point material to the result of such a proceeding, which is an essential ingredient in the definition, cannot easily be inferred of a man who was thought to be dying at the time and did nothing by himself or by his friends to communicate with or seek any redress from the authorities. The intent of knowledge necessary under S. 194 presents an even greater difficulty in the application of that section, for it postulates a feeling in the mind of the petitioner that his recovery was impossible.

Manohar Lal and A. K. Mitra—for Petitioner.

Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Dhavlé, J.—This is an application in revision against a conviction of an offence under S. 211, I. P. C. with a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment. A rule was also issued by this Bench calling upon the petitioner to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced.

The petitioner was sleeping in his verandah on the night of the 10th September last, when he received three injuries including a dangerous 10" cut across the face from near the right ala of the nose to the superior angle of the scapula on the right side. He was taken next morning to the Bettiah hospital, where his condition was found to be so precarious that a report was made to the Subdivisional Magistrate with a request that the man's dying declaration might be recorded immediately. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate sent Pandit Hriday Narayan, a Sub Deputy Magistrate with second class powers, to record the petitioner's statement if any. The petitioner was accordingly questioned by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate and stated that he had been attacked overnight by three persons, Kishundut Pande, Gorakh Pande and Subhnarain Upadhaya and had chased them upto a distance of ten or twelve kathas when he had to stop on account of loss of blood. He further stated that on the previous Saturday (that is to say, two days before the assault) he had overheard the Sub-Inspector of the thana asking Deonandan Ojha, Sheonarain (Subhnarain?) Upadhaya and Kishundut Pande to kill him.

The prosecution case was that the petitioner's accusation against the persons named in his statement to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate was false and malicious, that these persons had nothing to do with the assault on the petitioner, and that the petitioner himself had stated at the time that an unknown thief had attacked him. The defence was that the petitioner's statement was true and that after the assault the petitioner became unconscious and made no statement at all.

The trying Magistrate and the Sessions Judge concurrently found that the petitioner's statement was false.

while the malice between the parties was really common ground.

Mr. Manohar Lal for the petitioner has endeavoured to show that the prosecution evidence ought not to be accepted. He has referred to the evidence of the Sub-Assistant Surgeon that the petitioner was in a "somewhat sub-conscious state" and would not be able to speak for twelve or thirteen hours from four or five minutes after receiving the injury on the face which was dangerous to life. There is however no dispute that the petitioner did in fact make a statement to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate in which he spoke not only of chasing his assailants for ten or twelve kathas, but also of what had happened on the previous Saturday. The Sub-Assistant Surgeon's evidence is palpably over-coloured and goes the length of saying that the petitioner "probably could not run but could walk for ten, fifteen or twenty cubits or so" after the injury on the face contrary to what the petitioner himself stated. Mr. Manohar Lal has also taken us into the evidence of the six prosecution witnesses, Nos. 6, 7, 15, 8, 16 and 19, on whom the learned Sessions Judge specially relied in support of the prosecution story that the petitioner said at the time that he had been attacked by an unknown thief. It is true that Tilakdhari Pande (P. W. 6) admits that he only heard the story not from the petitioner but from Phagu and Saudagar (P. Ws. 16 and 19), and true also that Harihardut Pande (P. W. 15) is not only a nephew of the petitioner's but also a son of Nageswar (P. W. 13) upon whom (an uncle of Gorakh) the learned Sessions Judge was not disposed to place much reliance, while Bahori Chamar (P. W. 8) does not really seem to have been on good terms with the petitioner; but even so there does not seem to be any sufficient reason to disbelieve the evidence of Bipat Chamar (P. W. 7), a servant of the petitioner, and Phagu and Saudagar, though these two witnesses have their houses on the land of Gorakh. As regards the conspiracy between the Sub-Inspector and Kishundut and others, Mr. Manohar Lal has referred to the admission of the Sub-Inspector that in walking back on the Saturday he passed some bushes, from behind which he could have been overheard, but it is obvious that this does not go far to indicate the truth of the alleged conspiracy, and the incident is in itself so highly improbable that Mr. Manohar Lal himself has had to argue on the evidence not that the Sub-Inspector actually asked the man to kill the petitioner but that the petitioner may have been led by an over-heated imagination to think so. In my opinion the evidence leaves no doubt that there was in reality no conspiracy, that the petitioner did not in fact recognize in the dark any of his actual assailants as he next day claimed to have done, and that his accusation against Kishundut, the Sub-Inspector and others was both false and malicious.

The charge framed against the petitioner was that he :

"on or about the 11th day of September 1928, at the King Edward Memorial Hospital, Bettiah, with intent to cause injury to Kishundut Pande, Lyakat Hussain, Sub-Inspector and others, caused to be instituted a criminal proceeding against them before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Bettiah, charging the said Kishundut Pande and others with having committed an offence, viz., attempt to murder, under S. 307, I. P. C., and the Sub-Inspector of Police with abetment of such an attempt, knowing at the time that there was no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge, and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 211, I. P. C. . . ."

If, as was apparently the prosecution case below, a criminal proceeding was actually instituted, a reference to Sch. 2, Criminal P. C., shows that the case under S. 211 should have been tried by the Court of Session alone, since the attempt to murder involved the causing of hurt and was accordingly punishable with transportation for life. The conviction of the petitioner by a First Class Magistrate would therefore be void: see S. 530 (p), Criminal P. C.

The charge speaks of causing a criminal proceeding to be instituted before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Bettiah. We are not concerned in this case with such modes of instituting criminal proceedings as lodging information of a cognizable offence with the police, Karim Buksh v. Queen-Emress (1), or in the case of certain grave offences giving information to village headmen or others who are under a statutory obligation to communicate such information forthwith to the nearest Magistrate or to the officer in charge of the nearest police station: Sessions Judge Tinnevely Division v. Sivan Chetti (2). The petitioner could only have caused a criminal proceeding to be instituted before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, if at all, by making a complaint to him. Now a complaint is defined in S. 4, Criminal P. C., as :

"the allegation made, orally, or in writing, to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action under this Code, that some person has committed an offence."

This implies that the Magistrate to whom such an allegation is made must be duly empowered to take action on it, and S. 201 of the Code provides that if a complaint is made to a Magistrate who is not competent to take cognizance of the case, he shall direct the complainant to the proper Court and return the complaint, if made in writing, with a proper endorsement. Assuming for the present that the petitioner's statement to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate amounted to a complaint, the Sub-Deputy Magistrate could only take cognizance of the case if specially empowered by the Local Government or the District Magistrate; but it has not been suggested on behalf of the Crown that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate had any such authority. It is true that according to S. 529(e), Criminal P. C., if a Magistrate not empowered by law to take cognizance of an offence under S. 190 (1) (a) erroneously and in good faith does so, his proceedings shall not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being so empowered. But, as was expressly ruled in Bengali Gope v. Emperor (3) :

"this will not have the effect of making the complainant liable for prosecution for a false complaint by reason of the Magistrate's having taken cognizance of it without power to do so."

The charge as framed must therefore fail on the ground that no criminal proceeding could have been instituted before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate so as to attract the operation of S. 211, I. P. C.

It has been urged on behalf of the Crown that if the Sub-Deputy Magistrate was incompetent to take cognizance, the petitioner was still guilty of an attempt to cause proceedings to be instituted before that Magistrate. This contention must obviously fail if even apart from the incompetency of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate to take cognizance on a complaint, the petitioner's statement or dying declaration did not amount to a complaint. Now, it is of the essence of a complaint that the accusation should have been made with a view to action being taken under the Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioner's statement does not ask for any action to be taken, but an express request to that effect is unnecessary. Whether the statement was made with a view to action being taken upon it as upon complaint must be determined in the light of the circumstances. In an ordinary case the complainant goes of his own accord to the Magistrate and makes his accusation, and it is thus easy to infer that he does so with a view to action being taken under the Code. In the present case it was not the petitioner who went to the Magistrate but the Sub-Deputy Magistrate who came to the petitioner, as ordered by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the report from the hospital that the petitioner's condition seemed to be very precarious and that his dying declaration might be recorded immediately. It was in this condition that the petitioner was approached by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, who began by explaining that he was Magistrate and had come to take down the petitioner's statement. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate further informed the petitioner that the statement made by him would be used when occasion arose, a curious warning to administer to a dying complainant, though appropriate in the case of accused persons when their confessions are to be recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C.

He did not, however, speak of having been sent by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to record the petitioner's "dying declaration" or of the possibility of any statement made by the petitioner being treated as a complaint. Can it be said in the circumstances that the petitioner understood that he was being invited to make his complaint, if any, or that he made his statement with a view to action being taken on it under the Criminal P. C.? It is significant that when eight days afterwards the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, in the course of his enquiry, questioned the petitioner in the hospital, he found the petitioner unwilling to make any statement, though according to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate the reason apparently was that the petitioner was very weak and wanted time. There is nothing in the circumstances to show that the statement made by the petitioner was intended by him as the complaint of an aggrieved party rather than, for example, as the statement of a witness. In my opinion the prosecution has not succeeded in establishing clearly that the petitioner's statement amounted to a complaint in this regard, and it is therefore impossible to deal with the petitioner on the footing that he attempted to cause a criminal proceeding to be instituted before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate.

Besides the institution of a criminal proceeding, S. 211, I. P. C., also deals with falsely charging any person with having committed an offence. The charge actually framed against the petitioner also speaks of his charging Kishundut Pande and others with having committed the offence of attempt to murder and the Sub-Inspector of Police with abetment of such an attempt. Unlike a "complaint" "false charging" is not defined by statute, but it has been repeatedly held to mean a false accusation made to any authority bound by law to investigate it or to take any step in regard to it. In the decision from S. J., Tinnevely Division v. Siven Chetty (2), to which I have already referred it is shown how such an accusation may be effectively made in certain cases to a person possessing no magisterial powers but bound by law to communicate it forthwith to the nearest Magistrate or the officer in charge of the nearest police station. The petitioner's statement clearly contains a grave accusation against four or five persons, and it was made to an officer with the powers of a Second Class Magistrate who had actually been deputed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to record it. But it was not recorded in the course of a police investigation and therefore does not come under S. 164 (2), Criminal P. C., under which (if applicable) it would have been the duty of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate to forward it to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Mr. Agarwala who appears for the Crown has not been able to point to any statutory provision requiring the Sub-Deputy Magistrate in the circumstances of this case to forward the petitioner's statement to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The statement was recorded as a "dying declaration," but the law does not require dying declarations to be recorded by Magistrates, and while an individual Magistrate who records a dying declaration may happen to be empowered to take cognizance, Mr. Agarwala has to concede that, apart from such powers of cognizance, an accusation contained in a dying declaration made to a Magistrate stands on no better footing than an accusation made to a private individual, such as the compounder in the hospital in the present case, without any statutory obligation to move in the matter at all. As was observed in Zorawar Singh v. Emperor (4) :

"It has been held by the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts that the words "falsely charges" in S. 211, I. P. C., must be construed along with the words which speak of the institution of proceedings in the earlier part of the section, and further that the test is whether the person who made the statement which is alleged to constitute the charge did so with the intention and object of setting the criminal law in motion against the person against whom the statement is directed: Karim Buksh v. Queen-Empress (1), Jugobundoo Karmakar v. Emperor (5), Queen-Empress v. Karigowda (6) and Rayan Kutti v. Emperor (7) "

A false charge within the meaning of S. 211 must thus be made to a competent Magistrate or other person with a statutory standing in the matter and must further be made with the object of setting the criminal law in motion, the latter a requirement which I have considered when dealing with the question whether the dying declaration could, apart from the competency of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, amount to a complaint. It follows that the petitioner did not by his statement to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate falsely charge any person within the meaning of S. 211, I. P. C.

It was observed in Darega Gope v. Emperor (8) that an offence under S. 211, I. P. C., must always include an offence under S. 182, I. P. C., and that some false accusations may come within S. 182 without constituting offences under S. 211. It is, however, an essential ingredient of an offence under

S. 182 that the offender should intend to cause, or should know to be likely that the information given by him to the public servant will cause, the public servant .

(a) to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given were known by him, or

(b) to use the lawful power of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person.

I have already referred to the circumstances in which the petitioner made his statement to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, how he was thought to be dying, and only spoke when questioned by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, and did not ask for any action. It seems to me that these circumstances negative the intent or knowledge without which there can be no offence under S. 182, to say nothing of facts that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, as a public servant, had no lawful power or authority in the matter at all, even though he chose to put the petitioner on oath, and that the petitioner's statement would have been forwarded by him to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate irrespective of its truth or falsehood.

In dealing with the question of sentence the learned Sessions Judge has observed that:

"it was a grave offence to make false statements of the kind before a Magistrate, knowing that such statements might be used in evidence with all the sanctity attached to a dying declaration, and might possibly have led to innocent persons being convicted on a capital charge."

The mention of the possible use of the dying declaration as evidence leading to a conviction on a capital charge suggests an offence under S. 194, I. P. C., and it was in fact when the learned Assistant Government Advocate argued that the petitioner was guilty of an offence under this section that we issued the rule for enhancement of the sentence. S. 194 runs:

"Whoever gives or fabricates false evidence, intending thereby to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, any persons to be convicted of an offence which is capital . . . shall be punished with transportation for life . . ."

It is not suggested that the petitioner gave false evidence within the meaning of the section. Did he fabricate false evidence? Fabricating false evidence is defined in S. 192, and while a false dying declaration may well, in certain circumstances, go in as evidence, the intent that it may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding and cause an erroneous opinion to be entertained touching a point material to the result of such a proceeding, which is an essential ingredient in the definition, cannot easily be inferred of a man who, like the petitioner, was thought to be dying at the time and did nothing by himself or by his friends to communicate with or seek any redress from the authorities. The intent or knowledge necessary under S. 194 presents an even greater difficulty in the application of that section, for it postulates a feeling in the mind of the petitioner that his recovery was impossible. There is nothing in the evidence to show that such was the mental condition of the petitioner at the time he made the statement to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate.

It seems hardly necessary to refer to other difficulties in the case. If a criminal proceeding was instituted or attempted before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate or if an offence under S. 194 was committed in or in relation to such a proceeding, cognizance of the offence could only have been taken on the complaint of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate or of some other Court to which his Court is subordinate. The subordination applicable is given in sub-S. (3), S. 195, and is different from that given in S. 17 (2), Criminal P. C. For the purpose of a prosecution under S. 211, I. P. C., the complaint of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was thus not a sufficient compliance with the law, and the evidence of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, together with the complaint made by him, and his statement that he made his enquiry under S. 159, Criminal P. C., suggests a good deal of confusion about the actual position.

In my opinion the petitioner is not guilty of the offence charged or of any other offence that can properly be taken into consideration at present. I would reverse the conviction and sentence passed upon him, and discharge the rule for enhancement of the sentence.

S. P. Varma and Syed Hasan—for Petitioners.

Pandey and N. K. Sahay—for Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—There is a dispute between the four petitioners and three men named Mohid, Wahid and Mazhar regarding possession of certain land in the Siwan subdivision. In August 1929 the Subdivisional Magistrate of Siwan issued an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., against Mohid, Wahid and Mazhar which was rescinded by the District Magistrate on 23rd September with an expression of opinion that possession was with the persons against whom the Subdivisional Magistrate had made his order absolute. At the beginning of 1930 the parties were quarrelling again. Mohid prosecuted the petitioners who are now before this Court alleging that they had committed an offence punishable under S. 323, I. P. C., in a quarrel arising out of this disputed claim to possession. The case was tried by an Honorary Magistrate who found that Mohid had not been assaulted as he alleged and acquitted the four petitioners. At the same time treating the order of the District Magistrate under S. 144 as practically amounting to res judicata he found that the complainant was in possession of the disputed land. Mater Chamar made a counter-complaint against Mohid's party which was summarily dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C., on the strength of the decision of the Honorary Magistrate. In April last the Subdivisional Magistrate drew up proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C., against the four petitioners remarking that there had already been findings on the question of possession by two Courts by the Court of the District Magistrate in his order of 23rd September and by the Honorary Magistrate in his order of 18th February. On this ground he rejected the petition of the opposite party praying for the initiation of proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., or in the alternative that proceedings under S. 107 of the Code might be instituted against the opposite party also.

Mr. Varma on behalf of the petitioners argues that the dispute which has led to these proceedings is a dispute regarding possession of land so that the Magistrate, before he can take action under S. 107, must decide which of the two parties is in possession, that is to say, he must decide what practically amounts to a case under S. 145 before he can take proceedings against one of the parties under S. 107 so that it would be a simpler course to take proceedings under S. 145.

It is true that where one party who is clearly in the wrong threatens to disturb the rights of another who is in actual possession of the land, the provisions of S. 145 have no application, as was pointed out in Shama Charan v. Emperor (1). But in that case it was also pointed out that the proper course when there is a real dispute regarding land is to proceed under S. 145, since otherwise the effect might be to bind down one of the parties to the dispute, without any adjudication on the question as to which of the two parties is in possession. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate in this case takes the view that one party is shown to be clearly in the wrong by the order of his superior officer made under S. 144, Criminal P.C., and by the Honorary Magistrate's order acquitting four petitioners on the charge framed under S. 323, I. P. C.

The decision of the learned District Magistrate of 23rd September 1929 merely rescinded the order which had been made under S. 144. If the learned District Magistrate had affirmed the order under S. 144, and if the Subdivisional Magistrate had now been hearing the matter under S. 145, he would have been obliged to hold that no evidence could be offered to show the possession of either party for the period during which the order under S. 144 was in force: Joyanti Kumar Mukherji v. J. B. Middleton (2). But if a definite order under S. 144 must be ignored when evidence regarding possession is being considered in proceedings under S. 145, a decision refusing to take action under S. 144 or rescinding an order under S. 144, must certainly also be ignored. The remark of the learned District Magistrate that one party or the other was in possession cannot be treated as proving in any way that they were in possession, and the petitioners themselves cannot take advantage of the fact that they enjoyed possession during the period between the date of the Subdivisional Magistrate's order under S. 144 in their favour and 23rd September, when the order was rescinded. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate remarks that there was no motion against any of these orders, including the order of 23rd September. If the petitioners had moved, against the District Magistrate's order of 23rd September their application would have been summarily rejected, because the High Court would not have entertained an application in which it was impossible to grant any relief. The High Court could not have restored the order of the Subdivisional Magistrate after it had expired by lapse of time, and an application for revision would not have been admitted when no relief could be granted.

(2) [1900] 27 Cal. 785=4 C. W. N. 562.

Similarly the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate must not treat the obiter dicta of the Honorary Magistrate who disposed of the case instituted by Mohid as excusing him from examining the evidence on the question of possession. All that is finally decided by that case is that the four petitioners did not assault Mohid. The learned Magistrate's remarks on the question of possession are obiter dicta, since if Mohid was not assaulted by the petitioners the question of who was in possession of the land did not arise. Similarly the fact that Matar Chamar's counter-claim was dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C., is evidence of nothing more than of the fact that the Magistrate did not believe that the persons accused in that case had assaulted Matar Chamar. It has no bearing of any kind on the question of possession.

It will therefore be necessary before proceedings under S. 107 Criminal P. C., can be properly instituted against the petitioners, to ascertain which of the parties to this dispute is in possession of the land, which can more conveniently be done by proceedings under S. 145. No justification has been made out for selecting the four petitioners as the persons against whom proceedings should be taken instead of the members of the opposite party, and in the circumstances I consider that the proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P.C., should be quashed. If the learned Magistrate considers that danger of a breach of the peace renders proceedings under Part 4, Criminal P. C., necessary he should proceed under S. 145.

Criminal Revn. No. 197 of 1930, Decided on 7th August 1930, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 5th June 1930, in Criminal Revn. No. 10/6 of 1930.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 201—Magistrate having two jurisdictions, taking cognizance of complaint under one jurisdiction but later on under another jurisdiction may be deemed to have returned the complaint for presentation to proper Court and to have accepted it as represented—States (Protection Against Disaffection) Act, (1922) S. 3.

Inspector-General of Police, Bhopal, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council lodged a complaint in the Court of a Magistrate having two jurisdictions, that of a Headquarters Magistrate and that of a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction over railway lands in Bhopal State. The complaint was against the editor, printer and publisher of an Urdu Weekly "Riyasat" for publishing an article tending to excite disaffection towards the Chief of Bhopal State or his government or administration in Bhopal. The Magistrate was subordinate to different High Courts in two different jurisdictions. The complainant applied for amplification of his complaint by the inclusion of Itarsi as one of the places of publication of the above offending article. The Magistrate passed the following order: "The result of this petition for amplification will be that the case will henceforward cease to be a railway case for State-administered areas if it was one and be transferred to my ordinary file of criminal cases of this Court. This is done." After this order the accused objected that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear the case as he had transferred a case from a Court subordinate to one High Court to another Court subordinate to the other High Court, which the Governor-General in Council could alone do by a notification in the Gazette of India.

Held: that the trying Magistrate in his capacity as the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was incompetent to deal with the complaint of an offence committed at Itarsi but in his capacity as Headquarters Magistrate was competent to do so. [P 1103 C 2 ; P 1104 C 1]

Held further: that as the original papers filed by the complainant contained material clearly amounting to an allegation of publication at Itarsi, the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was no longer bound to dismiss the complaint in its entirety: he was entitled to return the complaint for presentation to the Court that could try the offence committed at Itarsi and this was in effect what he did. Order.—The applicant in the present case is alleged to have committed an offence punishable under S. 3, States (Protection Against Disaffection) Act, 1922. The complaint, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, was laid by the Inspector-General of Police of the Bhopal State in the Court of the Railway Magistrate, Hoshangabad. In it it was alleged that the accused was the editor, printer and publisher of the Urdu Weekly called "Riyasat", that an article in that paper headed "Pandit Moti Lal Nehru and Bhopal" published in the issue of 17th August 1929 brought or was intended to bring His Highness the Nawab of Bhopal or the government or administration established in Bhopal into hatred or contempt, or excited or intended to excite disaffection towards the Chief of the Bhopal State or his government or administration in Bhopal.

The complaint was made on 4th December 1929. The complainant when examined made the following statement:

"The publication of the offending article having taken place at the Bhopal Railway Station, the offence under S. 3, States (Protection Against Disaffection) Act, 1922, has been committed by the accused within the jurisdiction of this Court."

Some time thereafter the accused applied to the Government of India for an order of transfer, apparently on the ground that on conviction the appeal would lie to the Political Agent, Bhopal and an application for revision to the Agent to the Governor-General in Central India. Before orders were received on this application the complainant made an application to amplify the complaint, with the purpose of making it clear as to the jurisdiction of the Court, and for that purpose it was alleged that the offending article in the said issue of the Riyasat was published at the Itarsi Railway Station in Hoshangabad and other places within the jurisdiction of the Court and that the said article was also published at the Bhopal Railway Station.

It must here be explained that Mr. Royzada, in whose Court the complaint has been laid, exercises two jurisdictions: he is the Headquarters Magistrate of Hoshangabad and he is also the Magistrate exercising jurisdiction over railway lands in the Bhopal State. In his latter capacity the Political Agent, Bhopal, is the Sessions Judge to hear appeals from his decisions and the Agent to the Governor-General is the High Court. The application for transfer was thus on the assumption that Mr. Royzada had entertained the complaint as the Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in the railway lands in Bhopal. The amplification of the complaint by the inclusion of Itarsi as one of the places where the offending article is alleged to have been published gave Mr. Royzada jurisdiction in his other capacity as the Headquarters Magistrate and on 8th March 1930 he passed an order containing the following :

"The result of this petition for amplification will be that the case will henceforward cease to be a railway case for State administered areas if it was one and be transferred to my ordinary file of criminal cases of this Court. This be done."

After this order the accused objected that the Headquarters Magistrate, Mr. Royzada, had no jurisdiction to hear the case ; but the objection was overruled on 15th April 1930, and an application for revision was rejected by the Additional Sessions Judge, Hoshangabad, on 5th June 1930, against whose order further application for revision has now been made to this Court. The objection taken is that Mr. Royzada, as a Railway Magistrate, has by his order dated 8th March 1930, transferred the case from a criminal Court subordinate to one High Court to a criminal Court subordinate to another High Court, as such a transfer can only be made by the Governor-General in Council by notification in the Gazette of India.

It would appear from the paragraph I have cited from the order passed on 8th March 1930 that Mr. Royzada expressed a doubt as to whether the case had ever been a railway case for State-administered areas: it seems quite clear from that order that he thought he had taken cognizance of it as such a case, though that is immaterial, if the complaint was of an offence within his other jurisdiction. Whether it was one in reality will depend on the allegation, as to the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed on which the Magistrate took cognizance. The complaint itself does not mention a specific place of publication: it mentions in para. 2 that the Riyasat has a fairly wide circulation in India generally and the Indian States particularly, and is also received in Bhopal. In para. 6 it merely says that the Riyasat issue of the 17th August 1929 was published within the jurisdiction of this Court. The terms of the complaint thus do not show whether the Magistrate took cognizance of an offence committed at Bhopal or at Itarsi.

It is the examination of the complainant, from which I have quoted a passage in para. 2 foregoing, that shows that the Railway Magistrate was asked to take cognizance of an offence committed at the Bhopal railway station. It is urged that Bhopal railway station is not in British India: the States (Protection Against Disaffection) Act applies only to British India and so no offence under it can be committed at that station. From this it is argued that the complaint can only be directed against an offence committed in British India; but it does not follow: the view seems to have been taken that the offence could be committed at that station though it was a mistaken view. It is urged that the intention was not to complain of an offence committed there because there is no certificate from the Political Agent, as S. 188, Criminal P. C., requires. I doubt however if such a certificate is necessary when the trial is to be held by a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction within the Bhopal State. I am satisfied that the complaint made to the Railway Magistrate was prima facie of an offence alleged to have been committed at Bhopal railway station, and it was of that offence he took cognizance.

It was not however a complaint of that offence that was transferred to the Headquarters Magistrate for trial but an offence alleged to have been committed at Itarsi railway station, which the Magistrate for Bhopal could not try. S. 527, Criminal P. C., contemplates transfer from a competent Court; and the only objection, I think, that the accused can raise is that the procedure adopted has resulted in the Headquarters Magistrate assuming illegal jurisdiction in a case in which no valid complaint has been made to him.

It is suggested on behalf of the prosecution that what has taken place is a return, under S. 201, Criminal P. C., of a complaint for presentation to the proper Court by a Magistrate not competent to take cognizance of the case. It would be unfair to rule out this contention because Mr. Royzada transferred the case from one of his Courts to the other without handing back the complaint to be formally represented. It is also immaterial that the Magistrate probably did not realize that S. 201 applied. The question however, is whether the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was incompetent. He certainly was incompetent to deal with the complaint of an offence committed at Itarsi. The complaint itself is in very general terms and does not exclude an allegation of publication at Itarsi or any other place. It was only the examination of the complainant that made it clear that complaint of an offence committed at Bhopal railway station was primarily intended. Such a complaint the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was not incompetent to deal with. He could have dismissed it as disclosing no offence; but he did not do so and when the application for amplification was made other points arose for consideration. If that amplification introduced matter extraneous to the complaint, then I think it would have had no justification; but it did not. The application, after stating that publication had taken place at Itarsi railway station as well as at Bhopal, went on to point out that a list of witnesses to prove publication at these places had been given with the complaint. That list of witnesses shows that the agent of the book stall at Itarsi Station was to be called with his newspaper register showing the account of newspapers for the months of August, September and October 1929, and the only intention could be to prove sale of the Riyasat at Itarsi and consequently publication at that place. When thus it was apparent that the papers originally filed by the complainant contained material clearly amounting to an allegation of publication at Itarsi, the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was no longer bound to dismiss the complaint in its entirety; he was entitled to return the complaint for presentation to the Court that could try the offence committed at Itarsi and this is in effect what he did.

In this view of the case I must hold that the Headquarters Magistrate has jurisdiction to try the case, and I dismiss the application for revision.

Amiruddin Ahmed—for Petitioner.

D. N. Bhattacharjee—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 485, I. P. C., and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500 on the ground that he was in possession of a mould for counterfeiting the trade-mark of G. Ghose, the manufacturer of hair oil. The rule was issued on the ground that the trade-mark was a combination trade-mark and possession of moulds for counterfeiting a part of the mark did not amount to an offence under S. 485, I. P. C. It appears that the trade-mark consisted of an impression moulded in the glass of which the bottles are made together with the label, and these moulds were for making the impression on the glass of the bottle. Under S. 485, I. P. C., whoever has in his possession any die for the purpose of counterfeiting the trade-mark is liable under the section. There can be no doubt in this that the mould in question was intended for the purpose of counterfeiting this trade-mark although the apparatus for counterfeiting the label, which would complete the trade-mark has not been found, and inasmuch as this mould was certainly meant to be used in order to counterfeit the trade-mark the petitioner has rightly been held liable under S. 485, I. P. C.

The Rule is therefore discharged.

Criminal Revision No. 1451 of 1929, Decided on 16th May 1930, from order of Dy. Magistrate, Pabna, D/- 16th August 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 476—Opinion that there may be prima facie case against persons but no finding as required by S. 476 on expediency of prosecution in interests of justice—Case held not to come under S. 476.

In connexion with the conduct of a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., the order of the Magistrate was as follows: "Considered. Cause shown and heard pleaders. There is material for prosecution of (1) B under Ss. 465, 467 and 193, Penal Code; (2) S under Ss. 467, 114 and 193, Penal Code; (3) R under Ss. 467, 114, 477, 193 and 196, Penal Code. Draw up formal complaint against them for their prosecution and trial for the above-noted offences."

Held: that in stating that there was "material for prosecution" of these persons the Magistrate indicated that in his opinion there may be a prima facie case against them. But nowhere within the four corners of this order could it be said that there was any finding recorded such as is referred to in S. 476, nor has he in any way directed his mind to the question as to whether any such order as he makes is expedient in the interests of justice as to bring the order within S. 476.

*N. K. Basu and Rameni Mohan Chatterjee—*for Petitioners.

*B. C. Chatterjee—*for the Crown.

Judgment.—This rule was directed against an order for a complaint to be made against certain persons for the offence of perjury and kindred offences in connexion with the conduct of a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate made the order and the learned Sessions Judge has confirmed it.

One ground that is taken is that having regard to the fact that in the proceeding under S. 145 it was held that it was not maintainable, the order of complaint was bad. There is no substance in this because the proceedings themselves were perfectly in order and were in no sense illegal, and therefore the utmost that can be said is that it is a matter which might be considered as a possible element upon the question whether it was expedient in the interests of justice to make the complaint.

Another ground is that the order should not have been made because the dakhilas in respect of which the offence is alleged were not material to the case. But that however does not appear to be in accordance with fact because they were intended to support the case made by the party producing them that he was in exclusive possession of the particular portion of the land.

The other point raised is that the order of the Magistrate is not in conformity with the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C. That section lays down that when any Court is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into any offence . . . such Court may after such preliminary enquiry if any as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing. The order of the learned Magistrate in the present case is as follows:

"Considered. Cause shown and heard pleaders. There is material for prosecution of (1) Baroda Kinkar Ghose under Ss. 465, 467 and 193, I. P. C.; (2) Surendra Krista Dutta under Ss. 467, 114 and 193, I. P. C.; (3) Satis Chandra Maulik under Ss. 467, 114, 471, 193 and 196, I. P. C. Draw up formal complaint against them for their prosecution and trial for the above-noted offences."

In stating that there is "material for prosecution" of these persons we apprehend the learned Magistrate to indicate that in his opinion there may be a prima facie case against them. But nowhere within the four corners of this order can it be said that there is any finding recorded such as is referred to in S. 476, nor is it to be discovered that the learned Magistrate has in any way directed his mind to the question as to whether any such order as he makes is expedient in the interests of justice. On this ground the order of the learned Magistrate is set aside. It will of course be open to him if so advised to reconsider the matter in the light of the above remarks on the questions whether further proceedings should be instituted.

In these terms the rule is made absolute.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 70 of 1929, Decided on 14th August 1929, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Midnapur, D/- 4th December 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., (1898), S. 297—While charging jury, Judge saying nothing about particular witnesses' evidence while considering whether offence was committed on that day or not—But while dealing with evidence against particular accused bringing in evidence of that witness—Evidence not given before Sessions nor his deposition before committing Magistrate put in Sessions—Such evidence should not have been brought in, as being extremely damaging to general case of accused.

While charging the jury the Sessions Judge said nothing at all about the evidence of a certain witness in that part of the charge in which he considered whether the offence was committed on that day or not. But when he came to that part in the charge in which he dealt with evidence against particular accused, he referred to evidence of that witness. It was not given before the Sessions but had been given before the committing Magistrate. But his deposition before the committing Magistrate had also never been put in before the Sessions.

Held: that under the circumstances such evidence should not have been brought in while charging the jury as it is of an extremely damaging character to the general case of the accused. [P 1107 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 288—Examination-in-chief of prosecution witness before committing Magistrate, without his cross-examination on a vital point, brought on record before Sessions—Though Sessions Court had discretion it was not allowed in as being unfair to defence.

The evidence of a prosecution witness during his examination-in-chief before the committing Magistrate without his being cross-examined was brought on record before the Sessions Court.

Held: that though a Sessions Judge has discretion to put in depositions before the committing Magistrate, that discretion must be carefully exercised. Under the present circumstances the evidence should not be put in before the Sessions, as being very unfair to the defence. [P 1107 C 2]

Sasmal and Phanindranath Das—for Appellants.

Debendranarayan Bhattacharya—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In my opinion, this appeal must succeed, the conviction and the sentences must be set aside and the case must be retried.

The allegation against the seven appellants was that they had committed a dacoity in the house of the complainant on Saturday night, 16th June, at about 8 o'clock in the evening. The first information was lodged at the thana, some two or three miles away, by 9 o'clock. The amount of property taken away was in value only some Rs. 50 and the case for the prosecution is that the inmates of the house were allowed to leave the house and that, in a very short time, the neighbours were assembling with the result that the dacoits could not continue with their endeavours and in the end managed to get away with very little. The defence clearly denied that there was any dacoity at all and they laid stress upon certain suspicious features in the prosecution case, and maintained that there were reasons why the prosecution witnesses had enmity against these accused, who lived not far off, in a neighbouring village and why the attempt to make out that they were guilty of dacoity should be indulged in. The accused people were persons who were known to the inhabitants of the house and it appears that a number of them were said to be identified by different witnesses for the prosecution.

So far as can be gathered from the charge of the learned Judge, there is undoubtedly a substantial body of evidence called by the prosecution to the effect that this dacoity took place. There are the first six prosecution witnesses, who are inmates of the house. P. W's. 7, 9 and 10 appear to be close neighbours and P. W. 8 appears to be a co-villager.

The jury had before them the question whether they would or would not believe the general story told by these prosecution witnesses; and, if this case had been tried upon evidence that was on the record there can be no doubt that very strong reasons indeed would be required before this Court, on appeal, would think of interfering with the verdict of the jury.

What has happened in the present case is that a witness, who appears to be a Mahomedan witness (P. W. 13) and who lived in the same village as the accused persons, gave evidence before the committing Magistrate and in the course of that evidence, as recorded, he stated, among other things, that, on this very night, he saw 18 or 19 persons coming out of the barhi of the accused man Bhuta. When the case was tried in the Sessions Court this piece of evidence, which, if true, was extremely important, was not thought of such importance by the prosecution that they were minded to examine this witness before the jury at all. He was tendered merely for cross-examination. He was asked one or two harmless questions about the topography of his own village and about certain persons which affected only the fringe of the case, and nothing more happened as regards this witness. He did not tell before the jury any story about seeing 18 or 19 people leaving the barhi of Bhuta on the night of the occurrence. Then, when the learned Judge comes to charge the jury, he says nothing at all about the witness' evidence in that part of the charge in which he is considering the question whether there was dacoity at all on that night or not. But when he comes to the part of the charge, in which he deals with the evidence against particular accused, he says :

"Prosecution witness 13 says that he saw 18 or 19 persons coming out of Bhuta's barhi on Saturday evening. Of course he did not say he recognized the men."

Prosecution witness 13 had never given any such evidence before the Sessions. His deposition before the committing Magistrate had never been put in. No reference had been made to it accordingly, and the learned Judge in bringing in this as a piece of evidence, to my mind, brought in a piece of evidence which was of an extremely damaging character. To begin with, it was extremely damaging as regards Bhuta, and the learned Judge introduces it apparently with the idea that it is evidence identifying and implicating Bhuta.

It is said that, as the learned Judge has not introduced it in that part of the charge where he is considering whether there was a dacoity or not, we should not pay too much attention to this statement in the case of the other accused. It appears to me, on the contrary, that what Mr. Sasmal has represented to us may well be the true state of affairs, namely, that the evidence of this covillager and co-religionist to the effect that he saw such a large number of people on that night proceeding from the barhi of Bhuta in this neighbouring village, may well have appeared to the jury to be remarkable confirmation of the evidence as regards the existence of a dacoity. I do not feel disposed to speculate too closely as to the effect it would have on the mind of the jury. It appears to me that, on the whole, the probability is that if the jury noticed this part of the charge, as they must be supposed to have done, it would have a highly prejudicial effect upon the general case of the accused.

It is said that this evidence could have been put in under S. 288, Criminal P. C. A Sessions Judge certainly has a discretion to put in depositions before the committing Magistrate, but I am bound to say that, in this case, I am somewhat clearly of opinion that, if the learned Judge had, in the circumstances, put in this evidence about this gang of men by means of S. 288, he would have exercised his discretion in a manner that was anything but fair to the defence. For the first time, in this way, there would have come upon the record an extremely damaging piece of evidence, a piece of evidence which should have been got from the mouth of the witness in the examination-in-chief; and, speaking for myself, I cannot imagine I should have allowed such evidence to go in, there being no cross-examination directly or indirectly affecting or purporting to impinge upon this very cardinal question. In my judgment, the discretion to let in such evidence under S. 288, Criminal P. C., is one that must be carefully exercised, and in this case I have no hesitation in saying that nothing would have induced me to let this piece of evidence in by this round-about method. But, apart from that, there remains the fact that the deposition was not put in under S. 288, Criminal P. C. Had it been put in, the pleader for the defence would have had his chance to represent to the jury that this was a way of making out the prosecution case which rendered the prosecution case highly suspicious. He would have been able to deal with it. He would have notice of it. He might apply for a further opportunity to cross-examine the witness. In my judgment this is a case where a quite important matter, which is not on the record, has been treated as being in evidence, and I am not prepared to let the conviction stand either in the case of Bhuta or in the case of any other appellant.

The appeal must therefore be allowed, the convictions and the sentences must be set aside and the case must be remanded for a retrial. The appellants may continue on the same bail as before to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

JACK AND PANCKRIDGE, JJ.

Nababali and others — Accused—Appellants.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 30 of 1930, Decided on 9th July 1930, from judgment of Asst. Sess. Judge, Mymensingh.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 221—Mere slip in form of charge whereby accused is not prejudiced does not make conviction bad.

Where in the form of the charge there was a mere slip, the word "or" being used for "and" between two charges framed under Ss. 221 and 242, Penal Code, and none of the accused was in any way prejudiced by the fact that in form the charge was in the alternative whereas in substance two quite distinct offences were charged.

Held: that the conviction of the accused in respect of both the charges was not bad.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Non-direction — Prosecution failing to produce material witnesses—No explanation offered in case of one witness—Judge not specifically mentioning to jury of non-acceptance of explanation offered—Omission is non-direction amounting to misdirection.

Where the prosecution failed to produce material witnesses on the ground that they were relatives of the accused and where the trying Judge drew the attention of the jury to the explanation suggested by the prosecution for their absence and said that it was for the jury to accept or reject it without saying that the jury would be at liberty to draw an inference adverse to the prosecution if the explanation suggested were not acceptable to them and where no specific mention was made to the jury by the Judge regarding the fact that no explanation was offered about the non-production of one of the material witnesses for the prosecution.

Held: that the omission of the trial Judge to direct the jury as to the inference they were entitled to draw if they were not satisfied with the explanation suggested for the absence of material witnesses was a non-direction amounting to a misdirection and to be a good reason for setting aside the conviction of the accused person: *A. Suresh Chandra Taluqdar — for Appellant.

B. M. Sen and Anil Chandra Roy Chaudhury—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the accused persons, Nababali, Biswanath Das and Rameswar who have been convicted by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Mymensingh and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment under Ss. 221, 388 and 342, I. P. C. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty against all the accused in respect of the charge under S. 342, a unanimous verdict of guilty against Rameswar in the case of the charge under S. 221, a majority verdict of three to two guilty in the case of the charge under S. 388, I. P. C., against all the accused. The Judge accepted the verdict of the majority of the jury and sentenced the accused to various terms of imprisonment.

A preliminary technical point is taken on behalf of the accused persons, namely that the convictions are bad because the jury have returned a verdict of guilty against Rameswar under S. 342 and S. 221, whereas the charge was framed in the alternative. No one could suppose from reading the charge of the learned Judge that the charges had been framed in this way, and indeed the only fact that supports this is the word "or" appearing at the beginning of the charge under S. 342 against Rameswar. Logically, there was no justification for charging Rameswar in the alternative as will appear from the facts of the case when we come to deal with him. We think that the form of the charge was a mere slip and that none of the accused was in any way prejudiced by the fact that in form the charge was in the alternative, whereas in substance two quite distinct offences were charged and, in the view of the jury, proved against the accused. There is however another point which we consider is of some importance. The story for the prosecution was that the complainant Jogendra met the first two accused Nababali and Biswanath in a certain bazar where it is the practice of persons so disposed to gamble. A dispute arose owing according to the prosecution, to the fact that Nababali tendered to the complainant Jogendra a counterfeit currency note in payment of gambling loss. Thereupon Jogendra according to the prosecution case called on the third accused Rameswar to take Nababali and Biswanath into custody. This Rameswar refused to do and at the instigation of the first two accused proceeded to apprehend Jogendra. Thereafter Jogendra was removed to a place which has been referred to as the bari of one Santosh where by threats of violence a sum of Rs. 105 was extorted from him, and he was not successful in obtaining his release until this sum had been made over. This is the story of the prosecution in respect of which the charges were brought and the accused persons were convicted.

Now the passage in the learned Judge's charge to which exception is taken is that which deals with the stage when the gambling was going on. It is evident that the place where the occurrence is alleged to have happened is, as one would expect not unfrequented and it is also evident that some of the prosecution witnesses spoke to the presence of other persons at the scene of the occurrence in addition to those who were directly concerned. Prosecution witness 5, for example, said that 10 or 12 elderly men were present at the time of the occurrence, and with reference to the witnesses named in the complaint Jogendra said that of them, Dwijendra Gurudayal, Phanindra and Narendra Sukladas saw the occurrence. None of these witnesses was called in support of the prosecution case. This aspect of the matter is dealt with as follows: The learned Judge says that Jogendra said that Gurudayal belonged to the party of gamblers and that another prosecution witness said that Dwijendra and Phanindra are cousins of Biswanath, that is to say, accused 2 and he adds that as it was not likely that they would depose against their uncle the prosecution did not call them. He goes on as follows:

"It is for you to consider if you will accept this explanation for the non-production of those witnesses."

Then he proceeds to observe that the occurrence admittedly took place near the shop of one Kunja Saha and he alludes to the fact that Kunja Saha has not been called nor any other person frequenting the bazar. Then he proceeds to make some general observation as to the likelihood of the persons engaged in the gambling being desirous of assisting the prosecution. With regard to Kunja and the witnesses who are described as "the bazar people" we do not think that any harm has been done by the omission of the learned Judge to carry the matter further. But we do consider that the learned Judge failed to direct the jury properly as regards the absence of those persons who according to the complainant's case were witnesses to the occurrence. He does, it is true, with regard to three out of the four draw the attention to the explanation which is suggested by the prosecution for their absence and he says that it is for the jury to accept or reject it. But what he does not say is that the jury would be at liberty to draw an inference adverse to the prosecution story if the explanation suggested by the advocate for the prosecution is not acceptable to them.

With regard to witness 4 apparently no explanation was offered but the learned Judge does not call the attention of the jury specifically to this fact. Our attention has been directed to the case of Tenaram Mondal v. Emperor (1) where in circumstances which we do not feel justified in distinguishing from the present, the omission of the trial Judge to direct the jury as to the inference they were entitled to draw if they were not satisfied with the explanation suggested for the absence of material witnesses was held to be a non-direction amounting to a misdirection and to be a good reason for setting aside the conviction of the accused persons. A previous decision of this Court was referred to in that case namely the case of Phanindra Nath Banerjee v. Emperor (2) in which it was said that it is not necessary that the actual word "presumption" should be used. But the two cases taken together seem to indicate that it is necessary that there should be a substantive direction on the part of the learned Judge as to the view of the prosecution which the jury is entitled to adopt if they are not satisfied with the explanation offered for the absence of a witness who is material. We have also been referred to the case of Hachanikhan v. Emperor (3). But this in our opinion merely shows that there may be a case where this omission in the particular circumstances is unimportant.

(2) [1909] 36 Cal. 81=9 Cr. L.J. 452=1 I.C. 970.

In that case it does not seem that it was clearly established that the witness who, it is alleged should have been called, was really a material witness at all. That case differs from the present case. As I have pointed out, from the evidence of the complainant himself there were at least four eyewitnesses to the beginning of the transaction in respect of which the prosecution was eventually launched who were not called. It has been urged that this omission only affects the case in so far as some of the charges are concerned and with regard to the charge of extortion the convictions can stand, inasmuch as it cannot be suggested that the witnesses could have testified as to the subject matter of that charge. We do not agree. Although the charges are concerned with different incidents yet all the incidents are parts of one transaction and we think that it is quite possible that if the jury under a proper direction of the learned Judge were not disposed to accept the prosecution evidence with regard to the commencement of the transaction they would probably have been equally loth to accept the prosecution story with regard to the subsequent transactions.

In the circumstances we direct that the convictions and sentences of the appellants be set aside and that the case be retried. Pending the retrial the appellants will be released on bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

Jack, J.—I agree.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 1404 of 1929, Decided on 16th May 1930.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 25—Excise officer is not police officer.

An excise officer is not a police officer within the meaning of S. 25: A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 527; 45 I. C. 284 and 46 Cal. 411, Foll.; A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 4, not Foll. [P. 1111 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 162—Statement to excise officer not being statement to police officer during investigation is not inadmissible—S. 162 has no application to accused persons.

The accused was charged under S. 46, Excise Act. A statement was made by his co-accused to the Excise Inspector to the effect that as soon as the Excise Inspector came, there was a man with him who ran away.

Held: that it was not a statement made to the police officer in course of investigation under Ss. 160 and 170, Criminal P. C., and was not inadmissible in evidence. Nor was the statement, reduced to writing so as to be inadmissible under S. 162, Criminal P. C. Even if the statement was taken as confession under S. 25, Evidence Act, S. 162, Criminal P. C. did not apply in cases of accused persons: A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 17, Rel on. [P. 1111 C 1, 2]

Santosh Kumar Pal for Sarat Chandra Jana—for Petitioner.

Anil Chandra Ray Chaudhury—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner in this case Tura Sardar has been convicted under S. 46, Excise Act, and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. He was also charged under S. 61, Excise Act read with S. 109, I.P.C., but no sentence was passed under that charge. This rule was granted on two grounds. The first is that any statement made by the co-accused Faizuddin, who was also convicted, to the Excise Inspector and Sub-Inspector is inadmissible under S. 25, Evidence Act. The second ground is that the District Magistrate has not in his judgment found all the facts necessary to sustain the conviction. With regard to the second ground, it may be dismissed in a few words. The learned District Magistrate in a careful judgment has dealt with all the points taken in the grounds of appeal before him. In discussing the points he has entered sufficient findings of his own with regard to the points that require to be proved in support of the conviction. He says that Faizuddin said that on the approach of the Excise Officer the accused ran away and he was caught shortly after in circumstances that showed that he had come hurriedly through mud. The learned Judge believed the witness Santosh and his evidence is enough to convict the accused of the offence charged.

As regards the first ground, Mr. Pal argues that an excise officer is a police officer within the meaning of S. 25, Evidence Act. The point may be arguable, but so far as this Court is concerned it is now res integra. It has been held in several cases that he is not, in Harbhajan Sao v. Emperor (1), Rokumali v. Emperor (2) and Ah Foong Chinaman v. Emperor (3). Reference has been made to a Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court in Naroo Sheikh Ahmed v. Emperor (4). The learned Chief Justice giving the judgment of the Full Bench at p. 93 of the report distinguished the Calcutta case on the ground that Abkari law in Calcutta was different from that in Bombay and that the latter was more stringent than the former. This point is settled by authorities of this Court and as the law now stands an excise officer is not a police officer within the meaning of S. 25, Evidence Act. As a branch of this ground Mr. Pal has also argued that under S. 74, Bengal Excise Act of 1909, an excise officer is a police officer within the meaning of S. 162, Criminal P. C. and any statement made to him cannot be proved against the accused.

Under S. 74, Excise Act whenever an excise officer suspects the commission of an offence he is empowered to investigate it and in carrying on such investigation the powers of a police officer under Ss. 160 to 170, Criminal P. C. have been conferred upon him. It may be reasonable to argue that when the power of investigation under this section has been conferred upon an excise officer it must be taken to have been conferred with all the limitations which the law imposes. But in the present case the question does not arise. The statement objected to by Mr. Pal is the statement of Faizuddin the co-accused who said that as soon as the Excise Inspector came he said that a man had been with him who had run away. That is not a statement which was made in the course of the investigation held under Ss. 160 to 170, Criminal P. C. Nor was that statement reduced in writing as to be made inadmissible under S. 162. What happened was that Faizuddin was arrested on the spot and as soon as the Excise Inspector came there Faizuddin told him that there was a man with him who ran away. This is not a statement made to a police officer under the provisions of any section of the Criminal Procedure Code. Besides, if the statement is taken as a confession under S. 25 which apparently it is not, S. 162, Criminal P. C. does not apply in cases of accused persons: see the case of Azimaddi v. Emperor (5). Both the grounds therefore fail and the rule is discharged.

The petitioner must surrender to his bail and serve out the remainder of the sentence.

(4) A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 4=99 I. C. 330=28 Cr. L. J. 122=51 Bom. 78 (F.B.).

The charge against him was that he gave false information to a certain public servant, the Superintendent of Police, that he and his mother had been unlawfully confined by a certain police officer and that money was extorted wrongly from them. He has moved this Court and has obtained this Rule.

The only ground which it is necessary for me to deal with is ground 3, namely that the offence falls under S. 211, I. P. C., and therefore not triable summarily. Mt. Bhattacharji who appears for the Crown admits himself that the case is an important one and that he would prefer that the accused should be, under the ordinary procedure, tried on a charge under S. 211. There is, I think, no question but that the charge against the petitioner does fall under S. 211, I. P. C. This point was decided by the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Karim Buksh v. Queen-Empress (1) where it was held that a person who sets the criminal law in motion by making a false charge to the police of a cognizable offence institutes criminal proceedings within the meaning of S. 211, I. P. C. In this case the allegation against the petitioner is that he has made a false report to Mr. Hunt, the Superintendent of Police, that certain persons had wrongfully confined him and his mother. Now the wrongful confinement of the petitioner's mother would fall under S. 342, I. P. C. S. 342 admittedly is a cognizable offence. Therefore it is clear that the present charge against the accused does fall under S. 211 and that therefore he should not have been tried summarily. I therefore set aside the conviction and sentence against the accused and order that the petitioner should be retried under S. 211, I. P. C., or any other section that may be applicable.

In this view it is unnecessary to deal with the other grounds on which also the Rule was issued. The Rule is accordingly made absolute. The fine if already paid will be refunded.

JACK AND PANCKRIDGE, JJ.

Hafezali Haldar—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Criminal Appeal No. 25 of 1930, Decided on 25th July 1930.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 367 and 423 (2)—Head of charges to jury enumerated only by sections—Before High Court can interfere with verdict on ground of insufficiency of record, misdirection and misunderstanding of law causing erroneous verdict must be proved.

Although it is desirable that the record of heads of charges should indicate far more fully than mere enumeration of the numbers of the sections, in order to entitle the High Court to interfere with the verdict of the jury and set it aside, it must be affirmatively proved that there has been misdirection and misunderstanding and the verdict is erroneous owing to misdirection by Judge and misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him: Cr. App. No. 248 of 1929 and 47 Cal. 796, Ref. [P 1119 C 1]

Gregory and Sures Chandra Taluqdar—for Appellant.

Debendra Nath Bhattacharjya and Kiron Mohan Sircar—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J.—This is an appeal by one Hafezali Haldar who has been convicted by a verdict of a jury of offences punishable under Ss. 148 and 326, I. P. C.

The ground of appeal which has been urged before us is that the recording of the heads of the charge is insufficient and the criticism is based upon the fact that the heads of the charge do not reveal the way in which the learned Sessions Judge explained the sections under which the accused has been charged. Nor the sections concerned with the exercise of the right of private defence on which the accused relied. In the heads of the charge there is a paragraph which runs as follows :

"Sections 141, 142, 146 to 148, 319 to 322, 326, 201, I. P. C., explained; Ss. 96, 97, 99 to 106 I. P. C. explained. Charges explained."

The learned advocate appearing for the Crown concedes that it is highly desirable that the heads of the charge should indicate far more fully than has been done here what the learned Sessions Judge has said in his explanation of the law to the jury and there are many reported cases dealing with the form which record of the learned Sessions Judge's direction on the law should take. Among others we were referred to the observation of Sanderson, C. J., in the case of Kasimuddin Nasya v. Emperor (1). But in spite of this the learned advocate for the Crown argued that before we were justified in setting aside the verdict of the jury on the ground which I have indicated we must be in a position to come to the conclusion under S. 423, sub-S. (2), Criminal P. C., that the verdict is erroneous owing to misdirection by the Judge or misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him, and he says that it is for the appellant to show affirmatively that there has been such misdirection or misunderstanding. He is supported in this contention by an unreported case decided by Graham and Lort-Williams, J.J., in Appeal No. 248 of 1929 where the point urged here on behalf of the appellant was taken and the Court pointed out that in no case had the verdict of a jury been set aside solely on the ground that the heads of a charge were in the form with which we are dealing in the present case, and that in the opinion of the Court the provisions of sub-S. (2), S. 423, were effective to prevent a Court from interfering with the verdict of a jury on this ground alone. It is also pointed out on behalf of the Crown that, although we do not know exactly what the learned Judge said to the jury as to the right of private defence, yet in concluding his charge he gave direction to the jury that, unless they were satisfied with the evidence of possession by the complainant's party they were bound to acquit the accused, thereby leaving out of account the possibility of their right of private defence being exceeded. We do not think that there is any substance in the other criticism which has been directed against the charge and it seems to us that the learned Judge dealt with sufficient fullness with the inference which the jury were entitled to draw from the failure to examine witnesses who in his opinion should have been examined.

In the circumstances, we do not think that the present case is distinguishable from the unreported case to which we have already referred and we agree with the reasons given therein.

Criminal Revn. No. 857 of 1929, Decided on 31st July 1929, from order of Ch. Presy. Magistrate, Calcutta, D/- 19th June 1929.

Penal Code (1860), S. 290—Annoyance to members of single house is not public nuisance.

Per Jack, J.—To constitute a public nuisance as contemplated by S. 290, the annoyance must actually be caused to people in general occupying property in the vicinity. Consequently, because the residents of a single house are annoyed by the noise of a theatre, the house holder is not entitled to prosecute unless he can show that the noise annoys other people living in the vicinity: Soltan v. de Helit, (1851) 2 Sim. (N.S.) 193; Allen v. Lloyd, (1802), 170 E. R. 691, Ref.; A. I. R. 1924 All. 194, Dist. (Suhrawardy, J., Dubitante). [P 1114 C 1]

S.N. Banerji, S. K. Sen and Satindra-nath Mukherji—for Applicant.

B. C. Chatterji and Manindra Nath Mukerji—for Opposite Party.

Jack, J.—The petitioner is one of the proprietors of the Chinese Theatre Studio on Chittaranjan Avenue. He has been convicted under S. 290, I. P. C., of committing a public nuisance by the annoyance caused by the sounds made by his theatre band, in connexion with performances at the theatre from 12 noon to 4 p. m. and 8 p. m. to midnight every day.

The only ground for revision seriously urged is that the prosecution has failed to prove the existence of a public nuisance inasmuch as it has not been shown that annoyance has been caused to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity in accordance with the terms of S. 268, I. P. C. defining "public nuisance." On this point the finding of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate is as follows:

"It is suggested that this is not a public but a private nuisance. Some Mahomedans have been called by the complainant to help him over the difficulty. I doubt if their grievance is very genuine. I imagine they are less susceptible to noise. But, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, as shown by the plans, the complainant and his tenants, represent substantially the public in general who dwell and occupy property in the vicinity. The complainant's house is at present the only substantially inhabited property in the neighbourhood. The rest is mostly open space, or covered by small huts. If these were occupied by buildings inhabited by people who would say they did not mind the noise (e.g., Chinese) the matter might be different. But the accused has not called a single person living in the vicinity to contradict the evidence given by the prosecution."

The learned Magistrate finds that:

"partly owing to the proximity of the theatre to the complainant's building and partly owing to the unusual nature of the sounds which constitute Chinese music, the complainant and his tenants have a genuine grievance."

On the findings, it appears that the only persons affected are those occupying the end of the complainant's building next the theatre. Not more than seven or eight persons in all occupy these rooms. Of these four including the complainant, have been examined and say that they are annoyed by the noise from the theatre especially at night. The question then is whether the annoyance of these few residents of a single house is sufficient to show that the noise made by the theatre band constitutes a public nuisance, i. e., whether it can be said to cause annoyance to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity. There are practically no other people occupying property in the vicinity except the occupants of some huts, the nearest of which is 30 or 40 yards from the front of the theatre. That the other people are affected I do not believe on the evidence or findings of the Magistrate. Taking it for granted that, at the time complained of, the noise was sufficiently loud to seriously annoy the residents of the end rooms of the Silas building, which is built almost right against the stage end of the theatre, it does not follow that it would necessarily cause annoyance to the residents of other buildings in the vicinity, except those very close to the stage end of the theatre. But there are in fact no other people dwelling in the vicinity within unpleasant range of the noise or music of the band. In these circumstances the noise can hardly be called a public nuisance.

In the case of Soltan v. De Held (1), the Vice-Chancellor held that a peal of bells which caused a nuisance to the residents of the adjoining house could not be called a public nuisance. "If," he says,

"the thing complained of is such that it is a great nuisance to those who are more immediately within the sphere of its operation but no nuisance or inconvenience whatever, or is but advantageous or pleasurable to those who are more removed from it, it does not, I conceive, come within the meaning of the term "public nuisance." •

In the case of Allen v. Lloyd (2) it was held that the noise made by a tinman which was a nuisance to occupants of three sets of chambers of Clifford's Inn close by, did not constitute a public nuisance, not being sufficiently general in extent to support an indictment. This decision is authority for the contention that where only a very limited number are affected the nuisance does not amount to a public nuisance.

The learned advocate for the prosecution has referred the case of Lallu Ram v. Emperor (3). This was a case apparently under a Municipal Act affecting people passing along a public thoroughfare and has no application to the facts of the present case. It is not, in my opinion sufficient to say that the complainant and three or four of his tenants represent the people in general who occupy property in the vicinity. To constitute a public nuisance as contemplated by S. 290 the annoyance must actually be caused to people in general occupying property in the vicinity. Because the residents of a single house are annoyed by the noise of a theatre, the house holder is not entitled to prosecute, unless he can show that the noise annoys other people living in the vicinity. There is not sufficient proof of this in the present case. I therefore think that the conviction and sentence should be set aside, the accused acquitted and the fine if paid refunded.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree with my learned brother, though not without some hesitation. It may be argued that the evidence falls short of establishing an indictable nuisance.

Criminal Revn. No. 788 of 1929, Decided on 9th May 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 145 — Order under S. 145 presupposes the existing likelihood of breach of peace.

It is necessary for making an order under S. 145 that the Magistrate should be satisfied at the time of drawing up the proceedings that there is then existing a likelihood of breach of the peace arising from the disputes between the parties with regard to the land in question. The making of an order, therefore, some months after the report on which it was purported to be passed, cannot be supported. [P 1116 C 1]

Costello, J.—This is an application under S. 439, Criminal P. C., in respect of an order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Satkhira on 22nd December 1928 under the provisions of S. 145, Criminal P. C. The proceedings which eventually resulted in making that order were protracted to a most remarkable extent. For it appears that the proceedings out of which the order finally emerged, began by a report made by the police to the Magistrate in question on 18th January of the year 1926 when he reported that there was a likelihood of trouble between the contending parties who were disputing possession to a certain plot of land. Actually before that date some of the parties had been brought before a Court for the purpose of being bound over under the terms of S. 107, Criminal P. C. These proceedings ultimately terminated. But apparently nothing more was done in respect of the proceedings under S. 145 until 9th June 1926 when they were dropped and fresh proceedings with amended boundaries with regard to the properties were drawn up on 27th, July 1926 and the lands in dispute were then attached. The matter, as I have said, dragged on from that date until December 1928. The real question which we have to decide is whether or not the learned Magistrate was right in drawing up proceedings in July 1926 which were purported to be based on the police report of January 1926 and upon nothing else.

It has been urged before us that it cannot rightly be said that in July 1926 there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace between the contesting parties by reason of the situation as it had previously existed in January 1926. We are not concerned with the question of the subsequent delay as between July 1926 and December 1928.
But one cannot help remarking in passing that this proceeding seems to have taken a course which never could have been contemplated by the terms of S. 145 which after all are designed to secure that a status quo should be preserved and a breach of the peace prevented as between the two disputing parties or sets of disputing parties pending the time one side or the other should have recourse to a civil Court in order that their rights with regard to the land might be finally determined.
It is to be borne in mind that by S. 145, sub-S. (1), the Magistrate of the class therein referred to is to make an order in writing if he is satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof. The condition precedent for making an order of the kind contemplated is that a breach of the peace is likely. The meaning of the word "likely" has been considered in a number of reported cases and on the whole the decisions indicate, I think, that the word "likely" indicates some degree of futurity though it has been said that the word "likely" does not mean imminent or immediately to happen. We may take it for the purpose of this section that the word "likely" is to be treated as if it is synonymous with the word "probable."
In the present instance the police reported as far back as January 1926 that a breach of the peace was then likely or anticipated if no steps were taken, and the matter was recorded by the Magistrate as one of emergency; in other words it was considered in January 1926 that the matter was urgent.
So that the position was that in January 1926 a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed. I use the word "existed" advisedly, because the word in the section is "exists." That means that there must be a dispute in existence which is likely to cause a breach of the peace at the time when the order is made. Now there is nothing to show that the state of affairs which existed in January 1926 still existed in July 1926 so far as it appears from the order which the Magistrate made some two years later. We therefore think, from the actual wording of the section itself, that the making of an order some months after the report on which it was purported to be passed, cannot be supported. There are authorities for that view in cases which unfortunately we have not had the advantage of seeing because the reports in which they appear are not available. Apparently it was held in 2 Criminal Law Review 85, which is cited in Aiyar's Book of Criminal Procedure Code that if the circumstance was that there was danger in the past, proceedings based on a likelihood of a breach of the peace six months previous to the date of the preliminary order would be illegal. There is also another case Chhidalal reported in 2 P. L. T. 650, where it appears to have been decided that proceedings cannot be started on the basis of a police report more than three months old, there being no likelihood of a breach of the peace when the Magistrate actually drew up the proceedings. Now that seems to me to be a reasonable interpretation to be put upon the terms of the section. It is necessary for making an order of this description that the Magistrate should be satisfied at the time of drawing up the proceedings that there is then existing a likelihood of breach of the peace arising from the disputes between the parties with regard to the land in question.

Taking that view of the matter we think that this order of the Magistrate must be set aside. That will be without prejudice to the making of any fresh order if this or any other Magistrate is satisfied that there is a likelihood of any breach of the peace existing at the time when the matter comes before him. The rule is made absolute in these terms.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

PEARSON AND JACK, JJ.

Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal—Appellant.

v.

Benozir Ahmad—Accused — Respondent.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 455, 525, 543 and 590 of 1929, Decided on 28th March 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Noakhali, D/- 18th May 1929.

*Criminal P. C., S. 537 — Accused jointly tried under Penal Code Ss. 302 and 304 and other sections—Jury constituted of seven persons only—Judge not considering whether it was not practicable to have jury of nine — Such constitution of jury is illegality not curable under S. 537 — No appeal against acquittal under Ss. 302 and 304 is immaterial.

Where accused are tried jointly under Ss. 302 and 304 and some other sections, Penal Code, and the jury is constituted only of seven persons, the Judge speaking of nine as the required number, and never considering the question whether it was not practicable to have a jury of 9 persons, the jury is illegally constituted, and the illegality cannot be cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C. The fact that no appeal was preferred against acquittal under Ss. 302 and 304 makes no difference. All the accused are affected by the illegality; A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 60, Appl. [P 1117 C1]

Jogesh Chandra Sinha, B. C. Chatterjee, Suresh Ch. Talukdar and Mohendra Kumar Ghose — for Appellant.

D. N. Bhattacharjee—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The nine accused in this case were charged with offences under Ss. 120-B/395, 399, 402, I. P. C., also under Ss. 304/34 and 326/34 and 326/109 in respect of the death of one Idris. In addition, two of the accused namely Shamsul Huda and Benozir Ahmad, were charged under S. 302 with the murder of one Harimohan Roy and another accused Oliulla with abetment of the murder.

The jury found all the accused not guilty of the charges relating to the deaths of Idris and Harimohan. Six of the nine accused were found guilty under Ss. 120-B, 395, 399 and 402, in the case of Oliulla by a majority of 4 to 3, and in the case of the other five unanimously. Benozir Ahmad was found not guilty and acquitted also of the charges under those sections by a majority of 5 to 2. In the case of Benozir Ahmad the Government has appealed against his acquittal of the charges under Ss. 120-B/395, 399 and 402 and the accused who have been convicted have appealed against their conviction.

It is argued first of all that the trial has been vitiated owing to the defective constitution of the jury, which consisted of only seven persons. Only fourteen jurors were summoned in the case, of whom six were absent when called, one was exempted and one discharged on objection, leaving therefore six empanelled without objection. Another person who was on the list of special jurors and happened to be present in Court was taken in "to complete the number of seven." From the record it would appear that the learned Judge never applied his mind to the question whether nine jurors were not required under the provisions of S. 274 Criminal P.C. He speaks of seven as being the "required number." It does not appear anywhere that it was not practicable to have a jury of nine persons, or that the Judge ever took that question into consideration. The result is that the trial has been held with a jury illegally constituted, and this has been utilized as a ground of appeal not only by the accused appellants but by the Crown appellant. It is true that the Crown is not appealing in so far as the acquittal was on the charges under Ss. 302 and 304, I. P. C., but that can make no difference to the illegality of the trial, and as the accused were tried jointly they are all affected by the illegality. He thinks it is clear that this is not a class of illegality which can be treated as curable under S. 537, Criminal P. C. It is a case where we think that the principle of Dwarika Malo v. Emperor (1) must be applied.

We accordingly allow the appeals. The verdict of acquittal in Benozir's case is reversed and we direct that he be retried. In the case of the accused appellants we reverse the findings and sentences and direct that they be retried. The retrial in all cases will be limited to the charges under Ss. 120-B/395, 399 and 402, I. P. C.

The accused Benozir Ahmad who is now on bail will remain on the same bail until further orders of the Sessions Judge.

Criminal Appeal No. 577 of 1929, Decided on 16th April 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Pabna, D/- 27th June 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 234 and 222 (2) — Charge under S. 408, Penal Code, specifying gross sums as also items misappropriated in one year is good charge.

Where an accused person is charged under S. 408, I.P.C., with having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum of money misappropriated by him within the period of one year and the charge not only specifies the gross sum taken and the dates between which it was taken, but also sets out the items composing such gross sum giving the dates and the amounts alleged to have been misappropriated, the charge comes within the provisions of Cl. (2), S. 222, Criminal P. Where in his charge to the jury in a trial for an offence under S. 408, I. P. C., with regard to a gross sum said to have been misappropriated within a year, and composed of items more than three in number, the Judge instead of inviting verdict in respect of charge under S. 408 asked the jury to give their verdict in respect of the charge as laid against the accused on the several items and the jury returned a verdict of guilty as regards some of the items only and not guilty as regards others and the Judge convicted the accused under S. 408. Held: that though the form in which verdict was asked for and expressed was wrong, proper form being simply to ask jury their verdict in respect of an offence under S. 408, the defect was one of form and did not prejudicially affect the accused. ment. The main point urged before us is that the form of the charge is bad in law as being contrary to the provisions of S. 234, Criminal P. O. The facts are that the accused had been employed as a supervisor under the Pabna Central Bank to which there were affiliated various rural co-operative societies in police stations Pabna and Sujanagar and the charge against him is that between November 1925 and October 1926 he at various places within the jurisdiction of the police stations at Pabna and Sujanagar, being a servant in the employment of the Pabna Central Co-operative Bank, Ltd. and being entrusted as such servant with the duty of realising for and crediting to the said bank the debts due to the said bank from various co-operative societies within the said jurisdiction committed criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 7,745-12-0 which he realized from rural societies on behalf of the said Central Bank in various sums as shown in some 38 exhibits and that he wrongly misappropriated the same without crediting the said amounts to the Pabna Central Bank. It appears that on the report of an auditor by name Bhujanga Bhusan Maitra dated 25th December 1926 the police took up the case but the accused was not to be found until 26th November 1928 when he was arrested in Calcutta. The defence put forward was that the whole matter was a false prosecution, that he never had any written or verbal directions that he should realize money from the village societies and credit the same to the Central Bank, that the exhibits on which the prosecution was based were all forged and that the secretaries of the rural societies combined against him because he enforced certain duties on them. He explained his disappearance by saying that he had gone to Calcutta by reason of some illness. The objection taken by Mr. Huq is, as I have already stated, to the form of the charge and that is the fact that the prosecution specified not only the gross sum said to have been misappropriated but also the items of which that sum was made up. Mr. Huq argues that S. 234, Criminal P. O., controls the provision of S. 222. S. 234 provides :

"When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind committed within the space of 12 months from the first to the last of such offences, whether in respect of the same person or not, he may be charged with and tried at one trial, for any number of them not exceeding three."

It is to be observed that that section relates to a number of offences of the same kind whether charged in respect of the same person or not, whereas S. 222 relates specifically to a charge of the kind with which we are now concerned. The object of that section is to ensure that the accused may have as full particulars as possible of the accusations made against him; and in sub-S. (1) it provides that the charge shall contain such particulars as to the time and place of the alleged offence, and the person (if any) against whom or the thing (if any) in respect of which it was committed as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged. To put the matter in other words, it provides that all reasonable information shall be given as to enable the accused person to know the nature of the charges he has to answer. Sub-S. (2), which is the one material in the present case, in a sense is a qualification of the general proposition contained in sub-S. (1) because it says that when the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed, without specifying particular items or exact dates and the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of S. 234. It is obvious from the language of that section that in a case of charge of the character mentioned in the subsection the necessity for particularity is cut down in that it provides that it is sufficient for the prosecution merely to specify the lump sum without stating the particular items of which it is made up, provided that the lump sum is said to have been misappropriated within the space of one year. In the case now before us the prosecution so far from confining themselves to their exact rights as given in the subsection went out of their way to give more than what the subsection requires. That is to say, not only was the gross sum specified but also the several items of which it is composed. Mr. Huq argues that that was an embarrassment and would prejudice the accused. It is obvious that so far from that being the case, the giving of particulars was an advantage to the accused and not the reverse. This matter has been before this Court on previous occasion and it was not really open to argument. The case of Samiruddin Sarkar v. Nibaran Chandra Ghose (1) is exactly in point. The head-note is as follows:

"Where an accused person was charged under S. 408, Penal Code with having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum of money misappropriated by him within the period of one year and the charge not only specified the gross sum taken and the dates between which it was taken, but also set out the items, 22, in number composing such gross sum giving the dates and the amount alleged to have been misappropriated on each date: Held, that the charge came within the provisions of Cl. 2, S. 222, Criminal P. C., and that by specifying the items composing the gross sum the charge went beyond what was necessary and was to that extent favourable to the accused."

This case followed the previous case of Emperor v. Gulzari Lal (2). The matter has not only been considered by this Court but has also come before other High Courts. In 1906 in the case of Thomas v. Emperor (3) it was held that S. 222, Criminal P. C., does not apply only to cases where there is a general deficiency and the prosecution is unable to specify the particular items of the deficiency but also the cases where the items may be, but are not, specified. In other words, if the prosecution are in a position to specify the items which show exactly how the gross sum is made up, they can either content themselves by putting the gross sum without any further detail or they can if they wish go beyond what the section requires them to do and specify the items of which the amount is composed. It has been pointed out by the Court in the case just mentioned that "if the legislature intended only to apply S. 222 to cases where there is a general deficiency in an account and the prosecution is unable to specify the particular items of the deficiency, it could have found apt words in which to express the intention." The words used do not contain any such limitation and we are not justified in reading into the section a limitation which its language will not support."

The same point was before the Allahabad High Court in 1910 in the case of Emperor v. Ibrahim Khan (4) where a similar decision was arrived at. It seems to us therefore that the point raised by Mr. Huq is not open to question.

In this particular case it is to be regretted that the learned Judge put his judgment in the form in which we find it. He had previously asked the jury what their verdict was in these terms:

"What is your verdict in respect of the charge under S. 408, I. P. C., and laid against the accused on the 38 items set forth in the charge?"

Thereupon the foreman said:

"Our unanimous verdict is that the accused is not guilty in respect of 3 items viz., Exs. 25 (6), 25 (7) and 25 (8), but that he is guilty under S. 408, I. P. C., in respect of the remaining 35 items."

And then the learned Judge in passing the sentence in respect of the 35 items which he mentioned says:

"the accused Ibrahim is convicted under S. 408, I. P. C., and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for four years. The accused stands acquitted in respect of the 3 items Exs. 25 (6), 25 (7) and 25 (8)."

The form in which that was expressed seems to suggest that the misappropriation of each item constituted a separate offence. It is perhaps by reason of that that Mr. Huq was able to light upon what might be a good point of attack in this appeal. At first sight that may seem to be covered by S. 234. But it is obvious from an examination of the whole case that that is merely a question of form and not of substance because the charge against the accused was primarily of misappropriation of the total sum of Rs. 7,745-12-0. The right way of looking at it is that the prosecution charged him with having misappropriated a specified sum of money. It would have been sufficient for the Judge to have asked the jury "what is your verdict in respect of the charge under S. 408? Is the accused guilty or not," without requiring the jury to specify the items for which they convicted him. However it is clear to us that it in no way prejudiced the accused; and we are satisfied that there is nothing in the suggestion made. The summing up is perfectly clear and quite

N. K. Bose and Nurul Huq Chowdhury—for Petitioners.

N. N. Bose—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—In the case out of which this rule arises the petitioners Abdul Sattar and Abdul Hamid have been convicted under S. 448 and S. 323, I. P. C., and sentenced under S. 448 to pay a fine of Rs. 250 each. No separate sentence was passed with regard to the conviction under S. 323, I. P. C. The case for the prosecution was that the two petitioners went with a Naib Nazir of the civil Court and some peons to execute a decree for ejectment from a house in Dacca which they had obtained against their sister's husband Muhammad Ali. On their arrival the delivery of possession was opposed by the complainant in the case on the ground that the house belongs to her and that she was not a party to the decree. It is alleged that in the absence of Mohammad Ali the complainant's husband, the petitioners and other persons forcibly dragged the complainant out of the house. The case for the defence was that they went to execute the civil Court decree and that they had not assaulted the complainant.

On the facts as found by both the lower Courts it is quite clear that the conviction under S. 448, I. P. C., cannot stand. It is clear from the facts found that the two petitioners went to the house with civil Court officers and entered the house not for the purpose of intimidating, insulting or annoying any person or to commit any offence, but to execute a civil Court decree which they had obtained against one of the occupants of the house. It does not seem to be suggested that the decree was obtained by fraud. The Naib Nazir had to make over possession to them, and to do that they could enter the house with him as they did and receive possession from him. In such circumstances no conviction for criminal trespass can possibly stand.

So far as regards the charge of assault is concerned the learned Judge has found that the petitioners dragged the complainant who happens to be their sister out of the house. O. 21 R. 35, provides that "where a decree is for the delivery of any immovable property, possession thereof shall be delivered to the party to whom it has been adjudged or to such person as he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf, and, if necessary by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property."

The complainant was not a party to the decree and therefore the two petitioners were not entitled to forcibly remove her. The proper procedure so far as she was concerned no doubt would have been by way of an application under O. 21, R. 98; therefore by forcibly removing the complainant from the house they were clearly guilty of assault. The conviction under S. 323, I. P. C., must therefore stand. As far as can be understood from the evidence the assault was not a very serious one. No doubt she alleged that they kicked her and beat her. The learned Judge found that they merely removed her forcibly from the house. I think the ends of justice will be met by sentencing the petitioners to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each under S. 323, I. P. C., and I order accordingly. In default of payment of fines they will undergo simple imprisonment for one week. The fines, if realized, will be given to the complainant as compensation.

The convictions and sentences under S. 448, I. P. C., are set aside and the fines, if paid, must be refunded.

(Inuganti) Venkata Surya Neeladri Rao—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 739 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 669 of 1929, Decided on 13th March 1930, from order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Peddapur, D/- 4th June 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C. (as amended in 1923). S. 147—As to the right of person to flow of water Magistrate need not find that easement strictly so called is established.

As to the right of the person to the flow of water down a channel, it is not necessary for the Magistrate to find that a right of easement strictly so called is established. All that he has to find is that the person has been for long time using the water flowing down the channel and has in fact used it during the last season.

(b) Criminal P. C. (as amended in 1923), S. 147—Order prohibiting counter-petitioner from putting up bunds across channel in their field and from retaining any obstruction to petitioner's use of water flowing along the channel in their field is competent even under amended S. 147.*

Where the Magistrate passes under S. 147 an order prohibiting the counter-petitioners from putting up any bunds across a channel in their field, and from interfering with the petitioner's removing the obstructions already put up, the order requires to be amended by omitting the words "from interfering with the petitioner's removing the obstructions already put up" and substituting therefor the words "from retaining any obstruction to the petitioner's use of the water flowing along the channel in their field," inasmuch as such an order is likely to cause a recurrence of breach of the peace, which such orders are intended to prevent, but the Magistrate is competent to pass an order in the amended form, even under S. 147 as amended in 1923: A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 991, not foll.; 26 I.C. 730, Appl. [P 1122 C 1; P 1123 C 1]

V. Ramadoss and K. Subba Rao—for Petitioner.

Ramchandra Rao—for Respondent.

Order.—This is a petition by the first counter-petitioner in the lower Court to revise an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Peddapur passed under S. 147, Criminal P. C., "prohibiting the respondents from putting up any bunds across the channel in their field and from interfering with the petitioner's removing the obstructions already put up," namely "the four small cross-bunds and that part of the bund higher up which is across the channel and no further."

Three objections are raised to this order:

(1) That there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace on which such an order could be justified; (2) that the Magistrate had not found, as he ought to have done, that the petitioner was entitled to the use of the water flowing down the channel in question; and (3) that the terms of the order passed by the Magistrate are in violation of S. 147 according to which an order in the nature of a mandatory injunction ought not to be passed.

As to the likelihood of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate has in my opinion given good reasons for thinking that there was such likelihood. Proceedings were started on 27th December 1928 by an application by the petitioner in the Magistrate's Court for action under S. 144. The counter-petitioners sought to defeat that petition by the plea that the apprehended obstruction to the water-course was already completed, but the petitioner represented that such was not the case. Thereupon on 19th February 1929, a preliminary order under S. 147 was passed, the previous order under S. 144 being vacated. In these circumstances the Magistrate was justified in thinking that the danger of a breach of the peace was not over.

As to the right of the petitioner to the flow of water down this channel, it was not necessary for the Magistrate to find that a right of easement strictly so called was established. S. 147 says "whether such right be claimed as an easement or otherwise." All that he had to find, and which he has in fact found, is that the petitioner had been for a long time using the water flowing down this channel and had in fact used it during the last monsoon.

The last is perhaps the most important objection and arises upon the form of words, used by the Magistrate in framing the order, which I have already set forth at the beginning of this judgment. To the first portion no objection can be taken because it merely prohibits the counter-petitioners from putting up any bunds across the channel in their field. But objection is taken that the latter half of the order, where it prohibits interference with the petitioner's removing the obstructions already put up, amounts really to an order requiring the counter-petitioners to remove the bund which they have already put up and this, it is contended, the Magistrate has no power to do. This portion of the order as it stands indicates that the Magistrate thought that the petitioner might lawfully remove any portion of the bund which was obstructing the flow of the water and that he intended to prevent the counter-petitioners from interfering with the petitioner in exercising such right of removing the obstruction. The order does not really require the counter-petitioners to do anything. All that it says is that if the petitioner removes the obstruction, the counter-petitioners are to do nothing. I think this form of order is unsuitable, if not objectionable, if for no other reason than that it is likely to produce a recurrence of breach of the peace which such orders are intended to prevent. It contemplates the petitioner going upon the counter-petitioner's land and removing the bund and it requires the counter-petitioners to let him do so without hindrance. Such a situation is easily capable of producing a breach of the peace. That portion of the order therefore requires amendment.

But I will first deal with the objection of the learned advocate for the petitioner here (counter-petitioner below) that an order in the nature of a mandatory injunction must not be passed under S. 147. For this reliance was placed upon a decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Hari Mati Dasi v. Hari Dasi Dasi (1). In that case the first party complained that the second party raised a wall on her own land blocking the windows of the house of the first party thereby shutting out light and air from the rooms of the house. The Magistrate having found that light and air was obstructed as alleged made an order upon the second party that she should demolish the new wall within a period of one month. The learned Judges said that sub-S. 2, S. 147, does not give the Magistrate any power of directing one of the parties to do a positive act by way of a mandatory injunction directing him to demolish the wall built by her, and they further said that the power given under S. 147 (2) is analogous to the power of a civil Court to grant a temporary injunction. Against that decision of the Calcutta High Court, there is the decision of a Bench of this Court in Karuppanna Goundan v. Kandasami Goundan (2). In that case a pathway had been obstructed and the Magistrate had ordered that the obstruction, which was a fence, should be removed by the party who had put it up. The point being raised that that order was incorrect on the same ground as that now urged for the petitioner here, this Court held, after referring to two earlier decisions of this Court that such an argument was not maintainable. Their Lordships said that they were not prepared to follow those decisions if it was intended to decide therein that the fact that S. 133, Criminal P. C., expressly provides for an order by the Magistrate directing the removal of obstruction to pathways necessarily implies that a similar order cannot be passed in proceedings taken under S. 147, Criminal F. C. This decision of a Bench of this High Court is binding upon me. But it is said that that decision was given under the old Criminal Procedure Code and that S. 147 as amended in 1923 makes such an order illegal though it may have been possible under the old Code. With that argument I cannot agree.

Section 147, Criminal P. C., before it was amended in 1923, dealt, like the present section, with disputes concerning the right of use of any land or water and it enabled the Magistrate, if such right was found to exist, to make an order permitting such a thing to be done or directing that such a thing should not be done. The corresponding provision of the section as it now stands is that if a dispute exists "regarding any alleged right of user of any land or water" the Magistrate is empowered on his being satisfied about the existence of such a right, whether it be claimed as an easement or otherwise, to "make an order prohibiting any interference with the exercise of such right." The order under the old section was directed to the person alleging that he was entitled to the right. The order under the new section is, where the right exists, directed to the person who is interfering with the right. Such an order is valid so long as it merely prohibits the interference with the exercise of the right. I do not see how from this difference any inference is to be derived as to the propriety or otherwise of what may be generally called mandatory injunctions. Indeed Form No. 24, Sch. 5, Criminal P. C., seems rather to favour the argument that what might in effect amount to a mandatory injunction is permissible. In that form, in para. 2, the words of the order that the Magistrate may pass are:

"I do order . . . shall not take (or retain) possession of the said land (or water) to the exclusion of the enjoyment of the right of use aforesaid." . . .

That form is applicable to the use of land or water and it contemplates an order against a person who has interfered with another man's use of land or water that he shall not retain possession of that land or water in violation of that user. In one sense it may be said that that is a mandatory injunction because it requires the person enjoined to give up possession to the other party. I do not see what objection can be raised to using the same form as against a person who has put up an obstruction to the flow of water to which another man is entitled, modified in the following way.

"I order that . . . shall not retain any obstruction to the flow of water along the said channel to the exclusion of the enjoyment of the right of user of . . ."

or words to that effect; or alternatively,

"I order that . . . shall not retain possession of the said water to the exclusion of the enjoyment of the right of user of . . ."

Either form would amount to the same thing in effect and involve upon the person enjoined the removal of any obstruction which he had put up. I am therefore unable to say that the amendment of S. 147 has had any effect in so far as making the decision in Karuppanna Goundan v. Kandasami Goundan (2) inapplicable.

As however the form of order used by the Magistrate is not suitable, that order will be amended by omitting the words "from interfering with the petitioner's removing the obstructions already put up" and substituting therefor the words

"from retaining any obstruction to the petitioner's use of the water flowing along the channel in their field."

With this amendment the petition is dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 990 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 893 of 1929, Decided on 23rd July 1930, from order of First Class Bench Magistrate, Guntur.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 265—Judgment of Bench of Magistrates must be signed, i. e. not merely initialled but full name of Magistrate must be written—If one of Magistrates of Bench merely initials, that irregularity cannot be cured by Criminal P. C., S. 537.

A judgment of a Bench of Magistrates has to be signed as required by law and the requirements of public policy necessitate the writing of the full name of the Magistrate who signs the judgment and the mere putting in of the initials is not a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 265 of the Code. Where one of the three Magistrates of a Bench merely initials instead of signing his name, the irregularity cannot be cured by S. 537: 25 Cal. 911; 82 I. C. 393; 23 Cal. 896 and A. I. Order.—This is a petition by accused 1 to 3 against the conviction and sentence of fine passed by the First Class Bench at Guntur. The charge against these accused was under Ss. 504 and 352, I. P. C. Apart from the merits of the case, one objection that is taken against the legality of the conviction is, in my opinion, sufficient to set it aside. It is clear from the register of summary trials, maintained by the aforesaid Bench, that the judgment has in fact been signed only by two of the three Magistrates who heard and decided the case, the other having only initialled it. The mandatory provision in S. 265, Criminal P. C., is to the effect, that preted in some judicial decisions and that meaning can be safely adopted for purposes of the present case. In the two decisions of the Calcutta High Court, namely Nirmal Chunder Bandopadhyaya v. Saratmoni Debya (1) at p. 915 and Mohabarsha Bankapore v. Secy. of State (2), the word "signing" has been taken to mean the writing of the name of the person who is the signatory, so that it may convey a distinct idea to others that the writing indicates a particular individual whose signature it purports to be. This question was considered in the first case in respect of a will, and in the other case as regards a risk-note to be signed and delivered to the Railway Company. In another Calcutta case, namely Abdul Gafur v. Queen-Empress (3), the same question arose in connexion with a warrant of arrest issued by a criminal Court. That warrant was not signed by the Magistrate as required by S. 75, Criminal P. C., but it bore only his initials. The legality of the warrant so issued was questioned and it was held that the warrant was not signed as required by law. In view of this defect and some other defect pointed out in that judgment it was held that the person obstructing the execution of such a warrant could not be convicted under S. 186, I. P. C. In a decision of this Court reported in Lakshmanacharyulu v. Venkataramanujacharyulu (4) it was held that for purposes of a valid acknowledgment under S. 19, Lim. Act, initials are not equivalent to signature. Though there is no direct authority in respect of the word "signed" occurring in S. 265, Cl. 2, Criminal P. C., the meaning attached to that word in the aforesaid decisions can well nigh be applied to it. A judgment of a Bench of Magistrates has to be signed as required by law and the requirements of public policy necessitate the writing of the full name of the Magistrate that signs the judgment, and the mere putting in of the initials is not, in my opinion, a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 265 of the Code.

"a judgment shall be signed by each member of the Bench present taking part in the proceedings."

There is no definition of the word "sign" in the Criminal Procedure Code.

In this connexion it must be considered whether the initialing by one of the Magistrates in the judgment in question, instead of signing, is only an irregularity which can be cured under S. 537, Criminal P. C. In the old Code, an illustration was added to S. 537 as follows:

"The Magistrate being required by law to sign a document signs it by initials only. This is purely an irregularity and does not affect the validity of the proceedings."

But in the amended Code this illustration is omitted. The repeal of this illustration in the amended Code clearly indicates that the legislature no longer views the defect pointed out in the aforesaid illustration, as a mere irregularity not affecting the validity of the proceeding. The inference from the omission of this illustration is that the defect affects the validity of the proceeding and vitiates the conviction and sentence.

In the case of trials by a Bench of Magistrates, the practice of some of the Magistrates not signing the judgments or putting in merely their initials instead of the full signatures is to be deprecated. There seems to be also another practice, namely that when copies of such judgments are given, the signature of the presiding Magistrate alone is copied, omitting the signatures of the other Magistrates (as was done in this case). Such a copy is obviously an incorrect one and it is inconceivable why the copy should be defective in this important particular. It is hoped that in future the Benches of Magistrates would strictly follow the mandatory provisions of the Code in the matter of signing judgments.

For these reasons stated by me, the conviction and sentence are vitiated by non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 265, Criminal P. C. The conviction and sentence have therefore to be set aside.

But in the circumstances of this case it seems to me that the ordering of a retrial is useless and not in furtherance of public interests. I may also point out that though the offences complained of in the present case fell under Ss. 504 and 352, I. P. C. (as shown by the register), the conviction was under S. 323. There is absolutely nothing in the judgment to show how the accused could be convicted for hurt under S. 323, while the finding seems to be that their guilt was under Ss. 504 and 352. In the re-

Order.—This is a reference under S. 215, Criminal P. C., by the Assistant Sessions Judge of East Godavari requesting this Court to quash the committal under S. 213 to that Court of the respondent Thadi Subbi Reddi. The respondent was the President of a Co-operative Society. Another person who was committed along with him to the lower Court was the Secretary of the same Society. They and three other people were charged with having got up a bond for Rs. 750 purporting to be executed by one Karri Venkatareddi in favour of the Society, the respondent Subbi Reddi signing it as a surety. The respondent and the Secretary are alleged to have,

after putting this upon the record of the Co-operative Society, handed it over to their successors when they left the office on 2nd November 1928. When the new President filed a suit on the bond before the Assistant Registrar against Karri Venkatareddi, the alleged maker, and the respondent as surety, Karri Venkatareddi brought a criminal complaint of forgery against the respondent, the Secretary, and three others. The respondent and the Secretary were also charged with having used the bond knowing it to be a forgery by handing it over to their successors in office. The Magistrate committed the five accused.

In the Sessions Court the charge of forgery was ordered to be dealt with separately from the charge of using a forged document as genuine, because the latter charge only affected the respondent and the Secretary, whereas the former affected all the five accused persons. But in the Sessions Court it was discovered that, the bond having been filed before the Assistant Registrar for the purpose of the suit, the case of forgery against the respondent, and of using the document as a genuine document against the respondent, could not proceed for want of the necessary complaint under S. 195, Criminal P. C. As the trial on the forgery section had begun the learned Sessions Judge discharged the respondent in that case relying upon certain decisions which show that that is the proper course when the defect is discovered after the trial has begun. But the trial under S. 471 against the respondent not having actually commenced he has reported the matter to this Court for the committal being quashed.

The two questions which arise are: (1) whether the Assistant Registrar before whom the Co-operative Society has filed its suits or its claim for enforcing the bond is a Court within the meaning of S. 195, Criminal P. C.; and (2) if so, whether the fact of the alleged use of the document having been before the institution of that suit, S. 195 (c) applies to the case at all.

On the first question, Cl. (2), S. 195, as amended in 1923, states that in Cls. (b) and (c), sub-S. (1) of the same section the term "Court" includes a civil, revenue or criminal Court, etc. It has been held that the term "Court" in this sep-tion has a wider meaning than the expression "Court of Justice" in the Penal Code and includes a tribunal entitled to deal with a particular matter and authorized to receive evidence bearing thereon in order to enable it to arrive at a determination upon the question: vide Nanda Lal Ganguli v. Khetre Mohan Ghose (1). According to R. 14 of the Rules made by the Local Government in pursuance of S. 43 (1), Co-operative Societies Act, the Registrar to whom a dispute touching a debt due to a society by a member is referred has power to administer oaths, to require the attendance of all parties concerned and of witnesses, and to require the production of all books and documents relating to the matter in dispute. By the same rule the Registrar is required to give a decision in writing, and when it is given the decision may be enforced on application to the civil Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the decision as if it were a decree of Court. The Registrar acting under this R. 14 falls clearly within the description of 'Court' given in the decision cited and I therefore hold that the Assistant Registrar before whom the suit was filed was a Court. On the second question the learned Sessions Judge has referred to In re Bhan Vyankatesh (2), Khairati Ram v. Malawa Ram (3) and Kanhaiya Lal v. Bagwan Lal (4), to show that, even where the use as genuine of a forged document under S. 471 is prior to the proceedings before the Court, the complaint of the Court before which that document was filed or used is necessary under S. 195. But there is a decision of our own Court to the same effect; and where there are decisions of this Court it is the duty of subordinate Courts to be guided by them rather than by the decisions of other High Courts. In re Perameswaram Nambudri (5) with respect to a case which fell under S. 195(b) it was held that

"it [Cl. (b)] aims at doing so by providing that where, prior to the institution of the criminal prosecution, a properly constituted judicial tribunal has placed itself in a position to determine whether the facts constituting the offence really exist, the criminal Court should decline cognizance unless that tribunal has, in effect, certified that in its opinion the complaint is one worthy of investigation."

Cases under S. 195 (c) are as regards this matter on exactly the same footing as those which fall under Cl. (b). If anything, the matter has been put beyond controversy by the wording of Cl. (c) as amended which is:

"when such offence is alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court, etc."

The word "alleged" shows that the use complained of may be before the proceedings in Court commenced. It follows that a complaint by the Assistant Registrar was in this case necessary before any Court could take cognizance of the charge under S. 471 against the respondent. The whole of the proceedings therefore before the Magistrate were incompetent and the commitment by him must therefore be and hereby is quashed.

P.R.S./S.N. Commitment quashed.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge, of Bellary under S. 201, I. P. C., for giving false evidence about the murder of his wife in order to screen the real offender, and also under S. 203 for giving false information about the murder. He was also himself charged with the actual murder of his wife, but was acquitted on that. The facts of the case briefly were:

On 12th August 1929, at about 10 a. m., the deceased woman took food to her husband. P. W. 4 saw her there. He next saw her being carried in an unconscious state by the accused and his brother towards her house. P. W. 5 saw people in her house applying restoratives to her, while the accused and his brother were giving out that the woman had been stung by a scorpion or bitten by a snake. She died at 4 p. m. The accused himself made the report to the Village Munsif (P. W. 6), saying that he suspected that she had been stung. The woman's father (P. W. 8) was suspicious and reported to the police who sent the body for post-mortem. The Medical Officer, P. W. 1, found on the body four contusions, three of them on the skull, and on dissecting he found there had been cerebral haemorrhage. He was of opinion that that was the result of blows by sticks or stones on the head. He found no signs or symptoms of poisonous bite or sting.

The charge of murder was not pressed against the accused in the trial Court and the learned Sessions Judge held that the evidence did not prove that it was the accused who inflicted the injuries on his wife. He held, however, that he must have known who inflicted them on his wife and that his story to the Village Munsif was a false one, intended to screen the real offender. He, therefore, convicted him under Ss. 201 and 203, I. P. C.

The learned counsel for the defence raises a point of fact and a point of law. The point of fact is that as the injuries on the woman were hidden under her hair the accused did not genuinely know that she had been assaulted. But we do not think that there is any substance in this. For, the woman having been assaulted, the accused's story that she cried out she had been stung cannot be true. She must have cried out that she was being beaten and accused must have known that.

The point of law is that unless the Court is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that accused was not himself the murderer, he cannot be convicted under Ss. 201 and 203. This rests upon a proposition, affirmed in several rulings of various High Courts, that Ss. 201 and 203, I. P. C., have no application to the person who actually committed the main offence mentioned in the sections, and that the person who committed the main offence cannot be himself found guilty of causing evidence of that offence to disappear or of giving false information about it. The earliest pronouncement on this point was in 1871 in a case, Reg v. Kasinath Dinkar (1), and this ruling has been followed, mostly without discussion or comment as if the proposition were self evident in various other cases: cf. Empress of India v. Kishna (2); Queen-Empress v. Dungar (3); Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress (4) and Emperor v. Ghansham (5). The only pronouncement of this High Court on this subject which has been traced, is in a parenthesis and obiter dictum at p. 277 of Ramaswami Goundan v. Emperor (6). Nowhere is the ratio decidendi of Reg v. Kasinath Dinkar (1) examined. It seems to us to rest on a petitio principii. The reason given is that:

"as there is no law now which obliges a criminal to give information which would convict himself, it is evident that Ss. 202 and 203 could not apply to a person who committed that offence, that is, the offence which he knew had been committed."

Obviously if there is no law to that effect then Ss. 202 and 203 will not apply. The question rather is whether Ss. 201 to 203 do not embody such a law. On the face of them there is nothing to show that they do not apply to the main offender himself. S. 44, Criminal P. C., which is the general section relating to the duty of persons to give information about grave offences including murder, and S. 45 (d) of that Code which lays on any owner or occupier of land the duty of giving information regarding the occurrence in his village of any sudden or unnatural death, do not in terms exclude the offender himself. These sections of the Criminal Procedure Code would be relevant in a case under S. 202, I. P. C. where it is necessary that the accused should be legally bound to give information regarding the offence but even this qualification does not appear under S. 201 or S. 203. What is required there is merely that there should have been an offence and that the accused has given false information about it, with the added intention in the case of S. 201, I. P. C. of screening the offender. We cannot therefore see wherefrom comes the proposition which is the foundation of Reg v. Kashinath Dinkar (1), that there is no law which obliges a criminal to give information which would convict himself. There is such a law in the case of grave offences and sudden deaths, and in theory the offender himself could be convicted for breach of that law under Ss. 201 to 203, I. P. C. In practice, no doubt, if he has been convicted of the offence itself, no Court will think it worth while to convict him also under Ss. 201 to 203, I. P. C. If the proposition laid down in Reg v. Kashinath Dinkar (1) is carried to its logical conclusion it would appear that it is improper to try an accused person, as the present accused has been tried, in the same trial under both Ss. 202 and 201, I. P. C., because a perfect defence to S. 201 would be a plea and proof that he himself was the murderer, and an accused would be entitled to say that the plea he proposes to make to the charge under S. 201 will depend on whether he is acquitted or convicted of the principal offence; and that to call upon him to plead to the charge under S. 201 before and until he knows what the verdict of the murder charge is would be to deprive him of his legitimate defence. It would also in a case where the Court regards proof of his complicity in the actual offence is insufficient to establish his guilt, compel the Court to let him go free, even though it is satisfied that he gained his acquittal on the main offence by his own concealment of the traces of the crime. This was exactly what happened in the Bombay H. C. R. case, and it is hardly compatible with justice that the actual offender should escape conviction under Ss. 201 to 203 because he is the actual offender in the main crime, while those who merely witnessed it but gave false information about it are punishable under Ss. 201 and 203. This means that the more successful a criminal is in concealing his own offence the more the law will assist him in escaping justice altogether, and unless the Court holds without reasonable doubt that the accused did not take part in the murder the Court is bound to give him the benefit of doubt and acquit him of offences under Ss. 201 to 203. The case reported in Torop Ali v. Queen-Empress (4) is another practical example of how justice is defeated by such a theory of the law.

The true principle seems to be that there is no law preventing the main offender being convicted under Ss. 201 to 203, but in practice no Court will convict an accused both of the main offence and under these sections. But if the commission of the main offence is not brought home to him, then he can be convicted under Ss. 201 to 203. Therefore there is no misjoinder in charging an accused in the alternative with the main offence and under Ss. 201 and 203, I. P. C., nor is there anything irregular or improper in a Judge holding, as the learned Sessions Judge has done in this case, that, while the accused is himself not free from the suspicion of being the actual murderer, he can be nonetheless convicted under S. 201 or S. 203. This position is not without authority, though, as noted above, most of the reported cases have followed Reg v. Kashinath Dinkar (1). Most of these rulings have been considered in a judgment of the Punjab Chief Court in 1903. In Buch v. Emperor (7), wherein it was held that an accused acquitted of the charge of committing a crime can be convicted under S. 201 in respect of the offence "with the commission of which he is no longer charged or liable to be charged;" and the mere suspicion that an individual is the actual murderer, or the facts that he has even had his trial and been acquitted of the offence of murder will not prevent his conviction under S. 201. A mere suspect or an acquitted accused is not in the eyes of the law an offender within the meaning of S. 201. The reported ruling in Tapriinessa v. Emperor (8) is practically to the same effect, and also the ruling of a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Hanumanappa Rudrappa v. Emperor (9). Therefore there is no illegality in the conviction under Ss. 201 and 203.

This does not however conclude the case. It is clear that for the purpose of calculating the punishment to be awarded under S. 201, it is necessary for the Court to decide, not so much what offence the evidence of which has been concealed has been committed as what offence the accused knew or had reason to believe had been committed. So it was necessary to believe, on the assumption that the accused did not commit the main offence because he has not been convicted of that, what offence he believed or knew to have been committed. The Court must treat him as a stranger to the crime, as one who had merely witnessed it.

From that point of view we cannot on the evidence say that more is proved than that the accused knew that someone had hit his wife and that she had died in consequence. We are unable to conclude that he knew that the person who struck her had the criminal intention of killing her. It must have been clear however to the accused that his wife had died as a result of the blows given and that she at least suffered grievous hurt, and that is punishable under S. 325, I. P. C. with imprisonment for seven years. Under S. 201 the accused is then liable to be sentenced to a maximum of one-fourth of that seven years. The learned Sessions Judge has sentenced the accused to rigorous imprisonment for five years. At the most he can be sentenced to one year and three-fourths. We think that it will be sufficient if he undergoes rigorous imprisonment for one year and we reduce the sentence accordingly.

SUHRAWARDY AND COSTELLO, JJ.

Purna Chandra Dutta and others—
Petitioners.

v.

Sheikh Dhalu—Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 20 of 1929, Decided on 9th May 1930, from appellate order of District Judge, Dacca.

* (a) Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), S. 439—Revision against order under Ss 476, 476-A and 476-B, by civil Court does not lie under S. 439—In such matters High Court can only interfere under Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), S. 115 or Government of India Act (1919), S. 107.

Revision application against order passed under Ss. 476, 476-A and 476-B, Criminal P. C., by civil Court does not lie under S. 439 of the Code as it is not a matter connected with any proceedings before any inferior criminal Court within the meaning of S. 435 of the same Code. In such matters the High Court can only interfere under S. 115, Civil P. C., or S. 107, Government of India Act, and the order can therefore only be challenged for wrong, illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction: 40 Cal. 477, Rel. on. [P 1130 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (as amended by Act 18 of 1923), S. 476—Words "such Court" in S. 476 include "successor to office."

A Court of law does not consist of the particular individual or individuals who may be presiding over the proceedings therein at any particular moment but it is a permanent institution and therefore any judicial officer who sits in the Court is just as competent to deal with the matters coming before the Court as any other incumbent of the office. Therefore the words "such Court" in S. 476 includes the successor of the office: 10 I. C. 66; A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 479 and A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 195, Rel. on. [P 1134 C 2]

* (c) Criminal P. C. (as amended by Act 18 of 1923), S. 476—It is not prudent in every case to hold preliminary enquiry before making complaint under S. 476.

In each individual case the Court has to decide whether in the interests of justice a preliminary investigation is necessary. In a case where an offence has been committed outside the Court and not in the presence of the Judge it would certainly be judicious if not incumbent upon the Court to hold a preliminary enquiry in order to find out for itself whether such an offence was really committed. But where an offence is committed in the presence of the Court or from a perusal of the record, it is of opinion that it is necessary in the interests of justice that a further enquiry into the matter should be made in the criminal Court, it may make a complaint to that effect to the nearest Magistrate without making any preliminary enquiry. But it cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that in every case it is prudent to hold a preliminary enquiry before making a complaint under S. 476. Each case must be judged on its own facts and there may be a case where the revising authority may think that an action under S. 476 was too hastily taken and that there should be further investigation in the matter : 20 Cal. 349 ; 10 I. C. 66 ; 37 Cal. 642 ; 37 I. C. 469, Rel. on. ; A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 282, Diss. from. [P 1132 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C. (as amended by Act 18 of 1923), S. 476 — S. 476 contemplates action on part of Court of its own initiative and it cannot be held that because application is made irregularly that of itself debars Court from taking action in the matter.

Per Costello, J.—Under the wordings of S. 476 there is no restriction made as to the person or persons by whom an application can be made to the Court and therefore even if the pleader is in one sense an unauthorized person, he is nonetheless competent to make an application to the Court if he chooses. He does nothing more than to bring the matter to the attention of the Court. The section definitely contemplates action on the part of the Court of its own initiative and it cannot be held that because the application is made irregularly that of itself debars the Court from acting in the matter at all. [P 1135 C 1]

(e) Criminal P. C. (as amended by Act 18 of 1923), S. 476—Matters under S. 476 cannot be held to be mainly matters inter partes.

Per Costello, J.—It is very much to be deprecated that the idea should become prevalent that matters under S. 476 are mainly matters inter partes. Whether a matter of this kind comes before a Court upon a complaint or whether the Court acts of its own motion, the Court ought to deal with it not so much as a piece of litigation between private parties but as a matter of public duty undertaken for the purpose of vindicating and ensuring the purity of the administration and public justice.

(f) Criminal P. C., Ss. 476 and 439—Discretion about withholding enquiry should not ordinarily be interfered with.

Per Costello, J.—The High Court ought to be reluctant to interfere with the Court's discretion to hold or not to hold an enquiry before making a complaint under S. 476. [P 1135 C 2]

(g) Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), O. 3, R. 4 — Vakalatnama.

Per Subrawardy, J.—Vakalatnama filed in a suit remains in force in all the different stages of the case. [P 1132 C 2]

Camell, Nanda Gopal Banerjee and Gopal Chandra Mukherjee — for Petitioners.

Sures Chandra Talukdar and Sachindra Kumar Roy—for Opposite Party.

Subrawardy, J.—This is an application in revision by six persons against an appellate order of the District Judge of Dacca affirming an order of the Munsif of that place passed under S. 476, Criminal P. C., lodging a complaint against the petitioners under Ss. 209 and 120-B, I. P. C., and Ss. 210 and 511 and 120-B, I. P. C. Before proceeding to deal with the merits of the case I should like to make one observation with regard to the scope of the rule issued by this Court. This application in revision does not lie under S. 439, Criminal P. C., inasmuch as it is not a matter connected with any proceedings before any inferior criminal Court within the meaning of S. 435, Criminal P. C. By an order made by the Chief Justice the Bench taking criminal matters is authorized to receive and hear appeals and revision applications against orders passed under Ss. 476, 476-A and 476-B, Criminal P. C., by civil Courts. If the revision application is not entertainable under S. 439, Criminal P. C., in such matters this Court can only interfere under S. 115, Civil P. C., or S. 107, Government of India Act : Empegor v. Har Prasad Das (1). This rule being under S. 115 Civil P. C., is very much limited in its scope and we have not the freedom which we generally assume in dealing with criminal matters under S. 439, Criminal P. C. The order of the lower Court passed in appeal under S. 476-B, therefore can only be challenged for wrong, illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction. I refer to this matter as this feature of these cases is not generally kept in view when dealing with them along with cases under S. 439, Criminal P. C.

The facts out of which this matter arises are that the first petitioner Purna brought a suit for money against the opposite party Dhalu in the Munsif's Court at Dacca. The other petitioners were examined as witnesses in the case. The Munsif who heard the suit was of opinion that the bond on which the suit was brought was a forgery. An application was made by Dhalu inviting the Munsif who had disposed of the suit to take action under S. 476, Criminal P. C. The Munsif refused to pass any final order on that application on the ground that an appeal was then pending from his decree. After the disposal of the appeal affirming the decree of the trial Court that the bond was a forgery Dhalu again applied to the successor of the Munsif who had disposed of the suit for action under S. 476, Criminal P. C. The learned Munsif apparently went through the record of the case and made a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C. On appeal that order was affirmed by the District Judge.

(1) [1918] 40 Cal. 477=19 I.O. 197=14 Cr. L.J. 197.

Mr. Camell who appears for the petitioners has urged three points not one of which in my judgment is a point covered by S. 115, Civil P. C. The first point which has been strenuously pressed is that the Munsif not being the officer who had decided the suit should have held a further enquiry into this matter, before making a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C. The section itself does not show that a further enquiry before making a complaint is imperative under the law. The section as it originally stood before its amendment in 1923 read :

"After making any preliminary enquiry that may be necessary."

These words even were construed as making it discretionary with the Court to hold or not to hold an enquiry before making a complaint : Choudhuri Mahmmed Izharul Huq v. Queen Empress (2). The law has now been made clearer by the amendment of 1923 and the section now reads as :

"after such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary."

So that as a matter of law the Court is not bound to make any enquiry before making a complaint. But it is argued that in a case when the officer making the complaint is not the officer who has decided the case :

"It is prudent that he should make an enquiry."

That of course is not a question which comes within the purview of S. 115, Civil P. C. Reliance has been placed on some observations made in the judgment in Sarat Chandra Bhattacharji v. Hari Charan Dey (3). The facts of that case were that after the suit was dismissed and the order of dismissal upheld by the High Court one of the defendants applied to the Munsif who had tried the suit for action under S. 476, Criminal P. C. That application was dismissed. Another defendant, a week after, made a similar application and that application was granted by the Munsif. On appeal the learned District Judge summarily rejected it under S. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. Against that order of the appellate Court a rule was obtained from this Court. It was held that the District Judge was not right in summarily rejecting the appeal under O. 41, R. 2, Civil P. C., but that he should have heard it under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. After disposing of the case on this ground the learned Judges went into the merits of the case and they were of opinion that the order made by the Munsif for an enquiry by the criminal Court against the petitioner was not justified on the facts of the case, and they accordingly set aside the complaint made by the Munsif. I take it that when a matter comes up to this Court and this Court thinks that in the interest of justice the order of the lower Court should be set aside it can do so in its supervising jurisdiction. But in the judgment of that case some observations have been made which seems to me to be in the nature of obiter dicta and from which I most respectfully dissent. It is there said :

"It is true that under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C., a preliminary enquiry may not be legally necessary. But it has been laid down ever since the enactment of the present S. 476, Criminal P. C., that although a preliminary enquiry may not be legally necessary it should in common prudence be held by every Court before it passes an order under S. 476, Criminal P. C. That, as we understand, is the present case law in this Court."

We asked Mr. Camell to place before us any case where the practice referred to in the above observation has been followed or insisted upon, but we were not referred to any such case. On the other hand we have a weighty decision of this Court in Darpa Narayan Bera v. Bepin Behari Mitra (4), where the facts were very similar to those in the case before us. The learned Judges, Mookerji and Teunon, JJ., held, following the Full Bench decision in Shaikh Bahadur v. Eradatulla (5), that the power to direct prosecution under S. 476, Criminal P. C., was conferred not upon any particular individual as for instance the trying Judge, but on the "Court" which might be at the time when the order was made presided over by another officer. The learned Judges further held that the successor of the officer before whom the original trial took place was not bound to hold any independent investigation before making an order under S. 476, Criminal P. C., that the holding of a preliminary enquiry in a proceeding under S. 476 was discretionary and that the person against whom an order was passed without such an enquiry could not complain unless he was prejudiced by the omission. Mr. Camell has not pointed out any circumstance in this case which would go to show that his clients have been prejudiced in any way by the Munsif not holding a preliminary enquiry before making the order under S. 476, Criminal P. C. He has argued the case upon the general principle that in every case it is prudent if not necessary that a preliminary enquiry should be held before a complaint is made under S. 476, Criminal P. C. I am unable to accept this view of the law as flowing from the statute or even as reasonable for practical purposes. The true rule of law seems to me to be as observed in Darpa Narain Bera's case, that the Court has to decide in each individual case whether in the interests of justice a preliminary investigation is necessary. In a case where an offence has been committed outside the Court and not in the presence of the Judge it would certainly be judicious if not incumbent upon the Court to hold a preliminary enquiry in order to find out for itself whether such an offence was really committed. But where an offence is committed in the presence of the Court or from a perusal of the record it is of opinion that it is necessary in the interests of justice that a further enquiry into the matter should be made in the criminal Court, it may make a complaint to that effect to the nearest Magistrate without making any preliminary enquiry. What in short is the view which I entertain in the matter is that it cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that in every case it is prudent to hold a preliminary enquiry before making a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C. Each case must be judged on its own facts and there may be a case where the revising authority may think that an action under S. 476, Criminal P. C., was too hastily taken and that there should be further investigation in the matter. In the case before us the learned Munsif though he did not try the case went through the record and in the concluding portion of his order says :

"Now, it appears to me on a careful examination of the record that a prima facie case has been made out that all the opposite parties above named have committed an offence punishable under S. 209/120-B, I. P. C., and also under S. 210/511/120-B of the said Code."

It is difficult to see what further investigation in the matter the Munsif could have made. Nor do I think any useful purpose would have been served if the Munsif had examined the petitioners over again, and probably taken some more evidence of the same kind. The suit was filed upon a bond and it was supported by the evidence of not less than six witnesses. The Munsif who had decided the suit went thoroughly into the matter, and from the circumstances and evidence in the case was clearly of opinion that the bond was a forgery. That decision was upheld by the appellate Court. I do not think that the petitioners were in any way prejudiced by the Munsif not making a further investigation in the matter.

The second ground urged by Mr. Camell is that the pleader who moved this petition on behalf of the opposite party before the Munsif was not authorized by a fresh vakalatnama by the party and therefore the action taken by the Munsif on that petition was ultra vires. There is no substance in this contention as under S. 476, Criminal P. C., the Court may take action of its own motion and what the pleader did on behalf of the opposite party was to bring the matter to the notice of the Court. Further, the rule is that a vakalatnama filed in a suit remains in force in all the different stages of the case. The objection, even if there is any substance in it, is highly technical and ought not to be given effect to.

It is lastly argued that the judgments of the Courts below did not contain sufficient materials for making the complaint against petitioners 2 to 6. What the Munsif held was that a false suit was brought in his Court as the result of a conspiracy between the plaintiff in that suit and his witnesses. Though the false suit was brought by the first petitioner the other petitioners helped him in prosecuting it in the Court. Some of these petitioners, all of whom were witnesses in the suit, spoke to the execution of the bond by Dhalu; some others spoke to the fact that they went to Dhalu and made demand for the payment of the debt covered by the bond and Dhalu admitted the debt and applied for time for payment. When the matter will be tried before the criminal Court these petitioners will have an opportunity of showing that they did not conspire with the plaintiff in bringing a false suit. Matters, as they now stand, justify the order passed by the Magistrate that all these persons had conspired to make a false claim in a Court of justice. These are all the grounds urged before us and all of them having been overruled, the Rule is discharged.

Costello, J.—I entirely agree with what has fallen from my Lord. I think however that I ought to add a few words of my own with regard to this matter, because reliance has been placed upon the case of Sarat Chandra Bhatlacharjee v. Hari Charan Dey (3) from some of the observations in which I respectfully dissent. I cannot altogether accept the view of the case law which seems to be enunciated in the judgment of C. C. Ghose, J. With the greatest respect to him and all due deference to his experience in matters of this kind, I cannot help in coming to the conclusion, that the proposition laid down on p. 49 of the report is far too wide. The passage to which I refer reads as follows :

"But it has been laid down ever since the enactment of the present S. 476, Criminal P.O., that though a preliminary enquiry may not be legally necessary, it should in common prudence be held by every Court, before it passes an order under S. 476, Criminal P.O. That as we understand, is the present case law in this Court."

If that statement really represents the present case law on this point, I can only say that personally I think the case law goes considerably further than the words of the statute themselves warrant. It is to be observed in the first place that there are a number of decisions (to some of which my brother Suhrawardy has already referred) which unquestionably make it clear that even under the old corresponding section of the Criminal Procedure Code a preliminary enquiry was in no sense obligatory. The previous words of the section were "such Court after making any preliminary enquiry that may be necessary." So even under that phraseology it was not a necessary condition precedent to the making of an order under S. 476, that there should be any preliminary enquiry at all. The section did not say so, and therefore to hold that there was any rigid rule of law on the point, is to my mind to go beyond the words of the section. The section says "that may be necessary," thus assuming that there were cases in which an enquiry might be necessary and cases in which an enquiry might not be necessary. It follows therefore that an order made under the terms of the old section was not necessarily bad, because no enquiry at all had in fact been made before the Court concerned made an order.

Now when one looks at the words of the present section one can only take the view, in my judgment that a fortiori no preliminary enquiry is necessary as a matter of law, because the words of the section now run thus on this point: "Such Court may, after such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary." It follows from the form of the words used that it is entirely a matter for the discretion of the Court concerned whether any enquiry is necessary or not. It is quite true that the circumstances of a case may require as a matter of caution, or to use the words which my brother C. C. Ghose used in the judgment to which I have referred "as a matter of prudence" that, the Court in dealing with the matter should hold some kind of enquiry before making an order under S. 476. But as my brother Suhrawardy has already pointed out it cannot be necessary, or even a matter of prudence, that any enquiry should be held in cases where for example all the facts which are material to the charge which is to be made have already come out in the course of the hearing of the case itself or where they have already been brought to the notice of the Court in such a form that the Court can rely on the information before it. In this connexion, I refer to a judgment of this Court in the case of Taru Babu v. Emperor (6), in which Sanderson, C. J., said this :

"It may be that in a case where the Judge is trying the case, and all the facts which are material to the charge have been brought to the notice of the learned Judge, or have come out during the course of the hearing of the case, it would be mere waste of time and quite unnecessary to hold a preliminary enquiry because the learned Judge is already in possession of all the material facts on which it is necessary for him to form the judgment."

The learned Chief Justice went on to say with reference to the facts of the case then before him :

"But in such a case as this, where the incident took place outside the Court, and as to which the learned Judge himself could have no knowledge, and as to which evidence must be called for, in my judgment, unless he does hold such a preliminary enquiry as may be necessary to enable him to determine whether or not there is any case, fit to be sent to the Magistrate, he has no jurisdiction to send the accused under S. 476."

I respectfully agree with what the learned Chief Justice said, and it seems to me that his observations draw a reasonable line of demarcation between cases where an enquiry is not necessary and cases where the enquiry is at any rate prudent if not altogether necessary. If we were to hold that in all cases, an enquiry, if not absolutely necessary is at any rate desirable as a matter of common prudence, we should in my opinion, be travelling a very long way outside the scope of the words of the section itself and at the same time we should be opening the door to a flood of unfounded and unwarranted applications to this Court on matters arising out of orders made by virtue of the terms of S. 476.

With regard to the actual case, now before us, I ought to add one or two observations. This case manifestly falls within the class of cases referred to by Sanderson, C. J., where all the facts material to the making of the decision as to whether there should be a complaint or not, were before the learned Munsif to whom the application was made. It is true that the particular Munsif who made the order which is now impugned, was not the Munsif who had heard the case out of which the charge arose, but he had before him the official record of the proceedings from which he could see that his predecessor in office in that particular Court, and also the District Judge to whom an appeal had been taken, had both come to the conclusion that the document on which the plaintiff's case was based, was not a genuine document and that the persons against whom the complaint was made, were all jointly implicated in putting it forward in the course of the case if not actually fabricating it, for the purpose. Therefore the learned Munsif before whom the application was made, in my opinion, could not do otherwise than to accept the records as being correct and they set forth the considered opinion of the two judicial officers who had heard and considered the whole of the evidence and had come to a finding upon the facts as presented in course of the case.

A point was sought to be made by Mr. Camell on behalf of the present petitioners that it was not competent to the learned Munsif who made the order to deal with the matter in the way he did because in fact he was not the Munsif who had heard the original case. My learned brother has already referred to one authority, Durpa Narayan Bera v. Bepin Behary Miller (4) where it was held that the successor of the officer before whom the original trial took place is not bound to hold an independent investigation before making the order under S. 476, Criminal P. C., for the reason that the power to direct a prosecution under that section is conferred on "the Court" and not merely on the individual judicial officer who happens to hold office at the time of the original trial. In other words, as I pointed out in the course of the argument before us, it is not a question of the particular incumbent in office at the time when the application is made, but it is a question of the particular Court to whom the application is made. In this connexion I would refer to the case of Tara Chand v. Emperor (7), where it was held that the Court of a Subordinate Judge is a permanent Court; therefore a Subordinate Judge is competent to continue an enquiry under S. 476, Criminal P. C., begun by his predecessor: see also Maung Shwe Phe v. Ma Me Hmoke (8). A Court of law does not consist of the particular individual or individuals who may be presiding over the proceedings therein at any particular moment, but it is a permanent institution and therefore any judicial officer who sits in the Court is just as competent to deal with the matters coming before the Court as any other incumbent of the office. Therefore the words in the section "such Court" include the successor to the office: cf. Grish 42, C. 667 at p. 670).

One other point I desire to refer to and it is this: Mr. Camell sought to make something of the fact that the application in this proceeding was made to the learned Munsif by a pleader who is said not to have been properly authorized by any client to make the application which he did. My learned brother has already dealt with one aspect of that matter. I may also add that under the wording of the section itself there is no restriction made as to persons by whom an application can be made to the Court under S. 476, Criminal P. C., and therefore, even if the pleader is in one sense an unauthorized person, he is none the less competent to make an application to the Court if he so chooses. He does nothing more than to bring the matter to the attention of the Court. Clearly in my opinion it is then open to the Court, if it thinks fit in the interests of justice, to take action in the matter in the same way as it might take action suo motu without any application at all, as the section definitely contemplates action on the part of the Court of its own initiative. It seems to me impossible to hold that because the application is made irregularly that of itself debars the Court from acting in the matter at all. If the Court can act on its own motion, the Court cannot be prevented from acting merely because it was prompted to take action by some application which might be said to have been irregularly made. What is overlooked, I am afraid, in connexion with matters arising under S. 476, Criminal P. C., is that all the offences referred to, that is to say, offences mentioned in S. 195, Criminal P. C., are offences against public justice and therefore I think any Court which, from any source acquires knowledge that there is a probability that one of such offences has been committed, ought then as a public duty in suitable cases to make a complaint as contemplated under S. 476, Criminal P. C. To my mind it is very much to be deprecated that the idea should become prevalent that matters under S. 476 are mainly matters inter partes. In the particular case with which we are now concerned, I observe that the learned Munsif treated the applications before him as if they were contests as between two private contesting parties and the applications were accordingly denominated as Miscellaneous Cases Nos. 61 and 62. It may be that for the purpose of record it is necessary that all applications should be described in some form or other, but all the same I do not think that they ought to be treated as if in fact they were merely matters of private litigation between individual parties. One of the objects of S. 476 is to prevent a private person who happens to be an unsuccessful and disappointed litigant, from captiously retaliating upon his successful opponent by instituting or seeking to institute criminal proceedings against him. Whether a matter of this kind comes before a Court upon a complaint or whether a Court acts of its own motion, the Court ought to deal with it not so much as a piece of litigation between private parties but, as I have already said, as a matter of public duty undertaken for the purpose of vindicating and ensuring the purity of the administration for public justice. It is quite true that in S. 476 a right of appeal is given not only to persons against whom an order is made but also to persons who make an application for an order to be made, and whose application has been refused. To that extent undoubtedly the matter must be dealt with in one sense as being one of private litigation, but I do not think that anything should be done unnecessarily to encourage that view of the matter. With that in mind I think this Court ought to be very reluctant to interfere with the discretion which is undoubtedly conferred upon a Court when making a complaint under S. 475.

In the particular case before us, as my learned brother Suhrawardy says, it is quite obvious that there is not the slightest justification for putting forward the matter as one arising under S. 115, Civil P. C. For the reasons I have given, I agree that the rule must be discharged.

PEARSON AND PATTERSON, JJ.

Aswini Kumar Pal — Accused — Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 670 of 1929, Decided on 27th January 1930.

Penal Code, S. 486—Proper test is whether ordinary unwary purchaser would be deceived.

In a case under S. 486 the proper test is not whether a purchaser if literate would be deceived if he had the two articles side by side, but the matter should be considered from the point of view of the ordinary unwary purchaser. [F 1136 O 1]

P. C. Chatterjee and Bireswar Chatterjee—for Appellant.A. K. Basu and Santosh Nath Mukerjee—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted of an offence under S. 486, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 500. The charge against the accused was that he had in his possession for sale or purposes of trade certain tins of corn-flour bearing a trade-mark or property mark which was a counterfeit of the mark of Messrs. C. & E. Morton Ltd. Of the marks forming the subject matter of the charge only one described as "Matrons" has been held by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate to be a counterfeit under the section, but although this is so, it is nevertheless relevant in the present case to observe that at the search which resulted in the prosecution certain other brands of this commodity were found in the accused's possession in which he also traded, bearing different labels, namely "Nortons" "Motor" "Leton's" and "Newtons." "Nortons" has been the subject of injunction proceedings in the High Court and as the Magistrate notes is a closer counterfeit than the others. The conviction, as already stated, is only in regard to "Matrons." We have had an opportunity of comparing the tins and labels for ourselves. As the learned Magistrate observes, no one could possibly mistake them if he were in the least on the alert, and knew the original at all well. It is equally clear that the purchaser (if literate) would not be deceived if he had the two tins side by side. But that is not the proper test; it must be considered from the point of view of the ordinary unwary purchaser. There are no doubt, as has been pointed out to us, a large number of differences, chiefly in detail; among these may be mentioned the fact that the offending label states that the goods are "made in Calcutta" whereas the complainant's tins are embossed at the foot "Manufactured in England;" other considerable differences may be noted in the colour, or rather in the shade of colour used and the price at which the articles were sold, Rs. 13-4-0 per lb as opposed to Rs. 7-8-0 per lb. The resemblances in the get-up are also fairly numerous, the chief ones being the name G. & I. Matrons as against C. & E. Mortons, the shape and size of tin, the "Eagle" or "bird" brand in a white oval forming a prominent part of the label design, and the general similarity of get-up in the mixture of red and green employed on the label. We are satisfied that upon the whole there is ground to support the finding of the learned Magistrate, that the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived thereby, and the presumption is that the accused intended thereby to practise deception or know it to be likely that deception would thereby be practised. This presumption under S. 28, I. P. C., the accused contends, is rebutted by the fact that he purchased the rights in the offending label and design with dies, etc., at a receiver's sale in 1924, and he relies on that to show that he "acted innocently" under S. 486 (c), I. P. C. This may help him as far as it goes, but the other circumstances in the case, and particularly the possession of "Nortons," would rather go to show that the accused is concerned to see how near the line he can go in trading on the reputation of another manufacturer. A further point was taken that S. 15, Merchandise Marks Act, was a bar to the prosecution as having been commenced more than three years after the commission of the offence. This however is of no substance: that part of this section is designed to prevent stale claims from becoming the subject-matter of criminal prosecution, and cannot apply to a case such as this where the offence is a continuing one.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed and the conviction and sentence upheld.

Criminal Ref. No. 272 of 1930, Decided on 17th June 1930, made by Second Addl. Sess. Judge, Meerut, on 14th April 1930.

Penal Code (1860), S. 498.—First husband absolutely abandoning his wife and she marrying another man by recognized marriage—Person so married is competent to institute complaint under S. 498.

Where the husband of a woman absolutely abandons her, and she marries another man by a marriage which is recognized as valid among the people to which the parties belong, the second husband of the woman has full authority to institute complaint for enticing the woman away. [P 1137 O 2]

K. C. Mukerji—for Accused.

M. Wajidullah—for the Crown.

Order.—This case would have never been referred if the Sessions Judge had not applied to the circumstances of the case and evidence given in it the same sort of tests that might have been appropriate had he been dealing with the question of whether some large estate was impartible or not, or whether there was a custom of some unusual nature existing in some particular family. The facts are simple. One Mt. Mulhu was first married to a man called Juma who proceeded to marry another woman, to ignore Mt. Mulhu and to leave her apparently entirely to her own devices and unprovided for three years and to ignore her going through the ceremony of marriage with another man. This the learned Sessions Judge does not consider constituted desertion, and apparently he holds that it does not amount to desertion because Juma could at the end of the three years, if he had liked, have reclaimed his wife. The next step is that Mt. Mulhu, by a well-recognized form of marriage, the karao form, marries a man called Bhagwana; and the accused had been found guilty of taking her away from the custody of Bhagwana and punished under S. 498. The accused have succeeded in persuading the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Meerut to refer the case to this Court on the ground that Bhagwana was not the lawfully married husband of Mt. Mulhu and had therefore no authority to institute a complaint under S. 498, I. P. C.

It is admitted that the karao form of marriage is a well-recognized form amongst people of the caste and class of those with whom we are concerned. The admission that such a marriage can be regarded as a legally valid marriage presupposes that it is possible for the first marriage to be regarded as dissolved. Whether the Hindu law in its highest form recognizes or does not recognize divorce is immaterial. The fact that a second marriage in the karao form during the lifetime of the first husband is recognized and is admittedly recognized as valid amongst the class of people with whom we are concerned carries with it inevitably the proposition that the first marriage can under some circumstances be regarded as no longer a valid marriage. In the present case we have all the facts found which would be amply sufficient to show, and were in the opinion of the Magistrate amply sufficient to show, that the first husband had in fact absolutely abandoned his wife. Under those circumstances I can see no possible ground for holding that the karao marriage to Bhagwana was not a valid marriage. That is all there is in this point.

On the next point that the Magistrate exceeded his powers in giving two months' imprisonment in default of payment of the fine the Magistrate himself is agreed.

The result is that I accept the reference only so far that I reduce the period of imprisonment to be suffered in default of the payment of the fine from two months to six weeks. For the rest the reference is rejected.

v.

P. C. Chaudhri—Accused.

Criminal Reference No. 692 of 1929, Decided on 2nd September 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Allahabad.

Motor Vehicles Act (8 of 1914), S. 16—United Provinces Motor Vehicles Rules, R. 11—R. 11 does not apply to cars registered outside the U. P.

There is nothing in the wording of these rules to show that R. 11 applies to cars registered outside the U. P. It is clear from the definition of "registering authority" in R. 3, and this expression as used in R. 11 means the authority who had registered the car under the rules in force in the U. P., and hence R. 11 does not apply to cars not registered in the U. P. [P 1138 C 1, 2]

Sen, J.—This is a reference by Mr. Kisch, the learned Sessions Judge of Allahabad, with the recommendation that the order passed by a Magistrate, First Class, of Allahabad, convicting one Mr. P. C. Chaudhri under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act 1914, be set aside.

The learned Sessions Judge has given excellent reasons in support of his reference. The conviction is clearly illegal and must be set aside.

Mr. P. C. Chaudhri, resident of No. 4 Bankshall Street, Calcutta, came, to Allahabad on a short visit. He brought with him his motor car bearing No. 23047. On 14th April 1929, a constable on traffic duty demanded the production of the registration certificate. The Line Inspector, who acts under the orders of the Superintendent of Police, also made a similar demand. The certificate of registration was not produced. The result was that he was prosecuted for having contravened the provisions of R. 11, United Provinces Motor Vehicles Rules and fined Rs. 5.

Rule 11, United Provinces Motor Vehicles Rules provides as follows:

"Form of certificates and card; their production on demand. Certificates of registration and registration cards shall be in the forms provided in Schs. B and C, and shall be signed by the registering authority or by a person duly authorized by him in this behalf, and the owner of the vehicle in respect of which a certificate of registration has been issued shall be bound to produce the certificate when required so to do by the registering authority."

The "registering authority" referred to has been defined in the rules as meaning the Superintendent of Police, or an Assistant or Deputy Superintendent or Inspector of Police authorized by the Superintendent of Police to perform the duties of the registering authority under these rules. It is to be observed that there is nothing in the rules in force in the Presidency of Bengal corresponding to R. 11, United Provinces Rules. The case lies within a very narrow compass. Do the United Provinces Rules apply to a car registered in Calcutta and which has been brought to the United Provinces for a short duration? The learned Sessions Judge observes as follows:

"There is nothing in the wording of these rules to show that R. 11 applies to cars registered outside the United Provinces. It is clear from the definition of "registering authority" in R. 3 and this expression, as used in S. 11, means the authority who had registered the car under the rules in force in the United Provinces and, as the applicant's car was not registered in the United Provinces, in my view R. 11 has no application to his case."

I am in complete agreement with this view. I therefore accept the reference upon the grounds set out in the referring order of the learned Sessions Judge, dated 10th August 1929, set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act coupled with R. 11, United Provinces Motor Rules, and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1221 of 1929, Decided on 15th April 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Jhansi, D/- 9th December 1929.

Penal Code, S. 124-A — Sentence—Accused publishing seditious article—Article merely copied from publications in regard to which there was no prosecution—This fact, as well as the primary intention of accused, was to get members to leave council should be considered in awarding sentence.

The accused published an article in the newspaper which was seditious. But the article was copied from other publications in regard to the appearance in which no prosecution followed. The primary intention of the article by whomsoever it was written was manifestly merely to get members who are in the council to leave it.

Held: that it was fair to the accused also to assume that his primary intention in publishing the article was to win over those who were within the council to readiness to leave it and that this fact as well as the fact that the article was copied from publications in regard to which there was no prosecution, should be taken into consideration on the question of sentence. [P 1139 C 2]

K. N. Laghate—for Appellant.

Judgment.—This is an appeal of Pandit Krishna Gopal Sharma arising out of his conviction under S. 124-A, I. P. C., and a sentence thereunder of one year's simple imprisonment. The article appeared in a paper called the "Krantikari" published at Jhansi and is dated 8th April 1929. The article is in two portions: the first headed "Swaraj and Death," and the second headed "Sham Fight." It is admitted on behalf of the Crown that the whole article from beginning to end had already previously appeared in two other publications: one in Bombay and one in Calcutta. So far as the information before the Court goes no steps were taken in either Bombay or Calcutta to prosecute in regard to either of those publications. That is however of course no reason for holding that the article is not itself actually of a nature to bring upon persons responsible for it the consequences of S. 124-A, I. P. C.

No question has been argued before me on behalf of the appellant as to his responsibility or otherwise for the article. He does not appear to have at any time endeavoured to evade such responsibility otherwise than by urging that all he had done was to copy an article from other papers. The material answer in the appellant's examination before the Magistrate was to the effect that the article had already appeared in other papers and he copied it in his own as he did not think it was seditious. Manifestly the essential question is whether it was seditious. But on the question of sentence it is also very material to determine, if possible, whether the appellant thought the article to be seditious. On his behalf I have had only two arguments put to me: first that the article has only been "copied" from another paper; and secondly that the appellant did not "intend" to publish anything seditious. Neither of these questions are material except on the question of sentence.

I have however very carefully examined the article myself. So examined it becomes apparent that the second part of it, entitled "Sham Fight," clearly embodies the primary intention of the article, and in that portion of the article I do not find any words that the most captious person could suggest came within the scope of S. 124-A. There is a reference to the "unjust policy" of the bureaucracy, and there is a phrase "courting destruction for the nation." Manifestly these phrases are harmless in the connexion in which they are used. On the other hand the primary intention of this second portion of the article is very clearly merely to point out that, while a number of persons are all declaring themselves desirous of attaining an object described as "the main issue," some of them hold it best to confine their activities to steps outside the councils, while others think it best to enter the councils and do what they can there. The intention of this portion of the article is clearly to induce those who are working in the councils to come out and thereby more effectively assist in the prosecution of the main issue. Had this been all I have no doubt that this prosecution would never have been instituted. But when we look to see what the "main issue" is, to which reference is made at the end of the article, we find it in the earlier portion of the article, headed "Swaraj and Death," described in words which, I do not think anybody could have any doubt, must bring the person responsible for them within the consequences of S. 124-A as being, putting it briefly, guilty of publishing a seditious article. So far therefore I am of opinion that the conviction is right.

Coming however to the two matters to which I have already made reference as having a bearing on the question of sentence, we find, firstly, that the articles have been copied from other publications in regard to the appearance in which no prosecution followed. This consideration has already been given weight to by the learned trial Judge in giving a sentence of only one year's simple imprisonment. There is however another point to which apparently attention was not directed in the lower Court and that is the point that the primary intention of the article, by whomsoever it was written, was manifestly merely to get members who are in the council to leave it. It is fair to the accused therefore also to assume that his primary intention in publishing the article was to win over those who were within the council to readiness to leave it. The "main issue" is disclosed in the earlier part of the article in words that are seditious, and for that the appellant must be held liable. But the fact remains that, doing my best to appreciate the merits or demerits of the case, it does appear to me that the very great probabilities are that this article would never have been published but for the primary desire to get members to leave the councils. This consideration has not been given weight to in the Court below, but I think it deserves consideration. Maintaining the conviction under S. 124-A I therefore reduce the sentence from one year's simple imprisonment to six months' simple imprisonment from the date of his surrender.

Where an appeal has been presented and dismissed either after hearing or summarily, it is not open to the accused in showing cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, to go again into merit: A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 555, Foll. [P 1140 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439 (b)—Accused beating his wife brutally with heavy stick and inflicting injuries—Wife dying—He should be dealt with severely—Penal Code, S. 325.

Accused who had dispute with his wife because she ran away to her father's house, beat her with a stick after her return as a result of which she died two days later. He was convicted under S. 325 for causing grievous hurt to his wife and was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Held: that under the circumstances the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment was too short and should be enhanced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. It was a brutal thing for a man to beat a woman with a heavy stick and hurt her on vital parts of her body causing such injuries that she died in two days. [P 1141 C 1]

B. D. Mehta—for Accused.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Beaumont, C.J.—In this case the accused was convicted on 29th April 1930, under S. 325, Penal Code for causing grievous hurt to his wife, who died of the injuries. He was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. He appealed, and the appeal was summarily dismissed on 9th June 1930, the appeal being an appeal from jail, under S. 421, Criminal P. C. In dismissing the appeal the Court of appeal directed that notice should be given to the accused to show cause why the sentence on him should not be enhanced.

Now the first point taken in this appeal is that the accused is entitled to be heard on the merits as to whether he should have been convicted or not, and Mr. Mehta, his pleader, relies on the words of sub-S. (6), S. 439. That section provides that the Court may, in revision, amongst other things, enhance the sentence, and sub-S. (2) provides:

"No order under this section shall be made to the prejudice of the accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by pleader in his own defence," and then sub-S. (6) provides:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, any convicted person to whom an opportunity, has been given under sub-S. (2) of showing cause, why his sentence should not be enhanced shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction."

In my opinion, the accused in this case is not at liberty to be heard on the merits having regard to S. 430 of the Code, which provides that judgments and orders passed by an appellate Court upon appeal shall be final, except in the case therein mentioned. Under that section, I think, the judgment of the Court of appeal dismissing the appeal on 9th June 1930, is a final order, which this Court is not at liberty to differ from. In sub-S. (6), S. 439 the opening words are "Notwithstanding anything contained in this section," and not, "notwithstanding anything contained in this Code," and I think that these words do not entitle the accused to go behind S. 430, and to show cause against his conviction, after his appeal has been dismissed. Therefore I think, that in a case such as this, where an appeal has been presented and dismissed, either after hearing or summarily, it is not open to the accused in showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, to go again into the merits. The point has already been dealt with by this Court in the case of Emperor v. Jorabhai (1) and the only distinction between that case and the present one is that that case had been heard on the merits and not summarily dismissed. But in my view that distinction is not one of principle.

Now coming to the merits of the case, the accused was convicted of causing grievous hurt to his wife and the facts are that he had some dispute with his wife, because she ran away to her father's house and on her return he took up a stick and proceeded to beat her. He says himself in his confession that he gave her two blows with a stick, but the post-mortem examination shows that she suffered from severe injuries caused apparently by some heavy blunt instrument, and she died of these injuries two days afterwards. I quite accept the finding of the Sessions Judge that the accused had not any intention of killing his wife. At the same time it must be appreciated that men are not entitled to beat their wives. The prisoner comes of a poor class and if he chastised his wife moderately, but not sufficiently to do her serious damage, probably no more would have been heard of the matter. But it was a very brutal thing for a man to beat a woman with a heavy stick and hurt her in vital parts of her body causing such injuries that she died in two days.

The sentence which the learned trial Judge imposed on the accused was one year's rigorous imprisonment and I think, certainly that it is too short, and the sentence should be enhanced to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Madgavkar, J.—I agree. As a party to the decision in Emperor v. Jorabhai (1), I would add that the reasoning there is as appropriate to criminal appeals dismissed summarily, as to those dismissed after admission, and I am unable therefore to accept the argument for the appellant, which seeks to distinguish the case on that ground.

(b) Criminal P. C., (1898), S. 250—Bench after closing evidence in summary trial stating to complainant that case was false and vexatious and as part of same statement calling upon him to show cause against compensation being ordered against him—Statement held to be sufficient compliance with requirements of S. 250.

In a trial under Chap. 22, after the evidence was closed and the impression made by it on the Bench was fresh in their mind, the Bench called upon the complainant to show cause why compensation should not be granted in this wise: "The case brought by you has been proved to be false and vexatious and it is clear that this has been brought simply to harass the accused. Please show cause why compensation should not be ordered?" The complainant answered that the case brought by him was true. The Bench holding that it was no explanation ordered compensation.

Held: that although the passage that the case was brought simply to harass the accused occurred as a portion of the question, is must have been intended as record of their own reason for thinking that the complaint was false and vexatious and hence satisfied the requirements of S. 250. [P 1142 C 1, 2]

K. Periaswami Gounden — for Petitioner.

Order.—This is a petition to revise an order awarding compensation to six accused (at Rs. 10 each) made by the 1st Class Bench of Magistrates of Dhara-puram and confirmed by the learned Sessions Judge of Coimbatore. Two objections are raised: (1) that the record of the trial does not contain, as it should, the reasons why the Bench considered the complaint to be false and vexatious and (2) that this vitiates the order.

On the first point on which there seems to be no direct decision of this Court the contention must be upheld that even in records of summary trials under Chap. 22, Criminal P. C., where the Magistrate or Bench acts under S. 250, the requisites of that section as to recording of reasons must be carried out. This seems to follow from the provisions of S. 262 which lays down that the procedure prescribed for summons cases shall be followed in summons cases and that prescribed for warrant cases shall be followed in warrant cases even when they are tried in a summary way. The only exceptions to this rule are contained in the next two following sections Ss. 263 and 264. The former applies to cases where no appeal lies and the latter to cases in which an appeal lies; which means, to cases where an appealable sentence is or is not passed upon the accused. These Ss. 263 and 264 do not, if reasonably read provide for proceedings under S. 250 by which alone compensation to the accused is ordered against the complainant. There being thus no express exception from the general rule laid down by S. 262, it follows that even in summary trials the requisites of S. 250 must be satisfied.

The next question is whether in this case they have been satisfied. This point was apparently not raised before the Sessions Judge on behalf of the petitioner. But that learned Judge was of opinion that the order of the Bench does not contain a record of reasons for awarding compensation although he also thought that the omission had not prejudiced the appellant and therefore did not, under S. 537, invalidate the order. Taking the record of the trial as a whole and remembering that the record is itself the record of a summary trial, it is not quite accurate to say that it does not contain a record of reasons for awarding compensation. After the evidence was closed the Bench put the following question to the complainant:

"The case brought by you has been proved to be false and vexatious and it is clear that this has been brought simply to harass the accused. Please show cause why a compensation of Rs. 25 to each of the accused or Rs. 150 in all should not be ordered."

The complainant answered that the case brought by him was true. The Bench therefore go on to state that when called on to explain why compensation should not be ordered for bringing this false and vexatious complaint, P. W. 1 says that his complaint was true and that this is no explanation at all. Then they make the order directing him to pay Rs. 25 each. Reading this in a fair and reasonable way the passage where the Bench said that it is clear that this case has been brought simply to harass the accused, although it occurs as a portion of the question put to the complainant, may be understood and must have been intended as a record of their own reasons for thinking that the complaint was false and vexa-tious. They had just then taken the evidence and the impression made by it upon their minds was still quite fresh and they concluded, as they said in plain terms, that the case was false and vexatious because it was brought to harass the accused. I am not able to say that the requirements of law have not been satisfied. It is needless to add that, even if there had been any omission, S. 537 would have been sufficient to cure the omission in view of the fact that the petitioner himself did not raise the question before the Sessions Judge. The petition is dismissed.

Dur Mahomed and another—Accused—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 294 of 1929, Decided on 24th February 1930, from judgment of Addl. Sess. Judge, Hyderabad.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 164—Recording of confession after allowing time to accused for reflecting is proper—It is not necessary to give warning to accused immediately before recording confession.

There is nothing to show that warning should be given to the accused immediately before the confession is recorded or that it should be repeated again just before the prisoner's arrival before the Magistrate. Where the Magistrate allows the accused seven hours to think over the question and to decide whether he would make a confession or not and then records the confession, such recording is proper. [P 1143 C-2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 302—Murder by two persons—One taking minor part and acting under influence of other—It may sometimes be a case for reduction of sentence in case of person taking minor part.

If a murder is committed by two persons, and one of them takes some minor part and is acting under the influence of the other, it may sometimes be a case for reduction of sentence in the case of the man who is acting under the influence of the other, especially where the evidence against him depends primarily on a confession. [P 1144 C-2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Mashirnama containing statement of accused relating to place of murder made in presence of police and mashirs should not be referred to in judgment.

The mashirnama contained the following statement alleged to have been made by the accused in presence of the police and the mashirs: "He says that the cot on which the murder took place is to the east of the hurla at the distance of three paces. He says that the head of the cot is to the north and the tail is to the south. He shows the same place of murder which has formally been shown by the other accused :

Held : that the Judge was wrong in allowing the mashirnama to be exhibited and was in error in referring to it in the judgment.

F. C. Widge—for Appellants.

Partabrai D. Punwani—for the Crown.

Percival J. C.—In this case the Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, has convicted accused 1 under S. 201, I. P. C., and sentenced him to five years rigorous imprisonment, and the second accused under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced him to death. The case also comes before this Court for confirmation of the death sentence. Accused 1 has not appealed to this Court; so we need not consider the conviction and sentence in his case. We have only to consider the conviction and sentence passed in the case of accused 2.

The facts of the case briefly are that one Thakumal saw a dead body floating in the canal called Mubarakwah. Report was sent to the police at Nawabshah, and one Sijawal actually made the report. The police started inquiries and, on inquiries being made, it was found that Wadero Muhammad Kirio had disappeared a few days before the discovery of the body. On the deceased there were five severe injuries on the head and the other parts, and it was evident that he had been murdered. The relations and neighbours of the deceased were called, and they identified the body as being that of Wadero Muhammad Kirio.

There is no reason to doubt the correctness of their identification, and it is also supported by another small piece of evidence, namely one slipper of the deceased which was found in the canal near the place where the body is said to have been thrown in. It is clear therefore taking the evidence as a whole that the body found was that of Muhammad Kirio, and that he was murdered.

A considerable portion of the evidence in the case consists of the evidence against accused 1, who is the son-in-law the deceased, while the present appellant, Rakhio, was his hari. Accused 1 has been acquitted of the offence of murder, his case being distinguished from that of accused 2, chiefly because a confession was made by accused 2 whereas no real confession was made before a Magistrate by accused 1. There were certain confessions made to mashirs by accused 1 as well as by accused 2, but the learned Additional Sessions Judge has not admitted those confessions in evidence, and he has relied on the confession of accused 2, before the Resident Magistrate, Nawabshah, supported as it is by circumstantial evidence. In addition to this confession, which will be referred to a little later, there is the fact that accused 2, who is shown to have been at the scene of the offence shortly before the alleged murder of the deceased, absconded and went off to his own village, which is at a considerable distance away in the north of the Nawabshah District, and further his name is said to have been received by the police from accused 1. Accused 2 produced among other things a silk turban which he stated, belonged to the deceased, and which has been identified by the witness Jumo as belonging to the deceased. The Chemical Analyser stated that blood was found on the turban, but that it was insufficient for ascertaining whether it was human blood or not. This is an item of some importance that one would not expect that the turban would have blood on it, though other clothes might naturally have some blood on them.

The main evidence against the accused is his confession. The learned pleader for the accused has taken objection on the ground that the accused was not warned immediately before the confession was recorded by the Magistrate but there is no ruling to the effect that this warning should be given immediately before the confession is recorded, or should be repeated again just before the prisoner's arrival before the Magistrate. It may be noted that the Magistrate went to the length of allowing the accused seven hours to think over the question and to decide whether he would make a confession or not. There are instructions that time should be allowed for reflection, and the Magistrate has certainly given full effect to these instructions.

Another objection taken by the learned pleader for the accused is that witness, Ex. 40, Tarachand, has stated that the police slapped the accused about the time when enquiry was made first from him. Whether this witness is to be believed or not one cannot tell for certain. But in any case it is to be noticed that the confession before the Magistrate was made about two days after the alleged slapping. The statement made by the accused to the mashirs at the time has been eliminated. It is only the confession before the Magistrate which, as mentioned above is relied on.

Now in regard to the confession, as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, it is very detailed and it is confirmed in various particulars. It is confirmed as stated above by the fact that the turban produced by the accused has been identified as that of the deceased, and it is also noticeable that Bacho, a person who might have been also an eyewitness, was sent away, at the time. The confession and Bacho's evidence agree on this point.

There are several other points on which the confession is supported by outside evidence. It is noticeable that in the confession the accused gives a motive for the confession namely that the accused had received a sentence of 22 days rigorous imprisonment for theft of clothes 1 and 1½ months previously owing to the deceased. That also is supported by the other evidence. The accused in the course of his confession states that accused 1 was the leader in the assault and that it was accused 1 who induced him to join in the murder. Now one cannot blindly accept the statement of a person who declares in his confession that he took a smaller part in a murder; but in this particular case the surrounding circumstances to a certain extent make his story probable, because accused 1 was the son-in-law of the deceased and a person of some position, whereas accused 2 was a hari of no particular position. Though this point does not affect the question of conviction it seems to me that it can be taken into consideration in respect of the sentence.

The case is in one way rather peculiar, because the person who, according to the confession, was the leader in the assault, namely accused 1, has been acquitted because the evidence is not strong against him in certain respects particularly owing to the fact that he has not confessed before a Magistrate. But, looking at the case from this point of view, it is possible that accused 2 really did not take such a prominent part in the murder as accused 1. It is to be noted also that accused 2 retracted his confession. He stated before the Committing Magistrate that he was intoxicated and that is why he made his confession. Before the Additional Sessions Judge he stated at one place that he did not make any statement before the Resident Magistrate, while at another place he said that he had originally been beaten and he was given a meal and made giddy.

Taking the evidence as a whole the offence is fully brought home to the accused for the reasons given by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, namely the confession and the surrounding circumstances. But there are certain circumstances which support the view that the present accused was only a minor offender in respect of the actual murder, and on this ground it may not be considered unreasonable to commute the sentence to one of transportation for life.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge has not stated in his judgment why he passed the death sentence. No doubt it was because the murder was a heinous one, but still if a murder is committed by two persons and one of them takes some minor part and is acting under the influence of the other it may sometimes be a case for reduction of the sentence in the case of the man who was acting under the influence of the other, especially where the evidence against him depends primarily on a confession.

There is one other point to which reference may be made. The learned pleader for the accused has taken objection to the mashirnama, Ex. 14, in which it is stated that the accused showed the same place of the murder, which had been already shown by accused 1. I agree that this mashirnama was not of value to the prosecution, and that it would have been better if the learned Additional Sessions Judge had omitted all reference to it in his judgment. He has referred to it in the summing up of the facts of the case, although he has not referred to it in reasons for conviction. I would accordingly confirm the conviction but alter the sentence to one of transportation for life.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—I agree that the sentence of death in the case of accused 2 should be commuted to that of transportation for life.

The main piece of evidence against the accused is his retracted confession; and it shows that not only did he play a minor part but was induced by accused 1 to join him in the offence. He was as much a servant of the deceased as of accused 1 who was the son-in-law of the deceased. The motive alleged by the prosecution also shows that it was accused 1 who was interested in taking the life of the deceased.

One more point which I wish to refer to is that the learned Additional Sessions Judge has in the first part of his judgment, while narrating the circumstances of the case leading up to the trial, introduced certain matters which are either irrelevant or inadmissible; for instance at line 120 of the judgment he has said as follows:

"The Sub-Inspector was then taken by accused 2 to the hurlo of the deceased. Accused 2 there showed him the scene of offence in presence of mashirs. A mashirnama was prepared about (Ex. 14)."

The mashirnama Ex. 14 inter alia contains the following statement alleged to have been made by the accused in presence of the police and the mashirs:

"He says that the cot on which the murder took place is to the east of the hurlo at the distance of three paces. He says that the head of the cot is to the north and the tail to the south. He shows the same place of murder which has formerly been shown by the accused Dur Mahomed."

The learned Judge below was clearly in error in allowing this part of the mashirnama to be exhibited and was further in error in referring to it, as also to the fact that the accused had shown the scene of offence even in the preliminary part of his judgment although he has not made reference to it in the second part of his judgment where he has given reasons for his findings.

Criminal Appeal No. 79 of 1930, Decided on 14th July 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164—Magistrate recording statement of witness under S. 164 cannot be examined as first witness with view that aforesaid witness would re-sile from part of statement so recorded to save one of accused—Such statement can be recorded in evidence only for limited purposes and after examining that aforesaid witness.

An Honorary Magistrate who had recorded a statement of a witness under S. 164 was examined as the very first witness and asked to prove the statement, with a view that the aforesaid witness would re-sile from part of the statement so recorded to save one of the accused.

Held: that this should not have been permitted. The statement could only be recorded in evidence for certain limited purposes and only after examining that aforesaid witness.

(b) Criminal P. C., (1898), S. 297—Accused represented—Court should direct jury to take arguments into consideration—Charge need not be elaborate.

Where the accused are represented, the Court may, having regard to the skill and elaboration with which rival contentions are placed before the jury by counsel on both sides, make the charge not so elaborate, but direct the jury to take the arguments into consideration: 27 Bom. 644, Ref.

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 418—Discrepancies in evidence should be brought on record of Sessions Judge and not in High Court.

If there are any discrepancies in the evidence as recorded in a Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court, it is for the accused to bring them on the record of the Sessions Court so as to afford an opportunity to the prosecution to explain them. The High Court will not look into such evidence. If the accused are unrepresented in the Sessions Court, they have to thank themselves for it. [P 1147 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 297—Accused unrepresented—Judge while charging jury should bring to their notice, likely arguments that would be advanced by pleader, if accused had been represented.

Per Wild, J. C.—Where in a Sessions Court an accused person is unrepresented, it is particularly necessary that the Judge while charging the jury should bring to their notice the arguments which would have been used, if he had been represented by a pleader; else there is a chance that if the case goes to appeal it will be urged that there was a non-direction in the charge of the jury. [P 1147 C 1]

T. V. Thadhani—for Appellants.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—The present appellants who were accused 1 and 3 in the lower Court and two others Sardar Begum and Ashian who have not appealed were all tried by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner for an offence under S. 366, I. P. C., and the jury having returned a unanimous verdict of guilty against them were convicted and sentenced under that section to different periods of imprisonment, the maximum being one year.

The facts of the case are simple. It appears that Sardar Begum is a prostitute. She has a daughter named Gulzar who was also brought up as a prostitute, and probably on whose earning Sardar Begum had been living for some years. The complainant Budan is a motor-driver, a young man of 23 years of age. It appears that Gulzar took a fancy to him and went to live with him in his house where he was living with his married wife. Before she did this, she presented an application to the City Magistrate that she was not willing to live as a prostitute and wanted to live a married life. Evidently her intention was to marry Budan but before the marriage took place she was taken away once before by her mother from the house of Budan but she came back. She was again forcibly taken away by all the four accused, and confined in the house of accused 1 from where she was rescued by the police after the present complaint was filed by Budan. She has now married Budan.

The accused were not represented in the Sessions Court and it appears that to a certain extent the procedure adopted by the trial Court with regard to admission of certain pieces of evidence particularly the statement of Gulzar recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C., was not correct. The summing up of evidence to the jury was likewise defective. The very first witness examined in the case was Mr. Ardeshir. H. Mama, Honorary Magistrate, and was asked to prove the statement of the witness Gulzar recorded by him under S. 164, Criminal P. C. This was evidently done as it was expected that Gulzar would resile from a part of her statement with the object of saving her mother Sardar Begum who was one of the accused. This should not have been permitted. The statement could only be recorded in evidence for certain limited purposes and only after Gulzar had been examined. When Gulzar was examined as a witness, she was not cross-examined with reference to her previous statement, under S. 164, and was not asked to explain how she made it. Under the circumstances it was hardly fair to Sardar Begum that use should have been made by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner in his charge to the jury of this statement. Sardar Begum has not appealed. It is therefore not necessary for us to consider this point any further in the present appeal.

There is no mention in the charge whether the relevant sections were explained to the jury. But we are inclined to the view that this is due to a mistake of the stenographer.

Our attention has however been invited to the direction of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner contained in the following passage :

"There is also one other fact which you must bear in mind, that is, that Gulzar was a prostitute. It might however be argued as to what was the object in taking away Gulzar from the house of the complainant to the house of the accused. It is admitted that the girl and her mother accused 2, are prostitutes. The only inference is that Gulzar was removed for no other purpose but immoral purpose."

It has been argued and not without just cause that a direction given in such positive terms was likely to mislead the jury, that the jury should have been left to draw an inference from the facts for themselves and that if the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner wished to express his own opinion he should have qualified it by warning the jury that it was for them to draw their own inference treating his opinion for what it is worth.

Lastly it has been argued that the summing up is altogether defective as it does not bring out the discrepancies in the evidence and that it therefore infringes the provisions of S. 297, Criminal P. C. It is no doubt true that in certain cases where the accused are represented the Court may, having regard to the elaboration and skill with which rival contentions are placed before the jury by counsel on both sides, make the charge not so elaborate but direct the jury to take the arguments into consideration : see Emperor v. Mal- gowda (1). But the accused were not represented in this case and therefore something more might have been said for the accused.

Under the circumstances we have examined the evidence to see if the offence with which the accused were charged had been proved. The learned counsel has practically admitted that on the record of the case as it stands there can be no other conclusion than that the accused did forcibly remove Gulzar from the house of Budan with one of the objects specified in the section. But the learned counsel has asked us to look at the record of the Magistrate's Court to satisfy ourselves that there are certain discrepancies in the evidence as recorded in the Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court. I am afraid we cannot do that. If there were any discrepancies, it was for the accused to bring them on the record of the Sessions Court so as to afford an opportunity to the prosecution to explain them. If they were unrepresented in the Sessions Court they have to thank themselves for it.

For these reasons I would confirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss this appeal.

Wild, A. J. C.—I concur and have very little to add. But there is one point which occurs to me and that is that where in a Sessions Court an accused person is unrepresented it is particularly necessary that the Judge while charging the jury should bring to their notice the arguments which would have been used if he had been represented by a pleader. Otherwise there is a chance that if the case goes to appeal, it will be urged that there was a non-direction in the charge to the jury. As an instance of that, in the present case, I might mention that in the first report the complainant Budan states that he cannot give names of the witnesses, yet a witness was examined (Taj Mahomed) who according to the complainant had come to the house as the complainant wished to consult him. An argument could have been founded on the statement made in the first report that the witness Taj Mahomed was not present at the time of abduction.

WILD, J. C., AND RUPCHAND, A. J. C.
Rajabali Hassanali — Accused — Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 65 of 1930,
Decided on 7th July 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), Ss. 195 (3) 476, 476 (b) and 537—Application under S. 476 for prosecution of person rejected—On appeal appellate Court remanding proceedings which led to complaint being filed and conviction of the person—Illegality in order of remand not leading to failure of justice held covered by S. 537—S. 403 or Ss. 366 and 369 are not applicable in such a case—Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 403 and 366.

There is nothing in the Code which lays down that once a Magistrate declines under S. 476 to file a complaint, he is functus officio, or that a complaint subsequently filed by him confers no jurisdiction to deal with the person complained against. It is hardly open to argument that a refusal by the Magistrate under S. 476, to file a complaint against an accused person, attracts the applicability of the doctrine of autre fois acquit enunciated by S. 403, or that it amounts to judgment within the meaning of Ss. 366 and 369 which may not therefore be subsequently reviewed. [P 1148 C 1]

Where an application under S. 476 for prosecution of a person is rejected, but on appeal the appellate Court, purporting to act under S. 476 (b), remands the proceedings for further enquiry which results in the complaint being filed against the person, and his conviction, the procedure followed is in strict conformity with the Code, and though the order of remand may be illegal, where the illegality has not led to failure of justice, it is sufficiently covered by the wide provisions of S. 537: 25 Mad. 61 (P. C.), Dist. [P 1148 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), S. 439—Every illegality does not call for interference.

It is well settled that every irregularity or illegality does not ipso facto vitiate a trial or call for the exercise of the powers of interference by the appellate or revisional Court, [P 1148 C 2]

T. V. Thadhani—for Applicant.

D. N. O. Sullivan—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The applicant has been convicted and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment for an offence under S. 211, I. P. C. His appeal to this Court on its Sessions Court side has been dismissed. He has now come to us in revision. It appears that he had filed a complaint in the Court of the City Magistrate of Karachi against two persons, Muso and Wahdalshah; against the former for assault and against the latter for incitement. The defence of Wahdalshah was an alibi, and his case was that on the date of the assault he was on Government duty somewhere at Pano Akil outside Karachi and he produced a railway pass and certain entries to prove his alibi. He was acquitted. He then applied to the learned City Magistrate under S. 476, Criminal P. O., for prosecution of the applicant, but his application was rejected. On appeal to this Court the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, purporting to act under S. 476-B of the Code, remanded the proceedings to the learned City Magistrate for a further inquiry which resulted in a complaint being filed by the learned City Magistrate against the applicant, and to his conviction.

It is argued on behalf of the applicant that the order of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner remanding the proceedings to the learned City Magistrate was ultra vires and that therefore the subsequent inquiry held by the learned City Magistrate and the complaint filed by him were equally ultra vires and conferred no jurisdiction on the trial Court to deal with him.

Now there is a good deal to be said in favour of the applicant with regard to the first proposition propounded by the learned counsel, but that does not mean that the alleged consequences necessarily follow. Our attention has not been invited to any provisions of the Code which lay down that once a Magistrate declines under S. 476 of the Code to file a complaint, he is functus officio, or that a complaint subsequently filed by him confers no jurisdiction on the trial Court to deal with the person complained against. It is hardly open to argument that a refusal by the Magistrate under S. 476 of the Code to file a complaint against an accused person attracts the applicability of the doctrine of autre fois acquit enunciated by S. 403 of the Code, or that it amounts to a judgment within the meaning Ss. 366 and 369 of the Code, which may not therefore be subsequently reviewed. All that S. 195, Cl. (b) requires is that certain offences which are said to have been committed in or in any relation to any proceedings in any Court should not be taken cognizance of except on the complaint in writing of such Court or of some other Court to which such Court was subordinate. The provisions of that section have been sufficiently complied with. The trial has proceeded on a complaint of the Court before which the alleged offence was committed. It is therefore difficult to see how the present trial can be said to have been vitiated.

An order passed on a second application for sanction, the first having been dismissed for default, (in 15 Cr. L. J. p. 71) an order revoking a sanction granted ex parte (in 2. Weir p. 194) and an order granting a fresh sanction when the first order was revoked on technical grounds (in 2 Weir p. 195 and (1911) M. W. N. p. 100), have been held to be orders passed with jurisdiction: see notes of Sohini, 1925 Edn., (p. 476).

If the applicant objected to an order of remand as ultra vires it was his duty to have got it rectified; and again, if he wished to challenge the validity of the subsequent proceedings or wished to have the complaint withdrawn, he should likewise have moved in the matter at the proper time.

It is well settled that every irregularity or illegality does not ipso facto vitiate a trial or call for the exercise of the powers of interference by the appellate or revisional Court. The case of Subramaniam Aiyer v. Emperor (1) has been distinguished by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Rehman v. Emperor (2) (at p. 109 of 54 I. A.) as being a case where the procedure adopted was one which the Code positively prohibited, and it was possible that it might have worked actual injustice to the accused.

In the present case neither of those conditions exist. The procedure adopted by the Court below is not only not contrary to any positive prohibition contained in the Code, but is in strict conformity with it, and the illegality in the order of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has in no way resulted in a failure of justice, and it is sufficiently covered by the very wide provisions of S. 537 of the Code. We accordingly dismiss the application and confirm the conviction and sentence.

Criminal Revn. No. 472 of 1930 and Crim. Revn. Petn. No. 436 of 1930, Decided on 28th July 1930.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 117—Joint inquiries under S. 117 are not illegal even where part of inquiry is under Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110, Cl. (f).

Joint inquiries under S. 117 are not illegal even where part of the inquiry is under Cl. (f), S. 110. The evidence of reputation admitted against the several persons should of course not be against each accused separately but against them all together: A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 189 and 27 Cal. 781, not foll.; A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 55, Rel. on. [P 149 C 1]

P. Viswanatha Ayyar—for Petitioner.

Order.—It is urged that the joint trial of the petitioner with two other persons who did not appeal to the Sessions Judge and have not applied to this Court was illegal. The allegation against them was that all the three of them were together associated in a course of criminal conduct such as to bring them under Cls. (a), (d), (e) and (f), S. 110, Criminal P. C. In such cases S. 117 (5) clearly gave the Magistrate, if he thought it just, the power to deal with all the accused in the same inquiry. But it is said that joint inquiries under S. 117 are not legal where part of the inquiry is under Cl. (f), S. 110, and for this the decision In re: Kutti Goundan (1), which itself cites In Hari Telang v. Queen-Empress (2), is relied upon. There is a sentence in the latter decision which is incorporated into the former to the effect that there can be no connexion between them (the accused) in regard to their characters so as to make them dangerous persons. But this was not the ground of decision in those cases which were decided on the ground that where several accused are being jointly tried under S. 110, evidence of misdeeds against each of them singly should not be admitted against the others as this will naturally prejudice these orders. And Walsh, J., makes this clear in Emperor v. Anqu Singh (3) (at p. 111 of 45 All.). More than this, I think none of the cases cited before me go to show and I find myself unable to agree to the general proposition that where proceedings are taken under S. 110 (f) several persons should not be dealt with together. The evidence of reputation admitted against them should of course not be against each accused separately but against them all together. In this case, as the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge shows, the evidence was clear that the petitioner along with the other two men were pursuing a course of extortion and terrorizing, for which they were all equally responsible and on which they had jointly earned the evil reputation to which several respectable witnesses spoke. I can see no error or irregularity in the trial. The petition is dismissed. P.R.S./S.N. Revision dismissed.

Criminal Revns. Nos. 968 and 969 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petns. Nos. 872 and 873 of 1929, Decided on 14th July 1930, from judgment of Sess. Judge, Anantapur, in Criminal Appeal No. 5 of 1929.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 428—S. 428 does not enable appellate Court to substitute offence in respect of which there has been no conviction and then call for additional evidence supporting the offence.

Section 428 merely enables an appellate Court if it thinks it necessary to call for additional evidence which will explain or clear up or supplement within limitations the evidence for prosecution in support of a charge which has resulted in conviction and does not enable the appellate Court to substitute an offence in respect of which there has not been a conviction and then say that additional evidence must be called which may support such an offence. Order.—Four persons, including the appellants in Criminal Revision Case No. 968 of 1929 (accused 2 and 3) and the appellant in Criminal Revision Case No. 969 of 1929 (accused 5) were convicted by the Joint Magistrate of Penukonda for offences under Ss. 347 and 364.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 189=86 I. C. 49.

(2) [1900] 27 Cal. 781=4 C.W.N. 591.

(3) A. I. R. 1923 All. 35=45 All. 109.

I. P. C., for wrongful confinement to extort property and extortion.

The facts can be dealt with quite shortly and they are that on 3rd December 1927 a document was registered by the District Registrar at Anantapur the material portions of which ran as follows:—

"Deed of sale caused to be written and given to Nethi Narayanappa of Pamdurti. To discharge debts due to others for the purchase of mango trees, I have received from you in cash this day Rs. 300. The land sold to you for this sum is S. No. 882, extent 0.71 acres, with the various fruit trees standing thereon. I have put you in possession this day. Henceforward you will have all my rights. My heirs and I will have nothing to do with it."

Then there is the mark of Mangala Babanna who admittedly was an illiterate person, and the two witnesses are accused 2 and 3. Upon this document were founded the two charges against the accused, the prosecution case being that Mangala Babanna was by confinement and extortionate methods made to execute that document; that he, as a matter of fact, was not the owner of the property at all; and that it was a spurious document got for the purpose of defrauding others. In support of the prosecution case some evidence was given to show that, whereas in the body of the document Rs. 300 was stated to have been paid by way of consideration none in fact was paid. Though the question of consideration was quite an irrelevant one to the two charges then before the Court, because both the charges could be supported equally well whether there had been consideration passing or not, the Joint Magistrate considered it as of some importance as supporting the case for the prosecution and dealt with it. This resulted, as before stated, in the conviction of four of the accused three of whom are the appellants here. The case then came up before the learned Sessions Judge of Anantapur and he, after going very carefully into the facts in a very lengthy and elaborate judgment, came to the conclusion, to put it quite shortly, that the evidence certainly did not support the conviction of the accused of either offence. He then resorted to a procedure which is called in question here. Having come to the conclusion that no conviction under Ss. 347 and 384, I. P. C., could be supported upon the evidence, he dealt with the evidence given with regard to the consideration which passed for the document and decided for reasons which he has given in his judgment that a charge could be framed under S. 423, I. P. C., and that in order that such a charge might be framed there should be additional evidence before him; and he accordingly made an order that the Joint Magistrate should take evidence on the question as to whether or not the Rs. 300 consideration or any part of it passed on the date or at about the time of the execution of that document. The result of that enquiry was that he proceeded upon the additional evidence which came before him and found that no consideration for the sale did pass. He thereupon framed charges against the appellants under S. 423, I. P. C., acquitting the other accused who remained before him; and, having framed those charges, he proceeded at once, for the reasons which he has given in the earlier part of his judgment, to convict the appellants and ordered them to pay fines amounting, in the case of the accused 3, to Rs. 500, and in the case of accused 2 and 5 to Rs. 1,000 each, in default of which there was to be a term of imprisonment.

The matter reduces itself to this: Was the procedure adopted by the learned Sessions Judge a proper one or not? It is of course conceded that under S. 428, Criminal P. C., an appellate Court, in dealing with an appeal under the chapter in which the section appears, may, if it thinks it necessary, order additional evidence to be recorded after stating its reasons for so doing and either may take the evidence itself or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, and it was purporting to act under this section that the additional evidence was ordered to be taken by the learned Sessions Judge. The strong criticism that is made here by Mr. Jayarama Ayyar is that the accused had been convicted under Ss. 347 and 384, I. P. C., and had appealed to the Sessions Court of Anantapur against their conviction for those offences and none other, and that there was no appeal against any conviction under S. 423, I. P. C., because there had not been any conviction or any trial even for an offence under that section. He contends that S. 428, Criminal P. C., merely deals with an appeal against a conviction and does not enable the appellate Court to substitute an offence in respect of which there has not been a conviction and then say that additional evidence must be called which may support such an offence. We think that that criticism is clearly correct and well founded and that S. 428, Criminal P. C., merely enables an appellate Court, if it thinks it necessary, to call for additional evidence which will explain or clear up or perhaps, supplement within limitations the evidence for the prosecution in support of a charge which has resulted in a conviction and which conviction is the subject of an appeal, and that it does not enable an appellate Court to adopt the procedure adopted in this case by the learned Sessions Judge. He might—although we say nothing about its being proper in this case, it is merely an indication of a possible procedure—have indicated that a charge under S. 423, I. P. C., might be framed and sent the case back again for retrial. But in this case he did not adopt that procedure and we are of the opinion that this petition must be allowed. The convictions will be set aside and the fines paid will be refunded to the appellants.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 338-B of 1930, Decided on 24th July 1930, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Maubin, D/- 11th July 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 497—Offence under S. 409, Penal Code — Magistrate cannot grant bail.

Under the provisions of S. 497, Criminal P. C., a Magistrate has no power to grant bail in cases falling under S. 409, Penal Code; A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 205, Foll.; A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 51, Held obsolete. [P 1152 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 17—Order of Additional Sessions Judge, granting or cancelling bail without special powers, is ultra vires.

The Code of Criminal Procedure strictly limits the powers of an Additional Sessions Judge to such as are conferred upon him directly by the Local Government or by the Sessions Judge of the division in which he exercises power. Power to grant or cancel bail could be conferred on him under S. 17. Where no such power is conferred, the order of an Additional Sessions Judge granting or cancelling bail is ultra vires. [P 1152 C 1, 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., Ss. 497 and 498—Offence punishable with death or transportation — High Court will not usually grant bail.

The High Court should not grant bail in cases where a person is charged with offences punishable with death or transportation for life except for exceptional and very special reasons. [P 1152 C 2]

O'de Glanville—for Applicant.

Assistant Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Judgment.—Maung Ba Maung, Secretary of the Maubin Municipality, is accused under S. 409, I. P. C., of committing criminal breach of trust. Having been arrested on 7th July 1930 he was sent up before the Head-quarters Magistrate on 8th July 1930, with a view to obtaining a remand. The Magistrate was of opinion that there was a prima facie case against Ba Maung, but on the authority of Mahomed Eusoof v. Emperor (1) considered that he had power to release Ba Maung on bail and proceeded to do so. The District Superintendent of Police, Maubin, thereupon applied to the Additional Sessions Judge, Maubin, to have this order cancelled. The Additional Sessions Judge, Maubin, very rightly pointed out that the case of Mahomed Eusoof v. Emperor (1) had been overruled by a Full Bench ruling in the case of Emperor v. Nga San Htwa (2) and cancelled the order for bail.

The High Court is now moved in revision on the ground that the order of the Additional Sessions Judge was ultra vires. This application is opposed by the Assistant Government Advocate on the ground that, whatever the powers of the Additional Sessions Judge may be, the original order was ultra vires, and he further urges that this is not a case in which the High Court should use the powers of revision in enlarging an accused on bail.

The provisions of S. 167, Criminal P. C., by themselves would leave it in doubt as to whether a Magistrate before whom an accused could be sent for a remand preliminary to sending him up for trial had any power other than of ordinary detention of the accused before being sent to a Magistrate having jurisdiction for trial purposes. It has been however the practice in this province in the past to regard the term "Magistrate" under S. 167 as synonymous with "Court" under S. 496, Criminal P. C., and bail is habitually granted in cases falling under S. 167, Criminal P. C. It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to discuss the question as to whether bail can be granted under S. 167 by Magistrates, since it is clear that under the provisions of S. 497, Criminal P. C., coupled with the Full Bench ruling above mentioned, a Magistrate has no power to grant bail in cases falling under S. 409, I. P. C.

(1) A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 51=98 I.C. 65=27 Cr. L.J. 401=3 Rang. 588.

(2) A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 205=104 I.C. 101=28 Cr. L.J. 773=5 Rang. 276 (F.B.).

As to the legality of the action of the Additional Sessions Judge in cancelling the bail order the Assistant Government Advocate argues that the Additional Sessions Judge, Maubin, acted as a Court of Sessions under S. 497 (5), Criminal P. C. By office order of the District and Sessions Judge, Myaungmya-Maubin, dated 30th July 1927, the Additional Sessions Judge was empowered to hear all criminal appeals under S. 409, Criminal P. C., criminal miscellaneous cases under S. 123 (2), Criminal P. C., and to preside over Sessions trials of the Maubin District. The Code of Criminal Procedure strictly limits the powers of an Additional Sessions Judge to such as are conferred upon him directly by the Local Government or by the Sessions Judge of the division in which he exercises power. Thus S. 17, Criminal P. C., enables the Sessions Judge to make provision for the disposal of any urgent application by an Additional Sessions Judge when the Sessions Judge is unavoidably absent or incapable of acting. S. 123 (2) provides that where a Magistrate orders a person to give security for a period exceeding one year and the person does not give such security, he shall be imprisoned pending the orders of the Sessions Judge, and the proceedings shall be laid as soon as conveniently may be, before such Court. It is however made clear by S. 123 (3-B) that the word Court does not include an Additional Sessions Judge, since a Sessions Judge may in his discretion transfer any proceedings to an Additional Sessions Judge. S. 193 says that no Court of Sessions should take cognizance of any offence as a Court of original jurisdiction unless the accused has been committed to it, but S. 193 (2) only permits Additional Sessions Judges to try such cases as the Local Government or the Sessions Judge may make over to them for trial. S. 409 states that an appeal to the Court of Sessions or Sessions Judge shall be heard by the Sessions Judge or by an Additional Sessions Judge provided that an Additional Sessions Judge shall hear only such appeals as the Local Government or as the Sessions Judge may make over. The alternative phrase in S. 409 suggests that the Court of Sessions normally means the Sessions Judge, and that the phrase "the Court of Sessions" only refers to the Additional Sessions Judge in cases in which he has proper seisin. S. 438 restricts the powers of an Additional Sessions Judge to such cases only as have been transferred to him.

It would appear therefore that according to the Code an Additional Sessions Judge can only be regarded as exercising the powers of a Court of Sessions where these powers are specially conferred upon him. Power to grant or cancel bail in cases like the present could have been conferred upon him under S. 17. I am therefore of opinion that the order of the Additional Sessions Judge was ultra vires.

As regards the desirability of enlarging the accused in the present case on bail it has been laid down time and again that the High Court should not grant bail in cases where a person is charged with offences punishable with death or transportation for life except for exceptional and very special reasons. No such reasons have been urged before this Court, while affidavits have been sworn on behalf of the prosecution which would suggest that prima facie it was desirable that the applicant should be kept in custody. The orders of the Headquarters Magistrate allowing bail are set aside.

K.N./R.K.

Order accordingly.

HAND WRITING : Some Common Fallacies

BY F. BREWSTER, F. R. M. S., Document Specialist, Calcutta.

There are a surprising number of fallacies prevalent concerning hand-writing, chiefly because of dogmatic statements by persons who have never given the subject any serious study, and who are, therefore, not qualified to speak about it.

Not many persons will be found who will admit their complete ignorance of the subject, as almost everyone has more or less pronounced views of one kind or another, and such is the perversity of human nature, the less qualified the speaker the most vehement is the assertion.

Whatever excuse there may be for ignorance on the part of the layman, there can be none at all for the professional expert who circulates what may be mildly termed inaccuracies. It may be that such inaccuracies are due to ignorance, but more probably they are the outcome of a desire to sustain a fanciful theory, or an alleged test, or system, of some kind.

A very common fallacy is that persons write different hands with different pens, and it is a belief that has the support of alleged authority. A writer becomes habituated to the use of a special pen, or one having a particular point, and most persons find it difficult, or at least awkward, to write with any other kind; but a strange pen does not cause such a writer to write a hand fundamentally different from that which he normally writes. The fact is that a change of pen only causes (though not very often) a superficial transformation that becomes apparent on a brief investigation. A broad or a fine pen will, of course, cause the strokes of the writing to be wide or narrow, but such variation in the width of the strokes has no effect on the writing itself, which remains fundamentally unaltered. One need only sit down and write with various pens to verify the truth of this.

A stub pen, such as the common "relief" may appear to change the position of the shading or emphasis normally employed by a writer, though in reality shading is not possible with a stub pen. What may be mistaken for shading is a broad stroke at a given point caused by the position in which the pen is held with relation to the line of writing. Superficially a stub pen may appear to cause an alteration in the writing, but actually it does not do so.

On the other hand a stylographic pen makes all the strokes in a writing of the same width, and there is no variation in the width of the up and down strokes. The appearance of the writing of a person using a stylo, who normally favours a broad smooth pen, may appear radically different at a casual glance, but a brief examination will show that the difference in pens causes no radical change at all, because the general style, size, and proportion will remain the same.

While the shibboleth of "different pens with different hands" is exceedingly common, one very rarely hears of anyone claiming to write different hands with a pen and a pencil, yet if it were really true that different instruments caused different writings, it is only reasonable to assume that writing with a pencil would be altogether different from that with a pen. The fact is that there is no radical difference in the normal writing of the same person with pen or pencil. A pencil, however, has the effect of causing some-writers to write faster than with a pen because of the smoother point of a pen-gliding along the paper.

Many persons seem to think that because they make a slight modification in the forms of some of their letters, this brings about a different hand, but it is one of the underlying principles of handwriting investigation that no one ever writes twice exactly alike. The human hand is not capable of producing stereotyped forms of letters with the result that there must inevitably be certain variations in writing. Even in a signature of any length, it will be found that there are certain variations in size, in length, and in the proportions of the several parts. These variations, however, do not constitute a different handwriting, for really two different habits in writing do not co-exist.

Writing is a complicated acquirement as the result of repeated conscious efforts, until at length it becomes an unconscious or semi-automatic habit. For a writer at once to drop all of the unconscious habits he has acquired by repeated and laborious repetition is equivalent to a person changing off-hand his multifarious personal habits in speech, dress, gait and other various mannerisms. It cannot be done.

A person will sometimes assert that he writes two different hands, in proof of which he will exhibit a specimen each of his normal writing and pen-printing, but the latter is not writing at all, and it is, therefore, fallacious to say that it is a different handwriting from that normally written.

Another fallacy is that which asserts that heredity contributes, something to the form of writing movements, and that sometimes members of the same family possess striking similarities. Such assertions are sometimes supported by the quotation of some authority, which to the uninformed may seem very convincing, but it is never wise to accept blindly any authority, especially if it is rescued from the oblivion of the dead and past bygone. Commentators on the law are, perhaps, the greatest offenders, as they seem to be particularly fond of citing illustrations that often go back to a dim and hazy past, and it is not uncommon to find them quoting from judicial pronouncements as much as 200 years old.

The conditions under which writing was taught 100 years ago, or more, are vastly different from what they are now. In the old days the teaching of writing was a sort of family institution, wherein the father set the copies for the son, but although in the early stages the son may have dutifully copied the outline set for him, he began of his own accord to develop idiosyncrasies or mannerisms the moment he acquired a certain amount of freedom.

Even assuming for a moment that two members of a family wrote so much alike as to be indistinguishable (which is doubtful) the teaching of writing under modern conditions is materially different both as regards style, and the surroundings in which it is taught.

Modern youth is taught to write in schools and other institutions, and it is consequently inevitable that with the different styles that are constantly being developed and brought out, the absence of parental influence, the personal views of the teacher and the difference in surroundings, that the writing acquired must, of necessity, be different in many ways from that of previous generations.

Now and again it is found that for some special reason, or with some particular object, a son will deliberately cultivate a very closely similar form of signature to that of his father, but such instances are extremely rare. To expect that under modern conditions a son will write a lengthy document so as to be indistinguishable from the writing of his father, is to expect the impossible. In the handwriting of different persons there will be found to occur occasional similarities in a letter or two, but it by no means follows that because of an accidental or isolated agreement or similarity (that at best is perhaps superficial) the writings of two different persons are alike. Just as it is sometimes found that the features of two persons may have something in common, yet many other differences will irresistibly prove that they are not alike. As Ames aptly expresses it :

"'Alike as two peas' is a trite saying; yet when two peas are scrutinized under the lens of a microscope differences of detail multiply well-nigh to the infinite."

"Like, but oh! how different!"

FORGED DOCUMENTS

A Short Study of Present-day Methods Concerning Proof in Court

BY F. BREWESTER, F. R. M. S., Document Specialist.

An experience of many years of dealing with disputed documents leads one to the inevitable conclusion that only the most meagre attention is devoted to the vital subject of preparation by lawyers generally in India.

The general idea seems to be that, all that is necessary is to secure the services of an expert, allow him only the briefest time to inspect the documents, put him in the witness-box, and after one or two preliminary questions, then to ask him to state his reasons. In such circumstances, the evidence of the witness usually amounts to a mere expression of opinion, since it does not permit him the time or the means to bring forth, and illustrate, all the reasons that could be advanced.

Some forgeries are so gross and clumsy that they can be detected at sight, but even with such productions, it is advisable that a full and complete preparation should be made, if the spuriousness of the document is to be proved and the case won. When however the forgery is not obvious at sight, only the fullest and most complete scientific preparation will ensure the fact being proved.

Failure to prove what is actually known to be a forgery is due to many different causes. It is not every day that a lawyer has such a matter to deal with, and consequently he is not fully conversant with the subject, and he is not aware of the necessity of thorough preparation on the technical aspects. Failure may also be due to the incompetency of the person selected to provide the technical proof, or it may be due to the want of skill in placing all the facts clearly before the Court. A frequent cause of failure in proving a forgery is due to the mistaken practice of leaving the critical examination of the document by an expert until the very last moment.

Another difficulty in the proof of a fraudulent document lies in the regretful fact that undoubtedly there are dishonest and incompetent experts (or alleged experts) who will perjure themselves by giving any opinion that is desired of them. Mr. A. S. Osborne, in a recent article in the Virginia Law Review, apropos of this says:

"The activities of certain men who try claim cases and defend criminals have developed these corrupt specialists, or so called experts, who stand ready to assist advocates in defending crime and promoting fraud. In many Courts, however these witnesses in forgery cases cannot as in the old days merely give an opinion, but must at least attempt to give the 'grounds of belief,' and as, there are no reasonable 'grounds' for their contentions the weakness of this testimony can be shown by correct testimony, or by an opposing attorney who is technically prepared to cross-examine the witness."

In a recent trial two diametrically opposed opinions in writing on the same document were given by an alleged expert who lays claim to official recognition.

Many lawyers, having the consciousness that they have a true case, seem to think that the best way to offset dishonest expert testimony that has been brought in to 'bolster up a fraudulent plea, is to put their own expert in the witness-box and get him to contradict the evidence of the "fellow on the other side." That view is not only misleading but positively dangerous. Such procedure very often makes it difficult for the Judge to weigh up the conflicting opinion thus given, with the result that he will probably decline to consider the evidence at all.

The conscientious lawyer should endeavour to aid the Judge to the best of his ability, and the simplest and most effective way, is to have the expert who is known to be on the wrong side, thoroughly and effectively cross-examined. To do this, he must be fully coached on the technical side, and also he must know the history of the witness in other trials. The effectiveness of this method has been fully proved in several recent trials, and its adoption is strongly recommended.

Another difficulty lies in the fact that many Judges and Magistrates shirk the consideration of expert evidence. Adam in his Foreword to Aiyer's "Detection of Forgery" says:

"Even when expert evidence (regarding handwriting) is forthcoming Judges frequently admit their inability to form an opinion. Knowing nothing about scientific detection they have either been unable to follow the expert's demonstration or are unwilling to attempt to do so. The result of this refusal to examine the documents for himself not seldom results in the Judge either unreservedly accepting the expert's opinion or refusing to do so because of what he believes to be the great fallibility of all such experts; . . . to be either genuine or false. I do not mean things fanciful or doubtful but clear and convincing things which might have been discovered by the Judge or Magistrate himself if he had only taken the trouble to examine the documents with care and not given the matter up as being too technical or scientific for his comprehension."

What then is requisite in order to ensure that a right verdict is obtained? To be as brief as possible, the first thing to do is to place the document in dispute before a reliable and competent expert, with the request that he should make such photographs as are necessary and submit a detailed report. Such reports as "In my opinion the document 10 is a forgery (or is genuine)" should not be tolerated.

Then in good time before the trial commences the lawyer should arrange a consultation with the expert, who will explain in detail the points to be enforced and the manner in which the technical evidence should be brought out, and where necessary, support his statements by authority. A consultation of this kind is fruitful of results. If an expert is appearing on the other side, obtain full and complete technical and other assistance on which to cross-examine him.

PANCKRIDGE, J.

Krishna Gobinda Chatterji — Petitioner.

Mt. Kishoribala Debi — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 257 of 1930, Decided on 2nd May 1930.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 39, R. 2—Injunction cannot be granted for not pursuing remedy in criminal Court under Criminal P. C., S. 488.

A civil Court has no jurisdiction to restrain a party by an injunction from pursuing her remedy, under S. 488, Criminal P. C., in a criminal Court. [P 154 C 1]

Panchanan Ghose and Sitangsu Bhusan Bose — for Petitioner.

Mrityunjoy Chatterji, Debabrata Mukherji and Bhola Nath Roy — for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a rule obtained by the petitioner Krishna Gobinda Chatterji calling upon the District Magistrate of Bankura and also on the opposite party Kishoribala Debi, the petitioner's wife, to show cause why an order under S. 488, Criminal P. C., directing the petitioner to pay a monthly maintenance of Rs. 18 to the opposite party for a certain time and thereafter to pay a monthly maintenance at a reduced rate should not be set aside. An appeal was filed against this order before the Sessions Judge of Bankura and was dismissed by him. It appears that subsequent to the application for an order under S. 488, Criminal P. C., the petitioner instituted a suit in the Munsif's Court seeking restitution of conjugal rights. While the application was still pending he obtained an order from the Munsif restraining the opposite party from proceeding with her application. In spite of the injunction the Magistrate was of opinion that he had jurisdiction to entertain the opposite party's application and made the order to which I have referred. The learned Sessions Judge took the same view.

The ground on which the rule has been granted is that the Sessions Judge erred in holding that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order he had made. I have read the judgment of the Sessions Judge which has dealt with the matter at some length. It is clear to me that in itself it is unsatisfactory as a justification of the order made by the Magistrate. It is conceded that the injunction granted by the Munsif was a temporary injunction, but the learned Judge has founded his decision upon a consideration of Chap. 10, Specific Relief Act, which is only concerned with perpetual injunction, as is indicated by S. 53 of the same Act. The law as regards temporary injunction is to be found not in the Specific Relief Act but in the Civil Procedure Code. The relevant order of that Code is O. 39. It is conceded that R. 1 of that order has no application, but it is said that this injunction was made in the exercise of the jurisdiction which the Munsif had by reason of R. 2. The petitioner I think rightly says that neither the Magistrate and Sessions Judge nor this Court sitting in criminal revision can question the propriety of the injunction provided it was made with jurisdiction. In my opinion however on the face of it the injunction is one which the Munsif had no jurisdiction to grant and must be treated as a nullity. My attention has not been directed to any provision of law by which the injunction can be justified if it does not fall within the purview of R. 2, sub-R. 1. Now the suit in which the temporary injunction is granted must according to that subrule be a suit for restraining the defendant from committing a breach of contract or other injury of any kind. I am extremely doubtful whether on the widest interpretation of the language the suit whereby the plaintiff seeks to enforce his conjugal rights against the defendants can be held to be a suit of the nature contemplated by the subrule.

But on the assumption that it can be considered as a suit of such a nature I do not think that the injunction granted by the Munsif is such an injunction as the subrule contemplates, for the injunction must be one to restrain the defendant from committing breach of contract or injury complained of or any breach of contract or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract or relating to the same property or right. In my opinion that does not cover in the circumstances of the case an injunction restraining the defendant from proceeding with her application under S. 483, Criminal P. C. I do not think that the presumption of such an application is a breach of the matrimonial contract or that it is covered by the other words of the sub-rule to which I have referred in detail. To my mind the Munsif had no jurisdiction to restrain the opposite party by an injunction from pursuing her remedy "in the criminal Court ; and I am of opinion that the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge were right in treating the order made by the Munsif as annulity. The Rule is discharged.

Sashi Kanta De—Accused.

Death Ref. No. 4 of 1930, and Criminal Appeal No. 218 of 1930, Decided on 14th May 1930, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Mymensingh.

Criminal P. C. S. 297—Dying declaration as foundation for prosecution story — Caution should be given to jury as to its weight and efficacy.

Where the foundation for the prosecution story is dying declaration of the deceased a caution should be given to the jury as regards the weight and efficacy to be given to a dying declaration and their attention should be drawn to the question of how far the other facts and surrounding circumstances proved in evidence must be said to support the truth or otherwise of that declaration. [P 1154 C 2]

A. K. Dhar—For Accused.

Lalit Mohan Sanyal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This case comes before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C., with regard to the trial of a man named Sashi Kanta De alias Sashi Barai in which the charges against the accused were under S. 302 and 397 I. P. C. The jury have arrived at a unanimous verdict of guilty, and the learned Judge agreeing therewith passed the sentence of death subject to confirmation by this Court.

We have had the charge to the jury placed before us. The case was one in which it is alleged that the accused had murdered and robbed one Ram Golam Thakur as he was on his way home at about 8 o'clock one evening. It appears that the fatal blow was on the back of his head. The evidence of the prosecution shows that when he was struck he called out with the result that certain persons came upon the scene and the deceased made a statement to them in the nature of a dying declaration mentioning who it was who had done him the injury. He was then removed to the house of Mahi Kanta Majumdar and he made a further statement to him. In these circumstances it is pretty clear that the foundation for the prosecution case is the dying declaration of the deceased. It has been pointed out to us that in the charge there is no caution given to the jury as regards the weight and the efficacy to be given to a dying declaration of this character. Some such caution should undoubtedly have been laid before them, and their attention should have been drawn to the question of how far the other facts and surrounding circumstances proved in evidence might be said to support the truth or otherwise of that declaration. It would not be fitting for us to lay down any more detailed directions having regard to the order that we propose to make. But so far as the case now before us is concerned the verdict of the jury and the sentence must be set aside and the case must go back for retrial by some other learned Judge.

It is particularly regrettable that this course is necessary having regard to the time that had elapsed between the commission of the offence and the conclusion of the trial. Let the record be sent down at once and let the case be disposed of as early as possible.

Criminal Revn. Nos. 1018 and 1019 of 1929, Decided on 14th August 1929, from order of Fourth Presy. Magistrate, D/- 2nd August 1929.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 208—Cross-examination of prosecution witnesses must be allowed before determining whether case should be committed to Sessions.

It is a clear right of the parties to cross-examine prosecution witnesses before the committing Court makes up its mind as to whether there is a case to be committed. In addition to that there is the right to call evidence for the defence.

S. K. Sen, Prabodhchandra Chatterji and Satindranath Mukerji—for Petitioner.

B. C. Chatterji and Anilchandra Ray Chaudhuri—for Opposite Party.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, it appears to me that the order of commitment must be quashed. The case is one in which certain persons are said to have been entrusted with certain bales of cotton yarn. It is said that, having been entrusted with these goods they have, in fact, committed criminal breach of trust by entering into a conspiracy with certain other people to make away with the goods. We are concerned with two matters. One is a rule obtained by the accused Nanooram and the other is an application for a rule by the accused Piramul and Gobardhan Das. So far as Nanooram is concerned, we have had discussed before us the question, whether, on any of the charges on which the Magistrate has committed the accused, there is prima facie evidence to justify the order of commitment; and taking the evidence carefully as recorded, we have come to the conclusion that we are not prepared to say that there is insufficient evidence to justify that commitment.

Then there comes another objection to this commitment order, which applies to the accused in both the cases before us, because it is said that, if the case of Nanooram is somewhat touch and go as to whether there is any evidence to warrant a commitment at all, both his case and the case of the other petitioner cannot be judged at the present stage for the purpose of showing whether the commitment is right or wrong, because the course taken by the Magistrate has deprived all these petitioners of their right, first of all, to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses so as to show that there is no case for commitment and, secondly, to call any evidence that they might desire.

In my judgment, on the second ground the case is completely made out. It appears that this prosecution started first of all as a prosecution in an ordinary warrant case, but that the Magistrate made up his mind, in view of the suggestion that there was a case exclusively triable by the Court of Session, to deal with the case from the beginning as though it were to end in a commitment, and it is said that, at the time the Magistrate so decided, he explained that no prejudice would accrue to these petitioners, because, instead of calling upon them at once, as in a case that was going to be committed to cross-examine each witness as his evidence was given for the prosecution, he would permit counsel to reserve the cross-examination the idea being that, if it afterwards turned out that the Magistrate was not trying a warrant case in the ordinary course, counsel would then have an opportunity to cross-examine.

What happened in fact is this: The defence did not decline to cross-examine but from the Magistrate's own writing we find that the cross-examination was reserved: It could only be reserved with the Magistrate's permission and it is clear to my mind that the story in the petition before us is correct. The Magistrate himself says, as may well be true, that he has no recollection that he assured the defendant's advocate that the accused would have an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses. But he says:

"I might have said so; but as the case is going to the High Court Session, I reject the defendants' prayer on that point."

With great respect to the Magistrate, if the Magistrate acted as he is said to have acted, he cannot possibly commit the case to the Sessions without keeping his promise. It is a clear right of the parties to cross-examine prosecution witnesses before the committing Court makes up its mind as to whether there is a case to be committed. In addition to that, there is the right to call evidence for the defence. Those rights given under Chap. 18 of the Code have in effect been taken away from these petitioners. In the same way, if this case were to be dealt with as a warrant case, it is evident that the accused would have the right to cross-examine, whether before or after the charges were framed. I am satisfied that the question whether there is sufficient evidence is a somewhat narrow question, a question in which there is some little difficulty. It is quite impossible for this Court to permit people to be committed to the Sessions, when the Magistrate fails to comply with the law, so as to see that the accused get an opportunity to satisfy him that there is no case which requires commitment. On that ground, the commitment of the petitioners cannot be supported. The commitment will be set aside and the cases must go back to be tried in accordance with law. The defence must be given an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and to adduce any evidence they desire before there can be any question of a recommitment to the High Court. On the other hand, if, as a result of the evidence, the Magistrate does not any longer think it necessary to commit, he can proceed with the cases as warrant cases.

Mokshed Sheikh and another — Accused—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 103 of 1930, Decided on 12th August 1930.

Evidence Act, S. 33— Verbal application is not sufficient ground for admitting evidence under S. 33—Omission to object does not dispense with legal requirements.

It is necessary that under S. 33 the Judge must be satisfied that the evidence is admissible on the materials before him, namely, on the ground that the witness whose deposition is attempted to be put in was not or could not be found or had been won over by the adverse party or otherwise incapable of giving evidence.

A verbal application made by the Public Prosecutor for admission of evidence of a particular witness under S. 33, Evidence Act, is not by itself a sufficient ground for admitting that evidence: 20 W. R. 69 Cr. and 41 Cal. 601. Ref.

The fact that no objection was taken to the reception of evidence of a particular witness on the mere verbal application by the Public Prosecutor by the defence, does not dispense with the requirements of S. 33, Evidence Act: 39 Mad. 449 and A.I. R. 1929 Lah. 542, Rel. on.

Judgment.—In this appeal it is objected on behalf of the appellants that the learned Judge has misread the evidence in some portions and has wrongly admitted the evidence of a certain witness under S. 33, Evidence Act. This is the only important point taken before us. It appears that the dacoity with which the accused were charged was committed after midnight of 6th July 1929. The information was lodged at the thana the following morning by a man named Sobhan. He did not name any of the dacoits nor did he say that some of them had been recognized. The first information was recorded by a Sub-Inspector of the name of Abdul Jabbar Chaudhury. The evidence shows that on the night of 7th July 1929 another Sub-Inspector by the name of Birendra Nath Pal took over the investigation from Abdul Jabbar Chaudhury. Abdul Jabbar was not examined in the committing Magistrate's Court because he had died before the case was heard. Birendra Nath Pal was examined by the committing Magistrate. He was not examined before the Sessions Judge but his evidence was admitted by the learned Judge under S. 33, Evidence Act. There is nothing on the record to show in what circumstances or on what ground this evidence was admitted. In the order sheet we find under order dated 14th January 1930 the following notes:

"Then the evidence of Babu Birendra Nath Pal (P. W. 10) in the lower Court put in by the prosecution under S. 33, Evidence Act."

There is no order by the Judge admitting the evidence on the ground that he was satisfied under that section that the witness was not available for examination before him. In the charge the learned Judge has expressed himself thus:

"In the morning at 9 a. m. Sovan (P. W. 6) went to the thana and lodged F. I. R. Ex. 5. The daroga who recorded it is not available and his evidence in the lower Court has had to be put in and used here as evidence."

In this sentence the learned Judge has been guilty of a number of inaccuracies. The first information report is not Ex. 5 in the case but Ex. 2. Ex. 5 is the search report which was prepared and signed by Birendranath Pal. Then the statement that the Daroga who recorded it (meaning Birendra) is not available is not correct because the daroga who recorded it was Abdul Jabbar who is dead. Then the learned Judge proceeds to say: "The daroga went to Rakhal's house on 7th July." If by this daroga he means Birendranath Pal the evidence shows that Birendra went to his house on 8th July. The charge is therefore vitiated by a confusion which has been made by the learned Judge in describing the incidents shortly after the dacoity. But the greater defect is with regard to the learned Judge's admission of the evidence under S. 33 Evidence Act. The record does not show that there were such materials before him as to satisfy him that the presence of witness Birendranath Pal could not be secured. It has been held from early times that in order to enable a Court to admit the deposition of a witness under S. 33, Evidence Act, the ground for its admission should be stated fully and clearly to enable the High Court to judge of its propriety.

Queen v. Mowjan (1): It is necessary that under S. 33, Evidence Act, the Judge must be satisfied that evidence is admissible on the materials before him, namely on the ground that the witness whose deposition attempted to be put in was not or could not be found or had been won over by the adverse party or otherwise incapable of giving evidence. In Emperor v. Kangalmali (2), the learned Judges refused to admit evidence though certain witnesses had sworn that the witness could not be found and that a warrant was issued on the witness. In their opinion this evidence before the Judge did not lay sufficient foundation for the reception of the evidence. The warrant was not produced and there was no evidence on the record to show that attempt was made to get the witness and therefore there was no evidence to show what was done to find out the man. That was a much stronger case than the present in which there is no material on the record not even an application to show that the witness could not be found. It is possible that a verbal application was made by the Public Prosecutor but that is no sufficient ground as has been held in In Re Annavi Muthurayan (3). It appears however that in this case no objection to the reception of the evidence was taken by the defence but that does not dispense with the requirements of S. 33: see Golam Haider v. Emperor (4) and the Madras case above referred to. We are accordingly of opinion that the learned Judge was not right in admitting the evidence of this witness Birendranath Pal and placing it before the jury. The evidence of identification in this case consists of the evidence of a woman named Katyani and the approver. The approver has contradicted the witness Katyani in several points. The learned Judge in his charge has referred to the evidence of the witnesses and says:

"In my opinion there is no genuine corroboration of an independent kind. You have seen that the approver's evidence is in many respects inconsistent with the woman Katyani; that of course may be due to mistake on the part of either. But that only confirms my opinion (which you are not bound to accept) that in this case there is no corroboration of the approver's implication of Mokshed and Doulat. There is no point in saying that if you believe Katyani's evidence it corroborates the approver. That is arguing in a circle.

On this evidence the accused were convicted by the jury, who were divided in the proportion of 3 to 2, under S. 395, I. P.C., and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years each. We are of opinion that the trial has been vitiated by the defect in the learned Judge's charge. The question arises whether in the circumstances of this case there should be an order for retrial. Having gone through the evidence and the learned Judge's comment upon it we think that it is not a case where there should be a fresh trial. Accordingly we allow the appeal and direct that the accused be acquitted and set at liberty.

Graham, J.—This rule was issued calling on the District Magistrate of Midnapore to show cause why certain proceedings drawn up against the petitioners under S. 133, Criminal P. C., should not be quashed, or such other order made as this Court might deem fit and proper upon grounds 2, 3 and 5 in the petition to this Court. The first of these grounds is that the proceedings in question are bound to cause irreparable mischief to the lawful and legitimate trade of the petitioners, and as such proceedings are not contemplated by the criminal law. The next ground is that the Courts below have erred in law in construing S. 133, Criminal P. C., and that upon a proper interpretation of the section they ought to have held that it has no application whatsoever to the facts and circumstances of the case. The third and last ground is that the procedure adopted by the Court below has been illegal and without jurisdiction and has operated to the serious prejudice of the petitioners.

It appears that these proceedings have had their origin in rivalry which had arisen between two steamer companies, namely, the Calcutta Steam Navigation Co. Ltd., and the Ghatal Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. There was evidently keen competition between these companies and their agents have been vying with one another in trying to attract passengers for their respective companies. In the order which has been drawn up by the learned Magistrate three matters have been specified for the purpose of justifying the order under S. 133, Criminal P. C. Firstly, the alleged practice of taking up passengers from boats; secondly, the allegation that the petitioner company is in the habit of taking up passengers from places other than the recognized jetties ordinarily used for the purposes; and thirdly, that as a result of these practices backwash is caused and that this involves danger to the public. The broad question is whether, having regard to the facts and circumstances of this case, the provision of S. 133, Criminal P. C. have been rightly applied. In my judgment that section has no application whatever to the facts and circumstances of a case such as the present. It is to be observed that Chap. 10, in which this section is included, deals with public nuisances, and it would certainly be a straining of language to hold that the acts which have been described above constitute a public nuisance. The only part of the section which could be deemed to apply is para. 3, which is in the following words:—

“That the conduct of any trade or occupation, or the keeping of any goods or merchandise, is injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community, and that in consequence such trade or occupation should be prohibited or regulated or such goods or merchandise should be removed or the keeping thereof regulated.”

In my opinion this section deals only with occupations or trades which are in themselves injurious to health and has nothing whatever to do with trades which in themselves are harmless, but in the course of which a public nuisance might be committed. I have no doubt whatever that the section was never intended to apply to the facts and circumstances of a case such as the present.

The result, therefore, is that this rule must be made absolute and the proceedings in question quashed. This order will not interfere with the discretion of the Magistrate or prevent him from taking any other steps under any other section of the law which may be considered to be applicable.

S. K. Ghose, J.—My own view is that by the amendment in para. 3, S. 133, Criminal P. C., that section has been amplified, so that its scope has been widened. It seems to me that it can no longer be said that the section is confined to trades which are injurious in themselves; on the contrary it applies to cases of trades which become injurious by reason of the conduct of them. It will be noticed that the words “conduct” and “regulate” occur for the first time in the amended section. But having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, I agree with my learned brother that the rule should be made absolute.

C. 237 and 41 Cal. 173, Dist. [P 1163 C 1]

Susil Kumar Sen—for Incorporated Law Society.

Narendra Kumar Basu—for Bar Association.

Pearson, J.—In this matter a rule was issued by us upon the opposite party to show cause why he should not be committed to prison or otherwise dealt with for the contempt of this Court and of the Court of Akshoy Kumar Bose, Deputy Magistrate of Jalpaiguri, in printing and publishing and allowing to be published certain articles on 6th March 1930 entitled "The Sedition Case of Jalpaiguri" and "Bichar" and why he should not pay the costs.

The articles related to the trial of certain accused persons under S. 124-A, I. P. C., which started in November 1929, and went on until February 1930. On 28th February they were found guilty and sentenced, and on 7th March they appealed to this Court. The articles in question were published at Jalpaiguri on 6th March, and the opposite party is resident there.

The Chief Justice has directed that we should exercise the jurisdiction vested in this Court by the Contempt of Courts Act 1926, but when the Rule first came on for hearing, the point was raised by Mr. Sen, appearing as representing the Incorporated Law Society, that the matter was one of such a nature that the party must be represented by an advocate of the Court instructed by an attorney, which was not the case. We directed notice to be given to the Bar Association, and Mr. N. K. Basu has now appeared in their interests.

In so far as the contempt of a subordinate Court is concerned the matter is now governed by the provisions of the Contempt of Courts Act 1926, enacted, as the preamble states, because doubts had arisen as to the powers of a High Court to punish contempts of subordinate Courts. S. 2 (1) of the Act, so far as material, provides that:

"The High Courts of Judicature established by Letters Patent shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction, powers and authority, in accordance with the same procedure and practice, in respect of contempts of Courts subordinate to them as they have and exercise in respect of contempts of themselves."

Mr. Sen has referred in aid of his argument to the decision of the Special Bench in the case of Re Barristers and Vakils (1), which however only decided actually that where a Magistrate had committed an accused for trial to the High Court under the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1908, barristers would have the exclusive right of audience before the Special Tribunal at the trial of such cases in the High Court. The reasons for the decision are not given. Mr. Sen also referred to the provisions of Cls. 22, 23 and 24, Letters Patent of 1865, as to the criminal jurisdiction of their Court, and to R. 2, Crown Side Rules, laid down in Ch. 37 of the Rules and Orders, as regards the trial of cases at the Crown Side under the extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction. He also referred to Ch. 2, R. 4, of the rules and orders regarding the exclusive right of audience in any matter on the original side.

Mr. Basu on the other hand has argued that the Court has power to dispose of the matter in its criminal appellate jurisdiction, though it may be the Crown side would also have jurisdiction to deal with it. Even under Ch. 37, R. 2, if the matter is one within the extraordinary criminal jurisdiction, he points out that applications for its exercise are to be heard and disposed of at the appellate side.

The matter is one that is by no means free from difficulty. The power of the High Court to commit for any contempt of itself is inherent in the Court and arises from the fact that it is a Court of Record. The power is one that is ancillary to the exercise of the various jurisdictions of the High Court and it may be expedient to exercise it in or in relation to any one of those jurisdictions. As regards the nature of such proceedings taken in contempt, I do not consider it necessary or desirable to lay down any general rule that such proceedings must necessarily and exclusively fall under any particular one of the different jurisdictions conferred on the Court by its Letters Patent; though it may be that the Court on its Crown side would have the power to deal with such a matter as the present: see per Jenkins, C. J. in Legal Remembrancer v. Motilal Ghose (2), at p. 215. On the other hand I am not satisfied that that must be the exclusive way of dealing with such a matter as an application in contempt. Upon the whole I am not prepared to uphold the contention that in this case the party, if represented, must appear through an advocate instructed by an attorney.

Jack, J.—I agree.

Penal Code, S. 341 — Essential element in wrongful restraint is that person restrained must have right to use thing complained of.

Sures Chandra Talukdur — for Petitioner.

Judgment. — This rule has been issued on two grounds: first of all, that the conviction and sentence are bad in law inasmuch as the mandatory provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., were not followed, and secondly that the facts do not constitute an offence under S. 341, I. P. C., inasmuch as among others the complainant had no right to use the rain water passage as a urinal. The petitioner has been convicted under S. 341, I. P. C., for wrongfully restraining the complainant from going to a certain urinal. The complainant is apparently a tenant of the petitioner and they have fallen out. The complainant's case was that he was not allowed to go to a certain urinal in the house. The learned Magistrate has come to no finding as to whether the complainant had any right whatever to use the aforesaid urinal. This urinal apparently consisted of a couple of bricks put over a rain-water pipe. In order to hold the petitioner guilty under S. 341, I. P. C., it would be necessary to determine that the complainant had a right to use the urinal. That the Magistrate has not done. Therefore there is no alternative but to set aside the conviction and sentence and to send the case back for retrial. The retrial should be held by some Magistrate other than Mr. Rustomji. The Magistrate trying the case should bear in mind the point I have stated above.

It is illegal to proceed under S. 117, I.P.C., which allows a higher punishment for abetment of an offence for the punishment of which a lighter and separate penalty is provided by the provisions of S. 9, Salt Act (1882). [P 1162 C 2; P 1164 C 1]

(b) Salt Act (1882)—Doing anything contravening Salt Act or rule thereunder or abetment of such an act is not separate offence under Penal Code (1860), S. 40.

Doing anything in contravention of Salt Act (1882) or of any rule made thereunder is not a separate offence under Penal Code nor is it that an abetment of an act in contravention of Salt Act or of any rule made thereunder is a separate offence under the Penal Code: 6 O. C. 153, Ref.; 6 Mad. 249, Dist. [P 1163 C 1]

(c) General Clauses Act, S. 26—Conviction for abetment of offence exclusively under Salt Act—S. 26 is inapplicable.

Where an act for the abetment of which conviction takes place is not a separate offence under Penal Code but is an offence exclusively under Salt Act (1882), S. 26, General Clauses Act, is inapplicable. [P 1163 C 2]

(d) Penal Code (1860), S. 5—Where there is special law, making particular act an offence and providing penalties, general law is inapplicable.

Where an act is an offence under specific law and such an offence can also be punished under the specific law, that law and not the general law would apply. [P 1164 C 1]

(e) Salt Act (1882), S. 9—S. 9 prescribes punishments for all kinds of offences under Salt Act.

Clause (c), S. 9 embraces all abetments whether aggravated or mitigated in their nature. The section does not provide for any execution in respect of such abetments as provided for by Penal Code, S. 117, and the punishment prescribed by the said section is for all abetments of acts which are declared to be offences by the provisions of Salt Act. [P 1164 C 1]

(f) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439 (5)—Conviction of members of Bar Association under Penal Code, S. 117—Revision application filed by Bar Association to invoke powers of High Court under S. 439—Cl. 5 was held to be inapplicable.

Two members of the Bar Association were convicted under S. 117, Penal Code read with S. 9, Salt Act (1882), by First Class Magistrate. The Bar Association authorized the President to file revision application to the High Court invoking its powers under S. 439 on the ground that the conviction was illegal.

Held: that the proceedings by way of revision before the High Court were not intended by party who could have appealed but had not appealed and therefore Cl. 5 was inapplicable. [P 1162 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an application presented by the President of the Oudh Bar Association, Lucknow, on behalf of that Association invoking the powers of this Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C., 1898, in the matter of the conviction of Messrs. Mohan Lal Saksena and C. B. Gupta under S. 117, I.P.C., read with S. 9, Salt Act, 1882, by a First Class Magistrate of Lucknow under his judgment of 14th April 1930. The two gentlemen mentioned above are members of the Oudh Bar Association. Accordingly in their interest the said Association passed a resolution at a special general meeting, authorizing the President of the Association to move this Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C., on the ground that the conviction was illegal for the reason that there was no evidence on the record to prove that Mr. C. B. Gupta did any overt act amounting to abetment of an offence against Salt Act, 1882, and also on the ground that neither Mr. C. B. Gupta nor Mr. Mohan Lal Saksena could legally be convicted and punished under the provisions of S. 117, I.P.C. S. 117 of the Code prescribes penalty of imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years or with fine or with both and in the present case the two gentlemen above-mentioned have been sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment each.

Besides these two gentlemen, who are members of the Oudh Bar Association as already stated, there were six others who were convicted by the same judgment and sentenced to similar punishment under the same section of the Penal Code. They are Shyam Sundar Nigam, Jai Dayal Avasthi, H. C. Bajpai, Shyam Sundar Qaisar, Imtiaz Ahmad Asharfi and Dr. Lakshmi Sahai.

On the merits of the case as a whole no distinction is possible between the case of one and any of the other convicted persons. It follows that if we feel convinced that this is a fit case in which we ought to interfere at all in the exercise of our jurisdiction under S. 439, Criminal P. C., 1898, we must interfere in the matter of the conviction of all the eight persons.

On behalf of the Crown the learned Government Advocate has urged two main preliminary objections against the entertainment of this application. The first objection is that inasmuch as the convicted persons have not appealed from the order of conviction passed by the Magistrate, though in law they had a right to appeal, the present application is not maintainable having regard to the provisions of Cl. (5), S. 439, Criminal P. C. The second objection is that the Oudh Bar Association, being no party to the case in which the order of conviction was made by the Magistrate, has no locus standi to file the present application.

We are of opinion that both these objections should be overruled. As regards the first objection Cl. (5), S. 439 bars entertainment of proceedings by way of revision at the instance of the party who could have appealed but has not appealed. The proceedings now before us have not been initiated by a party who could have appealed but has not appealed. Cl. (5) therefore has no application to this case. It cannot be doubted that S. 439, Criminal P. C., 1898, invests the High Court with jurisdiction of revisional nature in cases in which it may deem fit in the exercise of its own discretion to call for the record of a case or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge. The section further authorizes the High Court to exercise all or any of the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by Ss. 423, 426, 427 and 428, Criminal P. C., and this is the jurisdiction which the present application seeks to invoke. In the present case we are of opinion that the Oudh Bar Association have acted rightly in the discharge of their duty as such an association to watch and protect the privileges and liberty of its members which they are entitled to enjoy under the laws of the country. We think therefore that the present application has been laid before us by the President of the Association not in any frivolous spirit of officious interference with the administration of justice but with a high sense of responsibility.

The President himself argued the application before us not on the ground that he has a right to do so but that as the President of the Bar Association it was his duty to bring to the knowledge of this Court that an illegality has been committed by a subordinate Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under the Penal Code and under the Salt Act, 1882. What we have said above answers the second objection also.

The first ground on which the application was argued before us is, as we have already said, that there is no evidence on the record to establish the offence of abetment within the meaning of the Penal Code of the commission of an offence under the Salt Act, 1882, against C. B. Gupta. This ground must be rejected at once. There is evidence on the record and the learned Magistrate has accepted it as true. We see no reason to disagree with the finding of the learned Magistrate in the matter of the trustworthiness of the evidence.

The second ground of the application is more serious and covers not only the cases of Mohan Lal, Saxena and C. B. Gupta but also of all those convicted persons whose names we have already mentioned. The learned Magistrate has convicted them under S. 117, I. P. C., read with S. 9 (a) and (b), Salt Act 1882, and has sentenced each of the eight persons to rigorous imprisonment for 18 months. The argument presented before us is that punishment under S. 117, I. P. C., for abetment of an act which is an offence under the Salt Act, 1882, and not an offence under the Penal Code, is illegal for the reason that S. 9, Salt Act, 1882 prescribes specific punishment for the abetment of such an offence. We are of opinion that the argument is right and must be accepted. So much of S. 9, Salt Act, 1882, as bears on the question under consideration may be reproduced here :

"Whoever commits any of the following offences namely :

"(a) does anything in contravention of this Act or of any rule made hereunder ;

(b) evades payment of any duty or charge payable under this Act or any such rule or

(c) attempts to commit or abets within the meaning of the Penal Code the commission of any of the offences mentioned in Cls. (a) and (b) of this section shall for every such offence be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with both.

It was not disputed by the learned Government Advocate that doing anything in contravention of the Salt Act, or of any rule made thereunder was not a separate offence under the Penal Code nor is it contended that abetment of an act in contravention of the Salt Act or of any rule made thereunder is a separate offence under the same Code. But sentence under S. 117, I. P. C., could be passed even in respect of abetment of an offence which is committed not only under the Penal Code but also under any law of the country. In the present instance that law is to be found in the Salt Act, 1882, and if the matter had stood there we think there could be no question that these eight persons were rightly punished under S. 117, I. P. C., but the matter does not rest there for S. 9, Salt Act, 1882, not only makes an act done in contravention of the Act or abetment of the same act an offence, but it also prescribes the penalty for such an offence. If we accept the argument of the learned Government Advocate the result will be that a specific offence prescribed as such by a special Act only would be capable of being punished under both the provisions of the Penal Code and the provisions of the Salt Act, 1882, or under either of them. We are unable to construe the law in such a manner as would produce such a result. The learned Government Advocate placed before us the decision in Raghubar Dayal v. Emperor (1) by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. That decision however does not seem to be in point. In that case a person was tried on a charge under S. 81, Registration Act, 1877, and was acquitted on the ground that it was not proved that he knew that it was likely that he would cause injury to any one by his act. He was subsequently tried and convicted on a charge under S. 197, I. P. C. The learned Judges held that the plea of bar arising out of the previous acquittal was a valid plea and that the accused could not subsequently be tried and convicted on a charge under S. 197, I. P. C. They further held that under S. 26, General Clauses Act, where an act or omission which constitutes an offence under two or more enactments the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence, and that it did not prevent the application of the S. 403, sub-S. 1, Criminal P. C.

The second case which the learned Government Advocate placed before us is Queen v. Ramachandrappa (2). In that case it was held that the provisions of S. 174, I. P. C., are not in conflict with the special provisions of Ss. 15 and 16, Regn. I of 1816, (Madras) and that the accused could be charged and tried under the provisions of S. 174, I. P. C. This decision only amounts to this that where an act is an offence under the provisions of two enactments which are not in conflict with each other, prosecution may be resorted to under either of the enactments. It will be seen that the ratio decidendi of that case was that the act in respect of which the accused in that case was prosecuted was an offence both under the Penal Code and the Special Regulation of 1816, while in the present case, as we have already stated, it is agreed on both sides that the act for the abetment of which these persons were convicted, is not a separate offence under the Penal Code, but is an offence exclusively under the Salt Act, 1882. It is to the former class of cases to which the provisions of S. 26, General Clauses Act, apply, but the present case is of the latter class.

Before the passing of the Salt Act, 1882, acts which are made offences by the provisions of that Act were not offences under any other law of the land and we have already said that they were not and are not in themselves offences under the Salt Act, 1882, and the principle of interpretation of statutes in such circumstance is generalia specialibus non derogant. If therefore an act which is an offence under any other Act but no penalty is prescribed thereby could be punished under the provisions of S. 117, I. P. C., this particular offence could not be so punished because the special enactment also prescribes a specific penalty for such an offence; in other words where an act is an offence under a specific law and such an offence can also be punished under that specific law that law and not the general law would apply, and this is the principle laid down in S. 5, I. P. C.

(1) [1909] 6 O. C. 153.

(2) [1883] 6 Mad. 249.

It was argued by the learned Government Advocate, and seems to have been argued on behalf of the prosecution in the Court of the learned Magistrate, that S. 117, I. P. C., deals with such offences of abetments as are aggravated in their nature and therefore the special penalty provided by S. 9, Salt Act 1882, is not the penalty for an abetment of such a nature. This argument clearly ignores the language of S. 9, Salt Act, 1882. Cl. (c) of that section defines abetment by referring to its definition in the Penal Code and embraces all abetments whether aggravated or mitigated in their nature. The section does not provide for any exception in respect of such abetments as are provided for by S. 117, I. P. C., and the punishment prescribed by the said S. 9 is clearly a punishment which is prescribed for all abetments of acts which are declared to be offences by the provisions of the Salt Act, 1882. It follows that it is illegal to proceed under S. 117, I. P. C., which allows a higher punishment for abetment of an offence for the punishment of which a lighter and separate penalty is provided by the provisions of S. 9, Salt Act, 1882. It seems to us that the argument of the learned Government Advocate if carried to its extreme logical conclusions would reduce the law in this respect to an absurdity. According to that argument a person may be punished for abetment when it is of an aggravated character under S. 117, I. P. C., and he may also be punished under S. 9, Salt Act, 1882, for the same abetment because the aggravated form of it undoubtedly includes the mitigated form. To avoid such absurd results we must construe the two enactments in the light of the maxim quoted above, that is, where there is a special law making a particular act an offence and providing penalties for such an offence the general law must be held to be inapplicable. We therefore hold that the conviction of these eight persons and the sentences passed on each under S. 117, I. P. C., were illegal. We set aside those convictions and sentences.

But as on merits we are in agreement with the learned Magistrate that an offence under S. 9, Salt Act 1882, has been committed by those persons they are liable to be punished as provided for by that section. We accordingly set aside the conviction and sentences passed by the learned Magistrate under S. 117, I. P. C., and convict each of the eight above-named persons under S. 9 (c), Salt Act, 1882, and sentence each of them to rigorous imprisonment for a term of six months which is the maximum punishment permitted by that section.

Order accordingly.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 82 of 1930, Decided on 4th September 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Gonda, D/- 20th May 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 4 (b)—Application to Court to take action under Ss. 107 or 145 without allegation of offence is not complaint.

Where the person aggrieved asked the Court in his petition to take action under the preventive Ss. 107 or 145, Criminal P. C., and there was no allegation in his petition or in his statement as recorded by the Magistrate that an offence had been committed and that the Magistrate should take action in respect of such offence against any person under the Criminal P. C.

Held: that the petition of the aggrieved person did not amount to a complaint.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 190 (c)—Magistrate acting under S. 190 (c) can take cognizance of offences under Ss. 352 and 447, Penal Code, even without complaint.

There is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure to restrain the Sub-Divisional Magistrate from taking action in respect of an offence which he thinks has been committed but which has not been brought to his notice in the form of a complaint. S. 190 (c) gives very wide powers to the Magistrate. What is intended thereby is that the Magistrate should be able to bring his experience to bear upon any statement of facts made to him by an aggrieved person who might not know what his legal remedy was in the given circumstances.

Where the person aggrieved made a petition to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to take action against A and B under Ss. 107 or 145, Criminal P. C., and did not allege in his petition that any offence had been committed by A and B and the Magistrate passed the following order: "This is a case under Ss. 447 and 352, I. P. C., and is transferred to the Court of the Tahsildar," and the Tahsildar tried A and B and ultimately convicted them under Ss. 352 and 447, I. P. C.

Held: that the Magistrate was acting within his jurisdiction when he read the statement as being a complaint of facts which constituted an offence, and even if the definition of "complaint" would rule out the application of Cl. (a), S. 190, the Magistrate was certainly able to take cognizance of the offence under Cl. (c).

Ali Muhammad—for the Crown.

Pullan, J.—These three applicants in revision may be considered together. On 10th September 1929 two persons, Ramphal and Budhai came before a Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tarabganj with separate petitions in which they alleged that Sarfaraz Singh and others were threatening them and likely to interfere with the cutting of their crops and asked the Court to take preventive measures presumably under Ss. 107 or 145, Criminal P. C. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed temporary orders which appear to have been under S. 145, Criminal P. C. Eight days later, on 26th September, Ramphal made a second application in the form of a complaint that Sarfaraz Singh and another had cut his crop, and on this complaint proceedings were instituted under S. 379, I. P. C. While these proceedings were pending the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 23rd October passed an order on the two petitions which had been made on 18th September in the following terms:

"This is a case under Ss. 447, 352, I. P. C. and is transferred to the Court of the Tahsildar."

On 30th November 1929, the Bench Magistrates convicted Sarfaraz Singh and his son Jaipatar Singh of an offence under S. 379, I. P. C., and ordered them each to pay a fine of Rs. 25. On 18th December 1929 the Tahsildar Magistrate convicted Sarfaraz Singh and five others of offences under Ss. 352 and 447, I. P. C. and sentenced them each to pay a fine of Rs. 50. Appeals were filed against both these convictions before the District Magistrate and both appeals were dismissed. In his judgment in the theft case the learned District Magistrate pointed out that although Sarfaraz Singh had been successful in appeal in a civil suit as to the zamindari rights of this land, and had got possession in August 1929, "this gave him no right to confiscate the tenant's rights or seize the crop." As it was admitted that the crop had been cut there seems to be no doubt that a criminal offence was committed and no case has been made out for interfering in revision with the order of the District Magistrate.

In his judgment in the two appeals arising from conviction of Sarfaraz Singh and others of offences under Ss. 352 and 447, I. P. C., the learned District Magistrate refers to the legal points which were argued before him. One of these points has been taken before me and it is as follows: In these cases no complaint was made that any offence under the Penal Code had been committed. The persons aggrieved only asked the Court to take action under the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The trial therefore is alleged to have been without jurisdiction. "Complaint" is defined in the Code of Criminal Procedure, S. 4, Cl. (b) as:

"an allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under this Code, that some person has committed an offence."

Now in these petitions there was no allegation that an offence had been committed with a view that the Magistrate should take action in respect of such an offence against any person under the Code of Criminal Procedure. Consequently there was no complaint, and I am not prepared to agree with the learned District Magistrate that the original petition taken in conjunction with the statement recorded by the Magistrate amounted to a complaint. I find that in their statements also these persons merely requested the Court to take action so that the opposite party should not be able to seize the crops. But although I do not agree with the District Magistrate's view that this was a complaint I do not find that there is anything in the Code of Criminal Procedure to restrain the Sub-Divisional Magistrate from taking action in respect of an offence which he thinks has been committed, but which has not been brought to his notice in the form of a complaint. S. 190, Criminal P. C., enacts that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate may take cognizance of any offence (a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence; and (c) upon information received from a person or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed. This section gives to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate very wide powers. No doubt it was intended that a Magistrate should be able to bring his experience to bear upon any statement of facts made to him by an aggrieved person who might not know what his legal remedy was in the given circumstances. In the present case these cultivators made statements which clearly indicated that criminal offences under the Penal Code had been committed by this Sarfaraz Singh and others, and although they themselves did not ask that these persons should be prosecuted possibly because they did not know that the acts of which they complained amounted to offences under the Penal Code, the Magistrate was acting within his jurisdiction when he read the statement as being a complaint of facts which constituted an offence, and even if the definition of "complaint" would rule out the application of Cl. (a), S. 190, the Magistrate was certainly able to take cognizance of the offence under Cl. (c) of the same section.

I am therefore unable to find that in any of these cases there has been any failure on the part of the Magistrate to exercise his jurisdiction, still less can I find that there has been any miscarriage of justice. The Courts below have found that these offences have been committed and no reason has been shown to me for reconsidering those findings in revision. I dismiss all three applications.

S. N. Sinha and Azizuddin and Azizuddin—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Two persons Chhattarpal Singh and Mt. Sukhpala have been convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Unao of an offence under S. 304-A, I. P. C., and sentenced under that section to the maximum sentence permitted by law. In the case of Chhattarpal the offence has been held to be one of abetment. Against this decision an appeal has been preferred, on behalf of the Local Government on the ground that these persons should have been convicted of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C., of which they were acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge, and that S. 304-A does not apply to a case of this nature. Chhattarpal Singh alone has appealed against his conviction.

The main facts of the case are clear enough. Mt. Sukhpala was the wife of one Jalpa Singh. Jalpa Singh was poisoned with arsenic and died on 8th April 1930, and his death was reported by the chaukidar of the village on the following day. In the report it was stated that Jalpa Singh had himself said that his wife had administered poison to him in milk. Nobody else except the wife was accused in the first report, but a suggestion was made that she had a liaison with one Hanuman Singh. It is not clear that this was intended to imply that it was on account of that liaison that she poisoned her husband. There is on the record sufficient evidence both that Sukhpala gave a drug in milk to her husband and that he accused her of poisoning him apart from her own confession. Her confession was recorded on 10th April before a Magistrate, and in this confession she admits that she gave the drug to her husband in the milk, but she says that she was given the drug by one Chhattarpal Singh who wished to marry her daughter Ram Kali, and that the drug was intended to bring her husband Jalpa Singh under her control, and to induce him to consent to the marriage. Accordingly Chhattarpal Singh also was arrested and placed on his trial. He is a young, unmarried Thakur. He has all through denied that he had any intention of marrying Ram Kali and none of the Thakur witnesses in this case make any statement to that effect. Apart from the confession of Mt. Sukhpala there is the statement of one witness only which can be said to implicate Chhattarpal Singh. This is a woman named Shahzadi who says that she herself is a marriage-broker and that she had attempted to arrange a marriage between this Ram Kali and Chhattarpal Singh. She also says—and this is the main point in her evidence—that Chhattarpal Singh in her presence gave a puria to Sukhpala and that this puria was alleged to contain basi karah, that is to say, a drug designed to bring some person under the power of the person administering it. She also says that there had been a conversation between Chhattarpal Singh and Sukhpala about administering such a drug on a previous occasion.

The first question which we have to decide is whether the evidence is sufficient to convict Chhattarpal Singh of any offence. In our opinion it is not. The statement made by Sukhpala when she was accused by every one of the murder was purely self-exculpatory and any statement which she made implicating another person is without value in evidence. Leaving her confession aside the statement of Shahzadi alone merely shows that Chhattarpal Singh gave a puria to Sukhpala. It does not show what the contents of the puria were, and it does not show that the contents of that very puria were administered to the deceased and caused his death. The evidence is in our opinion too slight to justify the conviction of Chhattarpal Singh for abetting any offence which Sukhpala may have committed.

We have now to consider what offence was committed by Sukhpala. She herself is ready to accept the decision of the Sessions Judge that she has committed an offence under S. 304-A, I. P. C. S. 304-A is causing death by doing any rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide. We are aware that there have been cases in which women, who have administered poisonous drugs under the genuine impression that they were love philters and would not cause the death of the persons to whom they were administered, have been found by certain Courts to have committed an offence under S. 304-A. No doubt the decisions in those cases were justified by their special circumstances. But we are of opinion that where a woman of middle age administers to her husband arsenic disguised in sugar and placed in his food and thereby causes his death, she must accept the full responsibility of her action. Such a woman is Sukhpala, the accused in this case. This is the view laid down by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Gauri Shankar (1), and as far as we are aware there is no later decision of any High Court in India which expresses a different view. That case was like this a case of arsenic poisoning and arsenic was described by the learned Judges as "a substance with the effect of which the agriculturist population in Northern India is well acquainted".

and we accept the view of the learned Judges that a person who administers a well-known poison like arsenic to another

"must be taken to know that his act is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, and if death ensue he is guilty of murder notwithstanding that his intention may not have been to cause death."

We do not believe that Sukhpala was unaware of the properties of arsenic or of the fact that in her confession she sets up this defence is no reason why the Court should believe that defence if the face of the evidence. Apart from the story of Chhattarpal Singh and his projected marriage there is abundance of evidence that Mt. Sukhpala was on bad terms with her husband, and in particular that he resented her visits to the house of her married daughter, and he had on at least one occasion dragged her out of that house in ignominy in the presence of witnesses. It was in this house that Hanuman Singh lived and it appears that the village people were under the impression that she had some improper intimacy with Hanuman Singh. Whether this be so or not is of little importance; it is certain that the woman was on bad terms with her husband on this account, and it is not necessary to find any further motive for the crime such as that which she herself gives by implicating her co-accused Chhattarpal Singh.

We find therefore that Chhattarpal Singh should not have been convicted at all, and we allow his appeal and set aside his conviction and sentence. Consequently we must disallow the Government appeal in his case and we declare him to be acquitted. As to Sukhpala we consider that she was wrongly acquitted of the offence of murder and therefore wrongly convicted of an offence under S. 304-A. We therefore allow the Government appeal in her case, set aside her conviction under S. 304-A and, finding her guilty of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C., we sentence her to transportation for life. In our opinion this is not a case in which the death penalty should be inflicted on a woman of her age.

BAGULEY, J.

S. C. Guha—Accused—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 238-B of 1930, Decided on 2nd July 1930, from order of Second Addl. Magistrate, Moulmein, D/- 24th March 1930, in Criminal Regular Trial No. 124 of 1929.

(a) Principal and Agent—Agent undertaking to be insurer of goods made over to his charge for separate consideration—He does not cease to be agent.

It is quite possible that an agent might make himself responsible for loss or damage to goods belonging to his principal. There is nothing in law which would prevent an agent undertaking to be an insurer of goods consigned to his care provided that there is consideration for that insurance and this consideration would have to be something outside the terms of the employment at the ordinary rate: 7 L. B. R. 278, Ref. [P 1169 C 2]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 409—Goods entrusted to firm and not to its manager personally—He is not criminally liable for breach of trust in respect of goods.

A person who is the manager of the firm cannot be held criminally liable for breach of trust where there is no personal entrustment of goods to him but to the firm in respect of which the offence was alleged to have been committed. [P 1170 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an application in revision. The applicant S. C. Guha has been convicted under S. 409, I. P. C., of criminal breach of trust of goods valued at Rs. 8,081-12-0 as an agent and employee of the Dunlop Rubber Co., (India) Ltd. His appeal to the Sessions Judge was dismissed and he now comes to this Court in revision.

The allegation of the complainant is that Guha was a "stockist" of Dunlop tyres; that as a "stockist" he was entrusted with goods on what is known as "consignment terms." The contract which is the basis of the case is contained in a letter filed as Ex. A. At the end there are four spaces against which are printed the caption "Name in full," "Address," "Dated at," and "Signature." "Name in full" is written against National Cycle and Motor Company, and "Signature" is against S. C. Guha. The document is in the form of a letter addressed to the Dunlop Rubber Company (India) Limited, and begins:

"Dear Sirs.

In consideration of your placing my name/our name upon your list of traders who will have the benefit of holding consignment stocks of Dunlop pneumatic tyres, covers and tubes and for Dunlop sold tyres, during the session ending 30th September 1929, I/We hereby agree as follows:

1. You are, subject to the terms hereof, to supply me/us, unless prevented by causes beyond your control, with such stock of Dunlop goods as may be agreed upon between us from time to time to be managed by me/us on your behalf in the way of my/our trade, and as far as possible during the continuance of this agreement to replace the same as and when sold.

2. I/We shall from time to time acknowledge receipt in writing in the form prescribed by you of all stocks of Dunlop goods immediately same are delivered to me/us, and such stock shall remain your absolute property until same is sold and paid for by me/us at your list price.

less agreed discounts and I am/We are to be deemed to be a trustee/trustees of the said stock for you and on your behalf until you are paid in cash for same.

3. All sales from the said stock shall be on your account, and, all cash received in payment for the said stock shall, until payment is made by me/us in trust for you. When any such article has been sold I am/We are to advise you of the sale forthwith in the form prescribed by you.

4. I am/We are to send you on the 15th day each month or such date as you may advise later a detailed return in the form prescribed by you setting out the stock position from the date of the previous return of all Dunlop goods I/We held in stock on your behalf and provided I/We settle your accounts before the 5th day of the month following sale you are to allow me/us a settlement discount of 5 per cent.

5. I/We undertake to keep and maintain all goods supplied to me/us under this agreement in a safe, sound and saleable condition and do hereby undertake to indemnify you against all loss to such goods from fire, theft, pilferage or from any cause whatsoever and will afford your traveller, or other representative every facility at any time during business hours to inspect and check the said stock, and if at any time any article be missing, destroyed or damaged, I/We will forthwith pay you the then current list price, less agreed discount of such article.

The remainder of the document is not material at the present time.

The main defences relied upon are firstly that the offer contained in the document, if accepted, would not constitute the executant an agent of Dunlops, and in the second place that the applicant is not the executant of the document personally. It was argued on behalf of the applicant that the offer contained in this letter, if accepted by Dunlops, would merely make the executant a purchaser of the goods, the main point relied upon being that the stockist undertakes to keep all goods made over to him under the agreement in sound and saleable condition and undertakes to indemnify Dunlops against all loss to such goods from fire, pilferage etc., and on the principles laid down in Po Yuet v. Emperor (1) it was argued that, as the loss, if the goods were damaged, would fall upon the stockist, the goods must be regarded as his. I wish in no sense to be regarded as dissenting from the principles laid down in this ruling, but it appears to me to be quite possible that an agent might make himself responsible for loss or damage to goods belonging to his principal. There is nothing in law which would prevent an agent undertaking to be an insurer of goods consigned to his care provided that there is consideration for that insurance and this consideration would have to be something outside the terms of the employment at the ordinary rate. Ex. A seems to suggest that a stockist under this agreement has something beyond the ordinary commission that the usual dealer on commission might be expected to receive. The opening words of the letter refer to a stockist being placed on the special list of traders, and there is the obvious benefit that a stockist appointed under this agreement holds in that he does not have to pay for the goods less the usual trade discount on receipt of the goods. It is in evidence that in addition to this relationship of stockist for tyres the parties were also dealing with one another in what is referred to as the "straight sales basis" in which the goods were consigned to the dealer presumably either subject to the usual trade discount or for cash. Goods sold under the stockist agreement required no outlay on behalf of the stockist until the goods were actually sold by him, and then he was allowed to retain the cash for a certain length of time before remitting it to Dunlops. In addition to this there is a specific discount referred to as "settlement discount" subject to the goods being paid for on due date, and it was also pointed out in argument that by virtue of his stockist agreement the stockist would obtain by supplying goods from his stock to other dealers at trade rate a percentage on all Dunlop tyres sold within the Moulmein area, for all other dealers would get their goods from him to sell there.

For these reasons I would hold that there is nothing impossible in a stockist on these terms being agent of Dunlops. The stockists directly in terms undertake to be an agent of Dunlops. In Cl. (2) he states that he is to be deemed to be a trustee of the stock on behalf of Dunlops, until he pays in cash for the goods. In Cl. (3) he undertakes that all sales from stock shall be on Dunlop's account and all cash received in payment of the stock shall, until paid to Dunlops, be held in trust for them, and when a man explicitly declares himself to be a trustee or agent in this manner, I do not consider the fact that for a specific consideration he insures the goods made over to his charge would prevent him from being an agent. The next point for consideration therefore is whether the application under this agreement became the agent of Dunlops.

The letter is in a printed form in which the words "I" and "we" both appear and neither the "I" nor the "we" has been scratched out. But at the bottom of the letter the name in full is the National Cycle Motor Company. There is evidence which does not seem to have been seriously disputed that the National Cycle & Motor Company is a family firm, of which Guha is the Managing Agent, but in which other members of the family sometimes assist. There is nothing on the record which leads one to suppose that Dunlops regarded themselves as dealing with Guha as a man. One bundle of exhibits, the G series, apparently invoices, are all made out in the name of Messrs. The National Cycle & Motor Company. The prosecution have also filed a number of letters; Ex. H is addressed to Messrs. The National Cycle & Motor Company and it begins "Dear Sirs," and is signed "Yours faithfully, for and on behalf of the Dunlop Rubber Co. (India) Ltd." Ex. I is the same. Ex. J is slightly different being in the form of what would be known in Government circles as a D. O. letter and is addressed to S. C. Guha, Esq., C/o The National Cycle & Motor Company, and begins "Dear Mr. Guha," and is signed "Yours sincerely." Ex. K is the same. Ex. L is headed "Mr. S. C. Guha, the National Cycle & Motor Company" and begins "Dear Mr. Guha." It is signed "Yours faithfully, F. F. M. Ferguson, District Manager," and is also of the D. O. type, and the reply thereto, Ex. M, is addressed to Mr. F. F. M. Ferguson and signed "Yours faithfully, S. C. Guha," Ex. N is of the same type. In Ex. P we find the official type once more and is addressed to Messrs. The National Cycle & Motor Company, and begins "Dear Sirs" and is signed "Yours faithfully, for and on behalf of the Dunlop Rubber Co. (India) Ltd., F. F. M. Ferguson, District Manager." Again Ex. Q which is a deed of assignment of certain agreements to Dunlops is described at the beginning as being made between the National Cycle & Motor Company of Lower Main Road, Moulmein, represented by S. C. Guha, their managing representative of the same address, and the Dunlop Rubber Co. (India) Ltd.

These series of extracts and exhibits show quite clearly that Dunlops regarded the National Cycle & Motor Company as being a firm of which S. C. Guha was the Manager, and it seems clear that the company regarded themselves as dealing with the firm. This being the case I fail to understand how Guha personally could have been regarded as a stockist under Ex. A. In my opinion the stockist was the firm and therefore it was the National Cycle & Motor Company who were the agents of Dunlops, under this agreement, and not Guha personally. There can, I think, be no possible doubt that, if Dunlops were reduced to filing a civil suit on the basis of Ex. A, they would have to make the National Cycle & Motor Company the defendants and not Guha personally, except possibly as a member of the firm for the price of the goods. It seems to me to follow that the goods were entrusted to the firm and not to Guha, and, if there was no personal entrustment to Guha, he cannot be regarded as criminally liable for breach of trust. Guha's position under Ex. A is such that he could not be held personally liable in a civil Court for goods delivered under it, and a man cannot be held criminally liable for goods for which he is not even civilly liable.

I have been referred to a number of cases in the course of argument, but in consequence of the view that I take of the letter Ex. A, it is unnecessary to deal with the question of whether there was actual shortage in the payments which were made for the goods, as I consider Guha personally was neither the agent nor the servant of Dunlops and this being the case the charge of criminal breach of trust under S. 409, I. P. C., is bound to fail. I therefore set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the applicant.

of 1929.Privy Council Act. — Special leave to under Privy Council Act (1884) in a criminal case: Nadan v. King, (1926) A. C. 482, Foll.

Appellant.H. B. Robertson and T. Matthew — for Respondent.H. P. Macmillan, F. P. Vercoe and H.
Hall—for Intervener.

The Lord Chancellor.—These are consolidated appeals from a judgment of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia, and they arise out of the prosecutions instituted against the appellants for offences against the Produce Marketing Act (Statutes of British Columbia, 1926-27, Chap. 54), as amended by the Produce Marketing Act Amendment Act (Statutes of British Columbia, 1928, Chap. 39), and certain regulations and orders made thereunder.

The appeals are brought in pursuance of leave granted to the appellants by the Court of Appeal of British Columbia. Though the proceedings in the Courts below were somewhat different in form, both appeals raise the same point for decision here. The appellant in the first appeal, Chung Chuck, who resided and grew potatoes within the area in question in 1928, was charged on 8th August 1928, with unlawfully marketing potatoes on 29th June 1928, within British Columbia without the written permission of the Mainland Potato Committee, and was convicted and fined $10, and in default of payment, one month's imprisonment. The appellant applied by way of habeas corpus and writ of certiorari for his discharge from custody, alleging that the said Produce Marketing Act was ultra vires of the legislature of the Province of British Columbia, for certain reasons which for the moment need not be set forth. On 27th August 1918, Murphy, J., dismissed the appellant's application, holding that the statute in question did not infringe upon the powers of the Dominion Parliament under heads (2) and (27), S. 91, British North America Act, nor upon S. 498, Criminal Code, Revised Statutes of Canada 1927, Chap. 36, and further holding that if the statute did infringe upon S. 498 this section was ultra vires of the Dominion Parliament. It is unnecessary to discuss in detail the circumstances giving rise to the second appeal. The appeals—which have been consolidated—raise the same point.

The appellant, Chung Chuck, appealed to the Court of Appeal, and on 8th January 1929, the appeal was unanimously dismissed. In Wong Kit's case, the appellant's acquittal by the Police Magistrate having been upheld by the Supreme Court, the Crown was the appellant in the Court of Appeal, and that appeal was allowed.

As already stated, the Court of Appeal granted leave to the appellant in both cases to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The Attorney-General of the Province of British Columbia put in a petition in which he denied the competency of the Court of Appeal to give leave. He says in para. 12 of his petition:

"That your petitioner respectfully submits that the conviction of the appellant by the said stipendiary Magistrate on the said 8th day of August 1928, was a conviction in a criminal case in respect of a breach of a statute passed by the legislature of the Province of British Columbia."

Then he cites the case of Nadan v. King (1) and says:

"It was held by the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that such a conviction was within S. 1025, Canadian Criminal Code, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, Chap. 146."

Then he says in para. 14:

"That the said S. 1025, Canadian Criminal Code provides inter alia as follows: 'No appeal shall be brought in any criminal case from any judgment or order of any Court in Canada to any Court of Appeal or authority by which in the United Kingdom appeals or petitions to His Majesty in Council may be heard.'"

Then he submits that by reason of the matters set forth in the paragraphs referred to the Court of Appeal of British Columbia had no jurisdiction to make the order under which they gave leave to appeal. That particular contention is supported by the Attorney-General of the Dominion of Canada, and a preliminary objection is taken that these appeals are not competent because the Court of Appeal of British Columbia had no power to give leave to appeal. In those circumstances it is incumbent upon the appellants to show, two things, and they took two points. First of all they say:

"This matter was not a criminal matter at all, and therefore we have a right to appeal, it being a civil matter, or at any rate, not a criminal matter."

and secondly:

"Even if it is a criminal matter still, under the Order in Council of 23rd January 1911, the Court of Appeal of British Columbia had power to give us leave to appeal and we are entitled to prosecute the appeal."

With regard to the first point, was this a criminal matter? The relevant section of the Act in question, which is "an Act respecting the marketing of fruit and other produce," is S. 20, which provides:

"Every shipper guilty of an offence against this Act shall on summary conviction, be liable, if an individual, to a penalty not exceeding $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, and if a corporation to a fine not exceeding $10,000; and every other person guilty of an offence against this Act shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $1,000."

Are an offence under S. 20 and the proceedings consequent upon the offence criminal matters? It appears to their Lordships that they are criminal matters. The section speaks about an offence punishable on summary conviction, exposing an individual who has been found guilty of an offence not only to a fine but to imprisonment, and in this respect it does not differ from the facts in Nadan v. King (1) where Viscount Cave, then Lord Chancellor, in giving judgment in a similar matter, said this at p. 489 of the report:

"It was argued on behalf of the appellant that neither of these appeals was brought in a 'criminal case' within the meaning of the above section; but in their Lordships' opinion this argument cannot prevail. In each of the cases the appellant was charged with an offence against the public law and a sentence of imprisonment could be and was imposed."

The particular law in question in that case was not a law of this particular province; it was a law of the Province of Alberta, but the reasoning is the same, and it appears to their Lordships that the first point made by Mr. Wood, counsel for the appellants, namely that this was not a criminal matter, but was a civil matter, in which they therefore had a right to appeal, fails.

The next point to be considered is whether Mr. Wood has shown that it is competent for the Court of Appeal of British Columbia to have given leave to appeal. He quite rightly points out that in the petition of the learned Attorney-General for the Province of British Columbia supported, as it was, by the learned Attorney-General for the Dominion of Canada, S. 1025 of the Canadian Criminal Code is relied upon, and Nadan's case (1) is cited, but the view which their Lordships take of the present circumstances renders it unnecessary for them to go into those points or into any question as to a conflict between the Dominion and the Provincial Legislatures in respect of that section. As already stated it is for Mr. Wood to satisfy the Board that it is competent for him to appeal, that is to say, that it was competent for the Court of Appeal of British Columbia to give the leave to appeal in question. The way in which he seeks to show that is by citing the Order in Council to which reference has been made. That Order in Council was passed in pursuance of the Privy Council Act of 1844 which provides that

"it shall be competent to Her Majesty by any order or orders that may from time to time for that purpose be made, with the advice of Her Privy Council, to provide for the admission of any appeal or appeals to Her Majesty in Council from any..."

Attention is called to these words: "judgments, sentences, decrees or orders of any Court of justice within any British colony or possession abroad, although such Court shall not be a Court of error or Court of appeal within such colony or possession."

Their Lordships pause for a moment to observe that the word "decision" is not one of the words used in that section. The words are:

"judgments, sentences, decrees or orders of any Court of justice."

By an Order in Council referring to British Columbia, passed on 12th July 1887, not the present Order in Council, but the one which preceded it, it is provided:

"Whereas it is expedient that provision should be made by this Order to enable parties to appeal from the decisions of the said Supreme Court of British Columbia to Her Majesty in Council, it is hereby ordered: (1) Any person or persons may appeal to Her Majesty, her heirs and successors in her or their Privy Council from any final judgment, decree, order or sentence of the said Supreme Court of British Columbia in such manner, within such time and under and subject to such rules, regulations and limitations as are hereinafter mentioned; that is to say:

"In case any such judgment, decree, order or sentence"

Again, their Lordships pause here for a moment to point out that the word, "decision" is not used in the operative part, although it is used in the recital.

"shall be given or pronounced for or in respect of any sum or matter at issue above the amount or value of £300 sterling, or in case such judgment, decree, order or sentence shall involve, directly or indirectly, any claim, demand or question to or respecting property or any civil right amounting to or of the value of £300 sterling, the person or persons feeling aggrieved by any such judgment, decree, order, or sentence may within fourteen days next after the same shall have been pronounced, made or given apply to the said Court by motion or petition for leave to appeal therefrom to Her Majesty."

That being the position of affairs on and after 12th July 1887, a subsequent Order in Council was passed, which is the Order in Council to be interpreted in the present case, on 23rd January 1911. As to that Mr. Wood's contention is as follows: He says, after the passing of the last recited Order in Council, an Act was passed in British Columbia constituting the Court of Appeal, that is, the Act of 1907 of the Statutes of the Province of British Columbia, Chap. 10, which provides in S. 6:

"The Court of Appeal hereby constituted shall be a superior Court of record. . . . And without restricting the generality of the foregoing an appeal shall lie to the Court of Appeal," then,

"(4) from every decision of the Supreme Court or a Judge thereof . . . in any of the following matters or in any proceeding in connexion with them or any of them ;"

then (e) is :

"Case stated under the "Summary Convictions Act."

Then by S. 8 it is provided:

"For all the purposes of and incidental to the hearing and determination of any matter within its jurisdiction and the amendment, execution and enforcement of any judgment or order, and for the purpose of every other authority expressly or impliedly given to the Court of Appeal by this Act, the Court of Appeal shall have the power, authority and jurisdiction vested in the Supreme Court."

The way in which Mr. Wood uses that Act is this. He says the word "decision" there evidently refers to a case stated under the Summary Convictions Act, and therefore the meaning of the word "decision"—putting his argument generally—will embrace or will include a criminal cause or matter.

Their Lordships now come to the section of the new Order in Council itself. It says, subject to the provisions of these rules an appeal shall lie in certain cases which are set out in (a) and (b) of S. 2, and it is necessary to read both of those: (a) is:

"As of right from any final judgment of the Court where the matter in dispute on the appeal amounts to or is of the value of £500 sterling or upwards, or where the appeal involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property or some civil right amounting to or of the value of £500 sterling or upwards."

It is not contended that a criminal matter is provided for in S. 2 (a), but Mr. Wood's point is it is provided for in S. 2 (b), which says:

"Subject to the provisions of these rules an appeal shall lie at the discretion of the Court," which Mr. Wood says has happened in this case; he says that the discretion of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia has been exercised in his favour "from any other judgment of the Court, whether final or interlocutory, if in the opinion of the Court the question involved in the appeal is one which by reason of its great general or public importance or otherwise, ought to be submitted to His Majesty in Council for decision."

"That," says Mr. Wood,

"is my charter; the Court of Appeal of British Columbia was entitled under S. 2 (b) to give me leave to appeal; they did give me leave to appeal, and therefore the preliminary objection ought to fail."

Their Lordships have been assisted by learned counsel on all sides, Mr. Wood, Mr. Macmillan and Mr. Robertson, by being referred to a number of cases, but in the view that they take of the cases it is hardly necessary for them to go into them at any length, and they do not propose to do so. The first case cited was The Canadian Pacific Wine Company v. Tuley (2), which decided that the British Columbia Prohibition Act of 1916 and the Summary Convictions Act of 1915 were both valid and within the competence of the Legislature of British Columbia. The next case cited was The King v. Nat Bell Liquors (3), where their Lordships think Mr. Macmillan was right in saying that the Board decided towards the close of the judgment delivered by Lord Sumner that there was a part of the criminal law which was within the competence of the Provincial Legislature. Finally there was the case of Nadan v. King (1), where it was held that S. 1025 of the Criminal Code of Canada did not exclude the prerogative of the Crown to give leave to appeal.

(2) [1921] 2 A. C. 417.

(3) [1932] 2 A. C. 128.

None of those cases really touched the point which their Lordships have to decide, which is a very short one, that is to say, does S. 2 (b) of the Order in Council of 23rd January 1911, give the authority to the Court of Appeal which Mr. Wood claims that it does give?

First of all it is necessary to look at the recital to the Order in Council to see whether any hint can be derived from that. It appears rather as if Mr. Wood would have to contend that the Order in Council of 1911 goes further than the Order in Council of 1887, but in the recital it is said :

"And whereas it is expedient, with a view to equalising as far as may be the conditions under which His Majesty's subjects in the British Dominions beyond the seas shall have a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council and to promoting uniformity in the practice and procedure in all such appeals, that the rules regarding appeals from the said Supreme Court contained in the said Order in Council should be revoked and provision should be made for appeals from the said Court of Appeal to His Majesty in Council."

That appears from the recital to be an Order in Council dealing with practice and procedure and to unify the practice and procedure, as it says, in the British Dominions beyond the seas, and, if that is right, it would be a rather strong thing to give an interpretation to that Order in Council under which the new Order in Council, purporting to unify the practice, should in addition to that confer fresh rights.

But Mr. Wood's argument proceeds in this way. He says there are two words in the definition of "judgment" which are in his favour. It will be recollected, the words are "subject to the provisions of these rules an appeal shall lie as of right from any final judgment of the Court," or "at the discretion of the Court from any other judgment," and "judgment" means decree, order, sentence or decision. Their Lordships think when Mr. Wood made his first submission with regard to the word "sentence" he rather relied upon the fact that the word "sentence" was a word which was appropriate to some procedure in criminal law, but when he replied to Mr. Macmillan he did not put his case quite as high as that, nor, indeed, could he have done so. Although the word "sentence" no doubt in the minds of some people is peculiarly appropriate to criminal cases and is chiefly heard in criminal trials, there is a great difference between verdict and a sentence, and it would be very strange if leave to appeal was to be given only against a sentence and not against a conviction. As has been pointed out in the course of the argument, "sentence" is a well-known word in common law, and their Lordships do not think the word "sentence" carried Mr. Wood the distance he would like to be carried, so as to give the right to give leave to appeal in a criminal case. With regard to the word "decision," Mr. Wood says that is the word used in the Act which constitutes the Court of Appeal of British Columbia and includes reference to matters under the Summary Convictions Act, but it does not seem to their Lordships, having regard to the whole of the legislation, that any serious argument can be built upon that foundation. It has already been pointed out how the word "decision" is used. Sometimes it is used in the recital as it was used in the recital to the first of the two Orders in Council; it is not in the original Act of Parliament, it is not in the operative words of the first Order in Council, and, although it might be said that the word "decision," if it stood alone, might possibly embrace matters both of civil and criminal law, the word "decision" is not used alone here. One cannot take one word out of the Order in Council and say it may include criminal law; one must look at the whole of the Order in Council itself. It being perfectly clear that S. 2 (a) refers to civil matters, when we come to S. 2 (b) the words are :

"Subject to the provisions of these rules an appeal shall lie at the discretion of the Court," from any other judgment, and it looks as if the word "other" refers and relates back to the same sort of judgments as those which are referred to in S. 2 (a), that is to say, a judgment

"where the matter in dispute amounts to or is of the value of £500 sterling or upwards,"—that is clearly not a criminal matter—

"or where the appeal involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property or some civil right."

The words can be satisfied in this way. It may well be contended in normal cases there is to be no appeal and no leave to appeal where the matter in dispute is under £500, but there may be some cases in the nature of a test action where, although the value of the question involved is a few shillings or a few pounds only, it may involve many thousands of pounds over the whole of the province. S. 2 (b) would involve a case like that. Finally, if one looks through the Order in Council itself one sees there a great number of provisions for the purpose of dealing with cases where leave to appeal is given which are entirely appropriate in civil matters; and not only not appropriate in criminal matters but criminal matters do not appear to be provided for if they are included within the word "decision." Take, for example, S. 6, Order in Council. It is pointed out by Mr. Macmillan that it provides for a stay of execution which is entirely appropriate in a civil case, if leave is given to appeal, but it is not appropriate, nor indeed is there any provision made as to what is to happen to a man who has been sent to prison and special leave is given to him to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

To sum up: (1) Although the word "decision" standing merely by itself might be sufficient to cover a decision either in a civil or in a criminal case, the word does not stand by itself, but is in an Order in Council containing a number of other provisions working out the procedure; (2) the Order in Council itself recites that it is passed for the promotion of uniformity in practice and procedure of all such appeals, and one would not expect to find it conferring new rights of appeal when it only purports to deal with practice and procedure in appeals; (3) the way in which S. 2 is drafted first of all in (a), where it merely relates to civil cases, and in (b), where it says that there is an appeal at the discretion of the Court from any other judgment, again points to the fact that 2 (b) is simply referring to the same class of case as 2 (a), namely to civil cases and not to criminal cases.

In those circumstances their Lordships have arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Wood has not made out either of his points. He has not made out point (1), that this is not a criminal matter. Their Lordships think it is a criminal matter. He has not made out point (2), that the Order in Council of 23rd January 1911 gave a right to the Court of Appeal to give leave to appeal in criminal matters. In the result the preliminary objection succeeds, not, indeed for the reasons already given, upon the point which is in the petition of the learned Attorney-General of British Columbia, supported by the learned Attorney-General of Canada, but upon the point that Mr. Wood has not satisfied their Lordships that it is a civil matter or that there was a right in the Court of Appeal of British Columbia to give leave to appeal in a criminal case. That being so it is unnecessary to proceed with the hearing of the appeal, the preliminary objection being a good one which must prevail.

At the last moment Mr. Wood detailed to their Lordships the great importance of this case, and he told them, and they entirely accept his statement, that there is a number of matters in British Columbia which are depending upon the decision in this case, and he asks whether their Lordships could not here and now advise His Majesty to grant him special leave to appeal. In their Lordships' opinion that would be a very inconvenient course, and they do not think it would be right to accede to it. It must be remembered that their Lordships have decided that this is a criminal matter. They do not wish in any way to decide a question which has only been mentioned at the last moment and upon which they have not heard the respondent. Their Lordships would however point out, without in any way prejudging or discountenancing any further steps which the parties may desire to take, that the final words in the report of the case of Nadan v. King (1) will make it very difficult to induce this Board to advise the granting of special leave to appeal in a criminal case.

In the result, in their Lordships' opinion, the preliminary objection succeeds, and they will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that both appeals ought to be dismissed; but, the respondents and the intervener not asking for them, without costs.

BEASLEY, C. J., SUNDARAM CHETTY AND WALSH, JJ.

In the matter of R. V., Advocate, High Court, Madras.

Case under S. 12 (3), of Indian Bar Councils Act, Decided on 28th July 1930.

Legal Practitioners Act (1879), S. 13—Legal practitioner receiving money on behalf of client and retaining it in his hands without authority from client—He subsequently treating it as loan and giving security which he felt himself at liberty to withdraw at his own will—This amounted to professional misconduct.

A legal practitioner received money from the Court on behalf of his client and retained it in his own hands without any authority from the client so to retain it. Subsequently he chose to treat it as loan and gave security which he felt himself at liberty to withdraw at his own will and pleasure.

Held: that this was a grave offence which amounted to professional misconduct, for no practitioner was entitled to hold his client's money in his hands and to use it himself for his own private purposes without the consent of his client. [P 1177 C 1]

K. Krishnaswamy Iyengar — for the Advocate concerned.

The Advocate-General—for the Crown.

Beasley, C. J.—This matter comes up before us on a report by the Tribunal of the Bar Council. A charge was framed by the Tribunal against the advocate of having received a sum of Rs. 150 on behalf of the complainant who was the plaintiff decree-holder in a suit in the Small Cause Court, Madras, and appropriated that money to his own use without any authority from him. The facts of the case are that on 5th November 1927 the advocate received a cheque for Rs. 150 from the defendant judgment-debtor in the suit already mentioned in pursuance of the decree in that case and that on 7th November he cashed that cheque; and the case against him is that he put the proceeds of that cheque into his own pocket and utilized those proceeds for his own purposes. The petitioner made demands upon him for payment of the money by Ex. K, dated 25th November 1927, Ex. A, dated 3rd December 1927 and Ex. C, dated 26th January 1928. On 1st February 1928, by adjustment, the advocate paid Rs. 105-9-9 towards the amount of Rs. 150. Previous to this he had given a security letter to the complainant by means of which he pledged his horse and carriage with him. His case is that the complainant accepted the horse and carriage as security for the Rs. 150 then outstanding. His defence is that the complainant was out of Madras at the time when he received the cheque. There is certainly evidence, the complainant's diary, that with the exception of about a day and a half he was out of Madras and did not return until 19th November, and that on the day he returned or some date afterwards he tendered the Rs. 150 to the complainant asking him at the same time to lend him that amount for a fortnight and that the complainant agreed. This defence the Tribunal has totally disbelieved, and in fact it is definitely and flatly contradicted by two exhibits in the case. Putting it at its very earliest, the date of the alleged loan was 19th November, and therefore the fortnight's time would expire on 3rd or 4th December yet it is very strange to find that on 3rd December there is a letter written by the complainant to the advocate (Ex. A) demanding payment of the amount by 8 p. m. and stating that if the amount was not paid by that time, he would be compelled to seek legal help to realize the amount from the advocate and take such other steps as might seem necessary. That certainly is quite inconsistent with the advocate's case that there was an arrangement to lend the money for a fortnight. But there is a stronger piece of evidence than that, and that is to be found in Ex. K, dated 26th November 1927. That is a letter from the complainant to the advocate and reads as follows:

"Will you please pay the amount to Mr. V. B. Krishnaswami Mudali viz. Rs. 150 due to me in S. C. S. No. 10700 of 1927 of Small Cause Court paid by B. Satyanarayana to the credit of the above suit."

That again is quite inconsistent with the advocate's statement that the money was by arrangement to be treated as a loan to him for a fortnight.

We are in complete agreement with the Tribunal in coming to the view that this story of the alleged loan is a complete concoction. With regard to the security letter Ex. 11, dated 20th January 1928, written by the complainant to the advocate stating "I hope you will not remain quiet with the idea that you have assigned me the horse and carriage as security." It seems to us to indicate that the security letter had been pressed upon the complainant by the advocate who was in financial difficulties at the same time and unable to pay, and it certainly is by no means clear that the complainant ever accepted that security at all. The fact remains that from the date of receipt of the money to the date when the security letter was given the advocate retained in his own hands the money which belonged to his client without any sort of authority from his client at all to so retain it. That of course is, as the Tribunal has found, misconduct and we are bound to say that it is clearly professional misconduct. No practitioner is entitled to hold his client's money in his hands and use it himself for his own private purposes without the consent of his client, and the Tribunal has found that he has been guilty of that offence. We might at the same time add that when a person who is not a practitioner receives money in his hands for some other person and converts it to his own use he commits the offence of criminal breach of trust, and that offence is none the less committed because a person happens to be a legal practitioner. Such acts as these are very serious ones indeed and certainly cannot be dealt with lightly by any Court. This advocate has already been dealt with in this Court on another occasion in 1928 when he was sentenced to be suspended for six months for an offence similar to this committed in 1927; so that this is the second case of professional misconduct and dishonesty. We have had urged upon us by Mr. K. Krishnaswamy Iyengar the fact that the security letter was executed by the advocate and that some time the complainant was in possession of the horse and carriage, but we are now told that after the arrangement, by means of which Rs. 105 odd was paid to the complainant, the advocate took back the horse and carriage and this was of course whilst the balance of the amount was still unpaid and it still remains unpaid. That does not seem to us to be an extenuating circumstance at all. The facts of the case are that the advocate kept this amount in his own hands, used it for his own purposes, chose to treat it as a loan and then gave security for it which he felt himself at liberty to withdraw at his own will and pleasure. This is a very grave case and we have very carefully considered what our order should be as regards the sentence to be passed upon him. Speaking for myself, I had at one time the view that this being the second offence of this nature, the advocate should be prevented from practising again. However, after mature consideration we are going to pass an order which, in view of the circumstances, we consider to be a light sentence. The order of the Court is that Mr. V. Advocate, be suspended from practice for 18 months from this date.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Revn. Nos. 174-B to 178-B of 1930, Decided on 11th June 1930, from order of Fourth Addl. Magistrate, Myaungmya, D/- 9th November 1929, in Criminal Reg. Trial Nos. 295 to 302 of 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 412 and 439—High Court in revision may examine record to see if plea of guilty was based on proper conception of facts.

High Court in revision is not bound by S. 412 but may examine the record for the purpose of seeing whether the accused have had a fair trial and whether their plea of guilty was based on a proper conception of the facts.

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 342—Accused ignorant and undefended by advocates—Magistrate ought to assist them in putting up obvious defensive pleas.

It is the duty of the Magistrate, when dealing with ignorant individuals accused of technical offences, to go very thoroughly into the evidence, and where they are not defended by advocates to give them some assistance in putting up obvious defensive pleas. [P 1178 C 1]

* (c) Criminal Trial—Where there is proviso to law which if pleaded would establish sound defence accused may plead that he was not aware of proviso—Case under S. 19 (1), Arms Act—Quantity of lead found with accused and neighbourhood suggesting that lead was used for fishing purposes—Magistrate should question accused if they were vendors of lead for fishing purposes, especially if they are not defended by advocates—Arms Act, S. 19 (1) and Sch. (2) (7) (a).

Ignorance of law cannot be pleaded as a defence where the law has been transgressed, but where there is a proviso to the law which if pleaded would establish a sound defence, an accused may under certain circumstances plead that he was not aware of the proviso.

In a case under S. 19 (1), Arms Act, quantity of lead found with the accused and the neighbourhood were such as to suggest that the lead was used for fishing purposes, the Magistrate merely asked each of the accused, whether he admitted having the lead, for sale without license although they were not represented by counsel and on their pleading guilty convicted them.

Held: that the Magistrate should have in his examination of the accused put some questions with a view to elucidating from them whether they were prima facie vendors of lead for industrial, that is fishing, purposes within the meaning of Arms Act, Sch. 2 (7) (a).

S. Ganguli—for Applicants.

Judgment.—Ali Hossein, Khorban Ali, Ruston Ali, Ali Hossein, and Mahomed Suleiman have in four separate cases been fined under S. 19 (a), Arms Act, for selling military stores without a license. They are all ironmongers in Myaungmya, which is the headquarters of a large fishery industry, and the supposed military stores found in their possession was lead in quantities varying from 14 to 54 viss. In the case of Ali Hossein the lead was described as sheet lead and balls; in Khorban Ali's case the lead consisted of lead labels used for attaching nets, of which he is a vendor; while in the case of two of the three remaining ironmongers the lead was described as sheet and scrap. All except Mahomed Suleiman pleaded guilty, the last mentioned contending that the lead was not exposed for sale. Those who pleaded guilty were fined Rs. 10 each while Mahomed Suleiman was fined Rs. 15.

In the Court of the Fourth Additional Magistrate, Maungmya, they were not represented by counsel and there was no cross-examination of witnesses. The learned Magistrate contented himself with asking each whether he admitted having the lead for sale without a license. Each applied in revision to the Sessions Judge stating that he was a vendor of nets, and that the lead was used for manufacturing nets. The learned Judge held as regards the four who pleaded guilty that no remedy lay as the finding of fact either in appeal or revision, and that if the lead was kept for industrial purposes they must prove it. He refused to take action. The five have now preferred applications in revision to this Court.

The High Court in revision is not bound by S. 412, Criminal P. C., but may examine the record for the purpose of seeing whether the applicants have had a fair trial and whether their plea of guilty was based on a proper conception of the facts. Ignorance of law cannot be pleaded as a defence, where the law has been transgressed, but where there is a proviso to the law which if pleaded would establish a sound defence an accused may under certain circumstances plead that he was not aware of that proviso.

Schedule 2 (7) (a) provides that lead required in good faith for industrial and manufacturing purposes (other than the manufacture of bullets or birdshot) is excepted from all the prohibitions and directions of the Burma Arms Manual. In the case of at least one of the applicants the prosecuting Sub-Inspector of Police admitted that he sold nets and that the lead found in his possession was in the form of beads for nets. In this case the presumption therefore was that he was selling the lead in good faith for industrial purposes and it is difficult to see what grounds there were for prosecuting him.

In the second case the lead was described as being in sheets and balls, but it was not suggested that it was in the form of ammunition. It is reasonable to suppose that the "balls" correspond to the "beads" mentioned in the other case.

There is ground for supposing that had the applicants known that they were entitled to plead that the lead was used for industrial purposes they would have done so. The learned Magistrate should in his examination of the accused have put some question to them with a view to elucidating whether they were prima facie vendors of lead for industrial, that is, fishing purposes, a circumstance which the quantities found and the neighbourhood would prima facie appear to suggest.

It is the duty of the Magistrate when dealing with ignorant individuals accused of technical offences to go very thoroughly into the evidence, and where they are not defended by advocates to give them some assistance in putting up obvious defensive pleas. The convictions and sentences are set aside and the fines if paid will be refunded. The cases will be classified as "mistaken."

The diary entry in each of the Fourth Additional Magistrate's Court cases under the 6th February 1930 is incorrect.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 338 and 437 of 1930, Decided on 2nd June 1930, from judgment of Otter, J., in Sessions Trial No. 4 of 1930

(a) Criminal Trial — Practice — Existing practice of taking shorthand note of charge of Rangoon High Court Sessions only in cases of murder strongly deprecated.

The existing practice of taking a shorthand note of the charge of the learned Judge presiding at the Criminal Sessions of the Rangoon High Court only in cases of murder is strongly deprecated. In cases where an appeal lies, or where an application is made to the Government Advocate for a fiat, it is essential that there should henceforward be an official record of the charge that the learned Judge delivered to the jury: A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 257, Ref.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 342—Court cannot under S. 342 administer inquisitorial interrogatory to accused or subject him to cross-examination — When once Court is satisfied that accused appreciates salient features of evidence against him, its work is over.

Bearing in mind that the accused is not bound to set up any defence or make any statement, that what he elects to say is not evidence that any explanation that he may proffer, need not be true, and that he does not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer any question that the Court may put to him or by giving a false answer to the question, it becomes obvious that the Court is not entitled under S. 342 to administer an inquisitorial interrogatory to the accused or to subject him to cross examination or to ask any questions of him with a view to elicit the truth of the matter, or by a series of supplementary questions to test the accuracy or reliability of the answers that he has been willing to give. An examination on these or similar lines is not within the ambit of S. 342 and all such questions are wholly inadmissible. When once the Court is satisfied that the accused appreciates the salient features of the evidence against him, its function under S. 342 is exhausted and no further examination is permissible: A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 470, Ref. [P 1181 C 1, 2]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 342 and 537—Accused examined, but not in conformity with provisions of S. 342—S. 537 applies.

Where the accused have been examined, but the examination is not in conformity with the provisions of S. 342, S. 537 applies to such a case and unless a failure of justice thereby has been occasioned, a conviction and sentence ought not for that reason to be disturbed: *A. McDonnell—for Appellants.

Page, C. J.—On 24th March 1930, at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court the appellants, Maung Po Chit and U Ba Thein, were tried before Otter, J., and a jury for an alleged offence under S. 420, I. P. C. They were found guilty, Po Chit by a majority of eight jurors to one, and Ba Thein unanimously, of having cheated one H. E. Brown by dishonestly or fraudulently inducing him to deliver property and valuable securities to the amount of Rs. 17,000. Po Chit was sentenced to be imprisoned till the rising of the Court, and also to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000, or in default to suffer one year's rigorous imprisonment and U Ba Thein was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, and also to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to suffer a further term of rigorous imprisonment for one year. Under S. 449, Criminal P. C., Po Chit and Ba Thein presented separate appeals to the High Court both on matters of fact and matters of law. At the hearing of the appeal the Crown was not represented, and no one appeared on behalf of Po Chit, but Mr. McDonnell urged the appeal on behalf of Ba Thein.

Three contentions were raised in support of the appeal. Firstly, it was urged that the conviction was against the weight of the evidence, and that on the merits the accused were entitled to be acquitted. As there must be a retrial in this case I propose to say as little as possible about the facts. To dispose of this contention it is enough that we hold that, if the jury believed the witnesses for the Crown, there was ample evidence to justify the conviction of each accused of the offence with which he was charged. The first contention on behalf of the appellants therefore fails. Secondly, it was urged that the learned trial Judge misdirected the jury, because he did not explain in his charge the meaning of the terms "dishonestly" and "fraudulently" as used in connexion with the offence of cheating.

Now, the learned trial Judge possesses a wide and varied experience of the conduct of criminal trials, and it is highly improbable that Otter, J., would fail to direct the jury on so essential an ingredient in the offence of cheating. Unfortunately, however, there is no record of the charge which the learned Judge delivered to the jury, and the terms in which Otter, J., charged the jury must remain a matter of conjecture. This impasse is the result of the practice which hitherto has obtained of taking a shorthand note of the charge of the learned Judge presiding at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court only in cases of murder. How this practice has been allowed to grow up it is difficult to understand. In cases where an appeal lies, as in the present case, or where an application is made to the Government Advocate for a fiat, which may happen in any case it is essential that there should be an official record of the charge that the learned Judge delivered to the jury: see Emperor v. Barendra Kumar Ghose (1), and the only record of what occurred at the trial upon which reliance can be placed is that for which the presiding Judge takes responsibility. In Barendra Kumar Ghose's case (1) I pointed out that shorthand writers are not infallible, and emphasized

"the importance of rigidly maintaining the rule that a statement by a learned Judge as to what took place during the course of a trial before him is final and decisive. It is not to be criticized or circumvented; much less is it to be exposed to animadversion."

The present practice at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court will now cease, and in future the charge of the learned Judge is to be taken down in shorthand, and a transcript of the shorthand notes is to be made and tendered to the learned Judge, in order that he may make such corrections therein as may be necessary. The trial Judge will then sign the transcript, and the transcript as amended and signed by the learned Judge will form the record of the charge that was delivered to the jury. No copy of the shorthand note of the charge, whether it has been transcribed or not, is to be issued to anyone except by the order of the trial Judge or of the Chief Justice. In the absence of any record of the terms in which the learned judge in the present case charged the jury it is impossible for this Court to determine whether there has been any misdirection or not. As it would, I think, be both unreasonable and unfair that the appeal of an accused person should prove of no avail merely because the practice of the Court has rendered it impracticable for him to present his appeal, in my opinion the proper course for this Court to take is to set aside the conviction and sentence in respect of each of the accused and to order that the accused be retried at the next available Criminal Sessions of the High Court.

Thirdly, it was contended that the examination of each of the accused in the Sessions Court was not in compliance with the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. In my opinion this contention must be accepted, and I feel bound to say, with all due deference to the learned trial Judge, that in my opinion the examination of the accused by the Court at the trial was not such an examination as is permitted under S. 342.

It is unnecessary that I should discuss in detail the question to which objection has been taken by the learned advocate for Ba Thein. But as I have observed in other cases that there is a tendency in this country to conduct examinations under S. 342 in a manner that is unwarranted by the terms of that section, it is well that I should explain what I understand to be the scope and effect of S. 342.

In this country an accused person, save in exceptional circumstances, is not at present allowed to give evidence on his own behalf, and, however anxious the accused may be to take his stand in the witness-box and be examined and cross-examined on oath as to the truth of his story, he is deemed incompetent to do so. It is an anachronism against which I have frequently protested, and I hope that before many years have passed it will be swept away. But the mouth of an accused person at his trial is not entirely closed, for, although he is not entitled to give evidence, after the witnesses for the Crown have been heard, he is at liberty, if he so elects, to make a statement to the jury. His statement is not evidence, but the jury may take it into consideration, and give to it such weight as they think it deserves, as Rankin, J., observed in Pramatha Nath Mukerjee v. Emperor (2) :

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 257=81 I. C. 353=25

"In this country it often happens that a prisoner is tried in a language which for one reason or another he understands but indifferently well, and for that reason as well as for other equally grave reasons the intention of the statute is that at a certain stage in the case the Court itself shall put aside all counsel, all pleaders and witnesses, all representatives, and shall call upon each individual accused with the authority of the Court's own voice to take advantage of the opportunity which then arises to state in his own way anything which he may be desirous of stating."

In these circumstances the legislature enacted S. 342 to ensure that the accused should not remain in the dark with respect to the allegations that have been made against him, and to enable the Court to put such questions to him as will help him to understand the case for the Crown.

Section 342 (1) runs as follows :

"For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial, without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary, and shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence."

The section means what it says, and it is for one purpose only that the Court is entitled to examine the accused under S. 342, namely to enable the accused :

"to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him."

When the scope and effect of S. 342 is understood the nature of the examination that is permissible thereunder can readily be appreciated. Bearing in mind that the accused is not bound to set up any defence, or make any statement, that what he elects to say is not evidence; that any explanation that he may proffer need not be true; and that he does not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer any question that the Court may put to him or by giving a false answer to the question, it becomes obvious that the Court is not entitled under this section to administer an inquisitorial interrogatory to the accused, or to subject him to cross-examination, or to ask any questions of him with a view to elicit the truth of the matter, or by a series of supplementary questions to test the accuracy or reliability of the answers that he has been willing to give. An examination on these or similar lines is not within the ambit of S. 342, and all such questions are wholly inadmissible. I decline to lay down what the form of the examination should be, provided that the object of it is to enable the accused to explain the evidence against him, and the effect of it is that the accused appears to the Court to understand the main points in the evidence of the witnesses for the Crown. In this matter the trial Judge must exercise his discretion according to the circumstances of the particular case that is before him. But when once the Court is satisfied that the accused appreciates the salient features of the evidence against him its function under S. 342 is exhausted, and no further examination is permissible.

Now, what is the effect of an examination that is not in conformity with the provisions of S. 342? It has been decided in some cases that non-compliance with S. 352 ipso facto vitiates the trial; on the other hand there are authorities in which it has been held that unless there has been a failure of justice the defect in procedure is curable under S. 537, Criminal P. C. I do not pause to canvass the earlier decisions on this section because, in my opinion, all the previous authorities must be read in the light of the recent judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (3). In the case of the Emperor v. Erman Ali (4), which was decided by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, I laid down the test which, in my opinion, ought to be applied in order to determine whether or not a breach of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code has vitiated the trial, and I venture to repeat it in the present case:

(3) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 44=100 I. C. 227=54 I. A. 96=28 Cr. L. J. 59=5 Rang. 53.

"The test to be applied, in cases where the prescribed rules of procedure have not been followed, to ascertain whether there has been a mistrial is always essentially the same, namely, whether there has been a miscarriage of justice; for if the appeal Court is satisfied in point of fact that the accused has materially been prejudiced by the breach of procedure clearly a failure of justice has occurred; while if by reason of the breach of procedure there has in effect been substituted another mode of trial, for that prescribed by the Legislature as affording the best means of obtaining a fair trial it is presumed that a fair trial has not been accorded the accused, and that in that case also there has been a failure of justice. In either case therefore the proceedings pro tanto will be set aside upon the ground that by reason of the breach of the rules of the procedure a miscarriage of justice has been occasioned. On the other hand, if the appeal Court is not satisfied that the breach of procedure falls within one or other of those categories, in my opinion it ought not to hold that the proceedings have become vitiated merely because there has been a transgression of the prescribed rules by which such proceedings are to be regulated. It is ever to be borne in mind that rules and regulations are intended to be the handmaid and not the mistress of the law, and that in criminal proceedings it is of the utmost importance that a decision just and reasonable on the merits should not be disturbed because in the course of the proceedings some flaw can be detected that is not fundamental, and which is not proved to have worked injustice to the accused although it may constitute a breach of the rules of criminal procedure; Emperor v. Erman Ali (4)."

In this appeal it is unnecessary to decide whether the failure in toto to examine the accused would ipso facto vitiate the trial, as being a breach of procedure going to the root of the trial, and I postpone the determination of that question until the proper occasion arises. In the present case however the accused have been examined, but the examination was not in conformity with the provisions of S. 342. Is the result of this defect in procedure that the trial is vitiated? In my opinion to such a case S. 537 applies, and unless a failure of justice thereby has been occasioned the conviction and sentence ought not for that reason to be disturbed.

It is however undesirable in my opinion that this Court should decide whether in the circumstances of the present case non-compliance with the provisions of S. 342 has occasioned a failure of justice, because in order to determine that question it would be incumbent upon the Court to embark upon a consideration of the facts and merits of the case, a course from which we desire so far as possible to refrain in view of our decision that the case must be retired; and it is also unnecessary that we should do so inasmuch as, in my opinion, the case must be remanded for retrial upon the other ground which I have stated. For these reasons we order that the appeals be allowed, the conviction and sentence upon each of the accused set aside, and the case retried at the next available Criminal Sessions of the High Court.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 530—Magistrate doubting if facts justified charge of dacoity—Defence inviting Magistrate to try case—Magistrate accepting invitation—Framing charge under Ss. 147, 440 and 380, Penal Code, and convicting under those sections—No charge framed under S. 395, Penal Code—Defence cannot object that Magistrate had no jurisdiction.

Where the Magistrate doubted whether the facts justified a charge of dacoity or not and where he was invited by the defence to deal with the case himself and accepting the invitation framed a charge under Ss. 147, 440 and 380, Penal Code, and convicted the accused under those sections and did not frame a charge under S. 395, Penal Code, it is not open to the defence to object on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction. (b) Criminal P. C., S. 537—Infringement of S. 162, Criminal P. C., is an irregularity cured by S. 537, if there is no failure of justice—Criminal P. C., S. 162.

The infringement of the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C., is an irregularity which can be cured under S. 537 if it has not occasioned a failure of justice.

In considering whether a particular infringement of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code is one which does or does not come within the purview of S. 537, what one has to consider is whether any vital rule of procedure has been broken and whether the irregularity goes to the root of the proceedings—85 Cal. 61, Appl. 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.), Dist.; A.I.R. 1923 All. 81, Ref. [P 1184 C 1, 2]

*Velinker, Azad and S. K. Nabiullah—*for Applicant.

*P. B. Shingne—*for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—These are applications in revision from the decision of the Sessions Judge, Surat, upholding the conviction of the accused before the Special Magistrate.

Now, the accused, I am only referring to the accused, who have, appealed to this Court, were charged originally under Ss. 147, 148, 149, 426, 451 and 395, I. P. C., and they were convicted under Ss. 147, 440, and 380, I. P. C., i. e., they were not convicted under S. 395, which deals with dacoity.

The first point taken on behalf of the accused by Mr. Velinker is that the facts brought the case within S. 395 and showed that the offence of dacoity had been committed, and that under the schedule to the Code of Criminal Procedure, a case of dacoity was not within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. The Magistrate seems to have had some doubt whether the facts justified a charge of dacoity or not and he was invited by the defence to deal with the case himself. Accepting that invitation, he framed a charge under Ss. 147, 440 and 380, and framed no charge under S. 395, and, as I have already said, he convicted the accused under the former three sections. The accused now say that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case, but the accused having invited the Magistrate to deal with the case and he having accepted that invitation, in my opinion, there is nothing in the point at all. The learned Magistrate did not, by the consent of the parties, assume jurisdiction to try a case which was outside his jurisdiction. That point would have arisen if he had framed a charge for dacoity and convicted the accused on that charge, but he did not do that. He framed a charge under the other sections, the sections under which he was invited to frame a charge by the defence and it is not now open to the defence to object on the ground that he had no jurisdiction.

The next point is one of more substance and has been strenuously argued by Mr. Velinker. The point is that the Magistrate only convicted those accused whose names had been mentioned before the police on a previous occasion, and at p. 22-A of his judgment, the learned Judge tabulates the accused who had been named before the police and identified by them. Now Mr. Velinker says that in doing that the Magistrate was making an illegitimate use of police statements and was infringing the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C. It appears clear from the record that it was the defence themselves who made use of the statements before the police for the purpose of cross examining various witnesses. It may be that that was not justified and that the Magistrate ought to have prevented the defence from so doing, and I think that if the defence had used the statements at all the Magistrate ought to have required them to put them in evidence and place them on the record, and he did not do that. I am disposed to think from the whole of his judgment that he probably did use the police statements in a way which was not justified by S. 162, but then the question arises whether that user, assuming it to have been improper, is cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C. That section provides:

"Subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, no finding, sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered under Chap. 27 or on appeal or revision on account:

(a) of any error, omission or irregularity in the complaint, summons, warrant, charge, proclamation, order, judgment or other proceedings before or during trial or in any inquiry or other proceedings under this Code unless such error, omission, irregularity, or misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice."

I am quite clear that the irregularity, if it be an irregularity in this case, has not occasioned a failure of justice. But, Mr. Velinker says that an infringement of the provisions of S. 162 is not an irregularity, which can be cured under S. 537. He says that it amounts to an illegality such as cannot be cured and for that he refers to the judgment of Lord Halsbury in the Privy Council case of N. A. Subramania Iyer v. Emperor (1). But that was a case very different from the present on the facts because the accused there was tried on an indictment charging him with no less than forty-one acts, extending over a period of two years, and undoubtedly the whole trial was illegal. The test, as to what acts are irregularities within

(1) [1901] 25 Mad. 61=28 I. A. 257=8 Sar. 160 (P.C.).

S. 537 has been considered as a matter of principle in two cases, one of them in Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2), where Mookerjee, J., says thus (p. 72) :

"As pointed out in Macnamara on Nullities and Irregularities, no hard and fast line can be drawn between a nullity and an irregularity: but this much is clear that an irregularity is a deviation from a rule of law which does not take away the foundation or authority for the proceeding, or apply to its whole operation, whereas a nullity is a proceeding that is taken without any foundation for it, or is so essentially defective as to be of no avail or effect whatever, or is void and incapable of being validated. It may be conceded that the application of this doctrine to an individual case, may sometimes be attended with difficulty. One test however is well established, and is often useful; as was observed by Coleridge, J., in Holmes v. Russell (3), "it is difficult sometimes to distinguish between an irregularity and a nullity"; but the safest rule to determine what is an irregularity and what is a nullity is to see whether the party can waive the objection; if he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity; if he cannot, it is a nullity."

If you apply that test here, the defendants could, I think, have waived the prohibition against using the statements to the police. The other case in which the general principle is discussed is Emperor v. Bechu Chaube (4). Stuart, J., remarks (p. 126) :

"The tests to be applied in considering whether a particular infringement of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code is one which does or does not come within the purview of S. 537 appear to me to be these: Does the error go to the whole root of the trial? Does it in effect vitiate the proceedings? Has the Court assumed an authority which it does not possess? Has it broken the vital rules of procedure? If the error is of such a nature, the proceedings are vitiated in their very inception and S. 537 has no application. But the mere fact that a certain provision of the Code is imperative does not in itself indicate that a breach of that provision vitiates the whole proceeding. In fact it might very well be argued that in order to create an error there must be some breach of an imperative rule, for, if the matter were discretionary, it would appear that no opportunity for error could arise. What I have to consider is the simple point. Were the proceedings vitiated? In my opinion they were not vitiated."

Now, that passage lays down a rule, which, I think is of general application, and what one has to consider is whether any vital rule of procedure has been broken, and whether the irregularity goes to the root of the proceedings.

(2) [1907] 35 Cal. 61=6 C. L. J. 320=11 C.W. N. 1011 (F.B.).

(4) A. I. R. 1928 All. 81=71 I. C. 115=24 Cr. L. J. 67=45 All. 124.

In my view the infringement of S. 162 committed as it was here in the first instance by the defence themselves, and not by the prosecution, is a class of irregularity which can be cured under S. 537. In my judgment therefore this application fails and is dismissed.

Madgavkar, J.—I agree. On the first point, this is not a case of an undoubted dacoity in which the Magistrate has deliberately framed a charge of robbery in order to confer jurisdiction upon himself; on the contrary, he has accepted the view put forward for the defence that the facts did not constitute robbery and that the intention of the accused was at the most that of theft without the violence or extortion to aggravate it into robbery. It does not, therefore lie in the mouth of the defence to turn round and complain of a result which was a consequence of their contention. On the second point, it was certain accused who were allowed excessive latitude beyond the strict provisions of S. 162 and under the guise of omissions were permitted to all intents and purposes to transfer the entire purport of the police statements on to the record. All the accused whose names had not been mentioned to the police availed themselves of this privilege and elicited the fact that their clients' names had not been mentioned. From this it was a plain inference that the names of the other accused had been mentioned. Had the judgment proceeded on that basis, the point could not have been taken. The learned Magistrate however in tabulating the results evidently has proceeded further; but such a use of S. 162 has not, for the reasons stated above, in fact, occasioned a failure of justice. It is at the most an irregularity without a failure of justice, and therefore as held in Emperor v. Jehangir Cama (5), curable under S. 537, Criminal P. C. I agree that the application should be dismissed.

Beaumont, C. J.—I do not think that there is any ground for varying the sentence as there is no appeal on the merits. The unexpired portion of the sentence on the accused should be carried out.

Umra and another—Accused—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 464 of 1930, Decided on 16th August 1930, from order of First Class Magistrate, Karnal, D/- 31st March 1930.

(a) Practice—Punjab High Court—Counsel for petitioner or appellant in criminal case not allowed to make copies even for arguing his appeal, without application for certified copies. Copying documents in extenso during inspection of record not allowed, but only short notes permitted. Such practice deprecated, especially when client is in jail—Amendment in rules on lines of rules of Allahabad High Court suggested, viz. allowing counsel to inspect record free of charge and to take sufficient notes for his case.

According to the rules which are in force in the Punjab High Court a counsel appearing for petitioner, or an appellant in a criminal case, even while his client is in jail, is not allowed to make copies even for the limited purpose of arguing his appeal, unless he applies for certified copies, the cost of which is almost prohibitive. Also copying of the document in extenso during the inspection of record is not allowed, but only taking of short notes of the documents is permitted. This sort of thing is deprecated by his Lordship. Amendments in the rules on lines of the rules of the Allahabad High Court are suggested, viz. the counsel should be allowed to inspect his record free of charge and to take sufficient notes for his case. [P 1185 C 2, P 1186 C 1]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 366—For conviction under S. 366, deceit must be unmistakably inferred from reliable evidence.

There must be some reliable and convincing evidence, from which it can be unmistakably inferred that a person has been guilty of deceitful conduct before he can be convicted under S. 366 for abducting a woman with the intention, knowledge or purpose mentioned therein. [P 1187 C 1]

Jalal Din—for Appellants.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Umra, aged 50, and Umar Din, aged 40, have been convicted of offences under Ss. 366 and 376, I. P. C., and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment each under the two charges. The judgment of the trying Magistrate, which is very unsatisfactory throughout, is silent on the point whether the sentences are to run consecutively or concurrently.

1930 Cr. C. 149 & 150

A First Class Magistrate ought to know the provisions of S. 35, Criminal P. C., and must record in the judgment very clearly the order in which the sentences are to run.

The hearing of this appeal presented considerable difficulty. Mr. Jalal Din, who was supposed to represent the accused persons, had practically no proper brief from which he could argue the appeal. He had just a few stray notes which he began to read before me. I asked him to read the full depositions of the witnesses so that the case may be fully presented before the Court. He said that his client, who was in jail, was a poor man and was not in a position to supply him with the necessary funds for obtaining certified copies of the evidence and that therefore he had to do the best for him by reading out stray notes of the evidence which his counsel had prepared in the Court below. On account of this handicap Mr. Jalal Din could not argue the case properly and as the Crown counsel is not supposed to argue cases for and on behalf of the accused persons, I was obliged to study the whole record myself in order to dispose of the case in a proper manner.

I understand that, according to the rules which are in force in this Court, a counsel appearing for a petitioner or an appellant in a criminal case, even while his client is in jail, cannot make copies of the evidence for the limited purpose of arguing his appeal unless he applies for certified copies, the cost of which is, I understand, almost prohibitive. I was informed by counsel that if he were to inspect the record the official in charge of the inspection room would not allow him to copy out any document or deposition in extenso and that he would only be permitted to make short notes of the evidence. It is not the first time that an appeal has been presented before me on behalf of a convict appellant in the manner in which Mr. Jalal Din has sought to conduct this case. The lot of a convict is a hard one. He is cut off from the outside world and in the majority of cases he is a poor man who is completely isolated from his kith and kin. On account of the high cost entailed in obtaining certified copies, it is not to be expected that his friends and relations after engaging a counsel and paying him his honorarium would have sufficient funds to spare wherewith to apply for certified copies. I know from my fairly long experience of the Allahabad High Court that in criminal cases and particularly when the accused is in jail, his counsel's clerk can inspect the record free of charge, and what is more important he can copy out the whole of it, if so required by the counsel. The record is placed at his disposal day after day until he has copied out either the whole or such portion of it as the counsel considers sufficient for the purpose of arguing the appeal or revision properly. Besides, the costs of obtaining certified copies of the depositions of witnesses in the lower Courts is to the best of my recollection, 12 annas for a deposition.

In the interests of justice and humanity I hope a similar practice would be introduced in this Court as well so that the cases of persons who are in jail may be conducted efficiently by their counsel and the Judges may not have to wade through voluminous records for themselves in order to dispose of the case satisfactorily. This would also effect the saving of much of the public time, as counsel after a study of the record can exercise their judgments and confine themselves only to such portions of it as may be necessary for the purpose of presenting their cases before the Court. This is however by the way.

Somewhere at the end of December 1929, Mt. Mukhtiar, a Jat woman, aged 25, left her mother-in-law's house. It appears from the evidence of Aiman, D.W. 1, Hoshiara, D.W. 2, Hansa, D.W. 3, that Mt. Mukhtiar had on two or three previous occasions also left her husband's home. According to the prosecution the accused Umra abducted Mt. Mukhtiar by inducing her to believe that he would take her to the home of her parents, in the village Tikri, District Meerut. Mt. Mukhtiar was living at the time of her alleged abduction in the village Lalon in the District of Muzaffarnagar. The two districts are adjacent to each other and the distance between the two villages being 15 or 16 kosas. According to the prosecution Mt. Mukhtiar was taken to various places by train and was in fact taken as far afield as Delhi and Panipat. From Panipat she was brought to Taraori railway station and was made to walk to Mauza Sonkra, where she was confined in the house of one Fateh Din by the accused; and finding an opportunity one day she slipped out and narrated her story to Raja Ram, P. W. 2. It is said that during the course of her peregrinations she had been raped by the two accused.

Admittedly no force had been used by any one of the accused at the time when the woman left the village Lalon. The life of Mt. Mukhtiar in her husband's house does not appear to have been a happy one. As already stated she had left her marital home on two or three occasions and immediately before her departure from her husband's house there had been quarrels and bickerings between her and her mother-in-law. She did not get, according to the evidence, proper food and clothes. The sole question for decision, so far as the offence under S. 366, I. P. C., is concerned, is whether any fraud was practised by the accused upon Mt. Mukhtiar in order to induce her to leave her husband's house, or she was a willing party to her wanderings with the accused until the time when she reached the village Sonkra and approached Raja Ram, P. W. 2. The woman, as already stated, is not a mere child or even young girl, but according to herself is a fully grown up Jat woman aged 25 years. Her lot in her husband's home not being a happy one, it appears that she got disgusted with it and in a fit of temper she decided to try fresh fields and pastures new. According to her own evidence in her wanderings she passed through populous towns and crowded railway stations of Delhi and Panipat. She says that on various occasions she saw police constables going about. Now Mt. Mukhtiar knew that her father's home was in the neighbouring district of Meerut. We know the distance between Tikri and Lalon, and certainly she ought to have known that, in order to reach Tikri, she had no business to travel as far as Delhi and Panipat. It is on the record that after her marriage she had several times travelled between the village Lalon and the village Tikri, and she must have known that she never had to pass through Delhi or Panipat.

Now, if any fraud had been practised by the accused, as is alleged on behalf of the prosecution, and they had falsely represented to her that they would take her to her father's house she must have been disillusioned very soon indeed, and on being disillusioned, the easiest thing for her would have been to raise an outcry at one of these populous resorts of men, like Delhi or Panipat, and attract the attention of crowds. At any rate she could have called any policeman on duty at the railway station of Delhi, Shahdara and Panipat and complained to him that the accused were leading her astray and taking her to some unknown destination. She did nothing of the kind. The learned Magistrate has acted erroneously in assuming the existence of deceit and relying upon mere conjectures and surmises. His judgment is wholly tainted in this respect and cannot be sustained. He has assumed deceit and fraud which must always be proved by clear and cogent evidence like any other fact. It is true that very often, to prove deceit, direct evidence is not available, but there must be some reliable and convincing evidence from which it can be unmistakably inferred that a person has been guilty of deceitful conduct before he can be convicted under S. 366 for abducting a woman with the intention, knowledge or purpose mentioned therein. I may also point out that Mt. Mukhtiar is not a truthful person, and anything which she says must be received with a good deal of caution. The statement which she made on oath before the Court is at variance with the statement which she made in the first information report in respect of her quarrel with her mother-in-law, and when confronted with that statement she naively remarked that it was Umra, who made it. Umra had nothing whatsoever to do with the statement in the first information report, and this statement of Mt. Mukhtiar is a pure falsehood.

It appears that after wandering about with the accused and visiting various places like Panipat and Delhi, this wayward young woman either got tired of the company of the two accused or felt displeased with them over something and approaching Raja Ram asked him to convey her to the village Sambhalika where she had friends. As regards the charge of rape we have only the evidence of the woman Mt. Mukhtiar. In my judgment, and having regard to the fact that she never demonstrated her unwillingness by any protest to any person, the charge of rape is not established. There were no signs of violence on the person of the woman. Even if there was any sexual intercourse between Mt. Mukhtiar and one or both of the accused, it was with her consent. There is nothing on the record to support the charge of rape excepting the solitary testimony of the woman, and having regard to the circumstance that she neither raised an outcry nor offered any resistance, I am not prepared to maintain the conviction. I do not think the convictions of the appellants, either under S. 366 or S. 376, I.P. C., can be maintained. I therefore allow the appeal and set aside their convictions and sentences and order that they be released forthwith.

Order.—This is a revision petition against an acquittal and the petitioner is the President of the Union Board, Ayyampet. The charge was against the occupier of premises within the jurisdiction of the Union Board that he failed to remove an encroachment of which notice was given to him under S. 159, Madras Local Boards Act. There appears to be no doubt that the alleged encroachment was an encroachment. The Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Papanasam found the accused guilty and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 10. But in appeal the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Mayavaram set aside that conviction and acquitted the accused on the ground that he had been tried for the same offence upon the same facts in a previous trial, namely, in C. C. No. 174 of 1927. What happened in C. C. No. 174 of 1927 was that the District Board of Tanjore brought a case against this accused for failing to remove the same encroachment after notice to remove it was given by the District Board. In answer to that charge the accused pleaded that the road was within the jurisdiction of the Ayyampet Union Board and that therefore the District Board was not the authority to cause removal. This was accepted and the accused was acquitted. After that acquittal the Union Board sent a fresh notice under S. 159 (1) to the accused to remove the encroachment, and it was for failure to do so that this case was brought. The present case was not upon the same facts as C. C. No. 174 of 1927 and the acquittal was therefore wrong. I have now to decide whether it is worth while ordering a retrial of this accused for this offence. I do not think it is necessary in the interests of the Union Board or of public justice that there should be a retrial of this particular accused for this particular offence. He is only a tenant of the premises. The owner of the premises has, if appears, addressed the Union Board accepting responsibility for the encroachment, and it will be quite enough for the Union Board, if they are so advised, to take steps if necessary against the owner. With these remarks the petition is dismissed.

[P 1189 C 1, 2]

V. L. Ethiraj and N. Somasundaram

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The accused has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Coimbatore of the offence of murder and sentenced to death. The charge against him was that at about 11 o'clock on 20th October last he stabbed one Abdur Muthu in the streets of Tiruppur and inflicted upon him seven incised wounds three of which were fatal. The man after running for some distance collapsed and died practically on the spot. The eyewitnesses to the attack are P. Ws. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 12. That it was the accused who so attacked the deceased has not been seriously disputed by the learned counsel for the accused, although he would suggest that the series of blows occurred in quicker succession than the eyewitnesses would say, and perhaps it may be allowed that on the medical evidence it is a little difficult to imagine how the deceased was able to run about 180 yards after receiving the blows which the medical certificate describes and it may be that the attack was something more rapid and not quite so deliberate as the eye-witnesses would make out. The offence prima facie is clearly murder. There can be no doubt that the person who inflicted with a knife such fatal wounds on the deceased certainly intended nothing short of inflicting death. We cannot find any extenuating circumstances which would bring the offence to anything less than murder. There is no question of self defence raised nor is there any such case appearing in the prosecution evidence. It had been suggested that the accused had a certain amount of provocation, but the only provocation that has been spoken of by prosecution witnesses occurred a couple of hours earlier than the offence and cannot therefore easily be described as grave and sudden. The only defence put forward by the accused is that the case is a false one and has been got up by his enemies. But there is really no motive elicited why the eyewitnesses should lend themselves to a false case against the accused. There can be no doubt that the learned Sessions Judge is correct in convicting the accused of the offence of murder and the only question which remains is whether the capital sentence in the circumstances was an appropriate one.

The accused is stated to be aged about 15. Both the committing Court and the Sessions Judge say that he looks more; that he looks about 18; so far as the records show it may be taken that he is about 15 years of age, but his age has not been definitely determined. A plea has been put forward that in the case of a youth the capital sentence is inappropriate. To the proposition put thus broadly we cannot assent. Beyond the provisions of Ss. 82 and 83, the Penal Code does not say anything about there being any age limit for the capital sentence; and in cases where the murder has been deliberately planned and is essentially of a cold-blooded and contemptible nature we think that usually whatever the age of the accused might be, provided his case does not come under S. 22, Madras Children Act 4 of 1920, the death sentence would be the appropriate one.

This Court has, for example, in cases where the accused had been convicted of decoying away children and cutting their throats, or drowning them, or putting them away, in order to possess themselves of a few rupees worth of jewels, held that, in spite of the murderers being youths (about 18 years old) the capital sentence would be the only appropriate sentence. But where the murder cannot be said to be wholly deliberate and cold-blooded, and where there may be a certain amount of legitimate provocation rankling, which in an immature mind might assume an exaggerated importance, we think that the capital sentence might in certain cases not be the appropriate one. In the present case, apart from the question whether accused is entitled to the benefit of the provisions of S. 22, Madras Children Act, we have evidence that, within about a couple of hours before the occurrence the accused and the deceased had been quarrelling, and that the deceased, who is described by the prosecution witnesses themselves as a bully and the terror of the village, had assaulted this boy and had given him several blows; about two hours later the accused retaliated by stabbing the deceased in the manner described. There is therefore in the present case this amount of recent provocation which justifies us as in describing the murder as not deliberately cold-blooded and inherently vicious. In these circumstances we think that the adequate sentence will be the lesser sentence of transportation for life. We therefore reduce the capital sentence to one of transportation for life.

 Penal Code (1860), S. 425—Owner of land throwing earth upon land used for passage by others—Use becoming impossible—it does not amount to mischief.

If the owner of land over which another or a body of others have a right either of passage or other use throws earth upon that land so that the use becomes either disadvantageous or impossible that does not amount to mischief within S. 425; 8 Bom. 295, Relon. [P 1190 C 2]

Order.—The petitioner has been convicted of the offence of mischief and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30. The mischief complained of was that he dumped a hundred cartloads of earth upon a portion of survey No. 113 in the zamindari village of Kalagumpudi which is included in the Peddamidipalli estate. The prosecution was launched by the Revenue Inspector upon the footing that the survey number on which the earth was dumped was Government land, that the said land was used as a thoroughfare and that the dumping of earth upon it had diminished its utility as a thoroughfare. But by the evidence given by the accused it was clearly shown that the land was not Government land and it is not now disputed that it is part of a zamindari of which the proprietor is D.W. 1. But the Courts below have held that even so the land is what is called a 'puntha' (a thoroughfare for men and cattle), and that the unauthorized dumping of earth upon it amounts to mischief and therefore the petitioner is guilty. There can be no doubt and it is not denied that the petitioner dumped some earth upon some portion of this survey number. The portion so covered now by earth is said to be 26 cents in extent, but that it is only some portion of the survey number is also clear because the 'puntha' is described by the Revenue Inspector as 80 links broad in some places and in others 100 links broad. There is no plan in the case and nothing from which I am able to say what portion of the entire area has been covered by the earth newly thrown upon it, nor in what way the act of the accused has interfered with the use of the land, if it was so used, as a thoroughfare by men and cattle of the village of Kalagumpudi. The proprietor denies that the land is a 'puntha' at all. But there are some revenue accounts in which the land is entered as a puntha and the prosecution evidence at its best shows that the survey number is classified in the revenue accounts as a puntha.

The question is, assuming that it is a thoroughfare over which the villagers had a right of user either for passing or for stopping and assuming that the accused's throwing earth upon some portion of it has in some way interfered with the use of that portion in the way in which it had been accustomed to be used, whether those facts which are the utmost that can be said to have been proved by the prosecution amount to the offence of mischief of which the petitioner has been convicted. So far as any consent may make any difference, the proprietor, D.W. 1, says that he has no objection at all to the earth being where it was thrown and therefore the question for decision is the same as if the proprietor had either by himself or others had with his consent thrown the earth where it is. I find it impossible to say that, if the owner of land over which another or a body of others have a right either of passage or other use throws earth upon that land so that the use becomes either disadvantageous or impossible, that amounts to mischief within S. 425, I. P. C. The only direct decision upon the point referred to in the argument is an unreported decision entitled Keru (1888) of the Bombay High Court which is referred to in all the commentaries upon the Penal Code, namely, those of Ratanlal, Gour and Nandalal. It was to the effect that, where the accused with intent to cause wrongful loss to the complainant who had a right of way along a flight of steps, caused the destruction of those steps, that act did not amount to mischief for the reason that property under S. 425 means tangible property capable of being forcibly destroyed but does not include an easement. Somewhat to the same effect is the better known decision of the same High Court in Queen-Empress v. Govinda Punja (1), where it was held that where the owner of an animal buries the carcass after its death, he is not guilty of mischief or any other offence although he does so with the express object of preventing the Mahars of his village from taking its skin according to the custom of the country.

(1) [1884] 8 Bom. 295.

What has happened in this case is that a villager has thrown earth upon a plot of land over which others are said to have a right of use as a thoroughfare. The only value which is diminished or utility which is destroyed is that of the right of thoroughfare because there is nothing to show that the land itself has lost either its value or its utility or is in any way affected injuriously.

I must hold therefore that the act of the accused taken in the best light for the prosecution did not amount to mischief and therefore the conviction was wrong. Whether it amounted to some other offence it is not now necessary to say because the dispute really appears to be between the owner of the land, the zamindar and certain officers of Government who at one time thought that it belonged to Government. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

The record in proceedings under S. 107 is the magisterial record and begins usually with the order under S. 112 except where a Magistrate not empowered under S. 107 wishes to have proceedings taken under it and issues a warrant under CP. Order.—The question raised in this case is whether a person against whom a Magistrate has drawn up an order under S. 112, Criminal P. C., asking him to show cause why he should not be bound over to keep the peace under S. 107 is entitled to obtain a copy of the written information given by the police on which the order is based. The Magistrate refused to grant the copy holding that it is not a charge sheet, as the petitioner described it in his application. That it is not a report under S. 173, Criminal P. C., copy of which under Cl. 4 of that section be furnished on application and payment to the accused, is clear enough, because the section is in terms confined to reports made on investigation under Chap. 14 of the Code. But this does not dispose of the matter. S. 548 (leaving out the immaterial words) provides that if any person affected by an order passed by a criminal Court desires to have a copy of . . . "other part of the record" he shall on applying for such a copy be furnished therewith. The petitioner was clearly affected by the order under S. 112 requiring him to show cause. If the information by the police on which the Magistrate founded his order can be brought within the words "part of the record" he is entitled to a copy. No direct decision on the point has been brought to my notice. But there are observations of more or less indirect application. In Ranga Reddi v. Emperor (1), where the point for decision was whether and to what extent the order under S. 112 should set out particulars of the information and whether evidence of repute was admissible on a charge under S. 110, Cl. (f), Seshagiri Iyer, J., after pointing out that it is of the utmost importance that the information communicated to the accused under S. 112 should be clear and specific, says at p. 451:

"The accused is to be put on his trial on information received behind his back. In the case of a complaint the accused may be entitled to a copy, if he applied for it, but in the case of an information of this kind, which is necessity is a confidential one, the accused is entitled to be told the nature and extent of the information on which the Magistrate intends to take the action against him."

This passage is cited by Madhavan Nair, J., in Kutti Goundan, In re (2) at 692 (of 47 M. L. J.) in another similar case where the question for decision was whether the order under S. 112 contained sufficient particulars to enable the accused to prepare for his defence and to summon witnesses on his side before the actual enquiry commences. In both cases the learned Judges assumed that the accused is not entitled to copy of the information to the Magistrate and it may also be pointed out that the insistence on particulars in the order under S. 112 would to a great extent be superfluous if the accused were entitled to obtain copies of the information on which that order is based. At the same time it cannot be denied that in neither case was S. 548 under consideration, nor were the learned Judges considering whether the report of the police on which the order under S. 112 is based is part of the record in which that order is made.

On the other side there are observations of at least three learned Judges in a contrary sense in the well-known Full Bench decision in Queen Empress v. Arumugham (3). That case was decided in 1896 before the amendment of S. 173 enabled accused persons to get copies of charge sheets under Chap. 14. The question related to copies of police reports under Ss. 157, 168 and 173 of the then Code. Of the four learned Judges who constituted the Court three held that reports under Ss. 157 and 168 were not public documents and consequently the accused were not entitled to copies of them. The Court was equally divided as to reports under S. 173, two Judges holding that they were and the other two that they were not public documents of which the accused could get copies. The two referring Judges at p. 192 say with reference to the argument founded on S. 548 that if an order has been made or a police occurrence report or charge sheet affecting the person accused such as an order for his arrest or for his remand to custody, he is ipso facto entitled to a copy of that document under the express terms of S. 548, Criminal P. C. At p. 206 Benson, J., refers to the argument based on S. 548. He was of opinion that the argument would succeed if the Magistrate making the order is at the time a criminal Court. He rejected the argument as he thought that a Magistrate is not a Court when enquiring into offences which he is not empowered to try. This distinction between Magistrates and Courts is no longer valid after the decision of the Privy Council in Clarke v. Brajendra Kishore Roy Chowdhry (4), at p. 966 and there can be no doubt that a Magistrate acting under S. 112 is a Court. It would therefore seem that but for this distinction which did not exist, Benson, J., would have upheld the view of the referring Judges as to S. 548. There is however no denying the fact that these were observations, not decisions, and that they were made with respect to police reports made under Chap. 14 and not to police reports or information to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under Chap. 8.

In this state of authority, I have to decide the point before me on a consideration of the words of S. 548 and such considerations as may be based on the nature of proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C. In brief, what is meant by "the record" and when does "the record" begin in proceedings under S. 107? On the best consideration I can give to the matter, I think the record intended is the magisterial record and such record in proceedings under S. 107 begins usually with the order under S. 112, except where a Magistrate not empowered under S. 107 wishes to have proceedings taken under it and issues a warrant under Cl. (3) of that section. The information which leads to action under S. 107 may be of the most varied kind. It may be oral, sworn or not sworn, and need not be in writing. It may be from any source, official or unofficial, formal or informal. It may be derived from the Magistrate's own knowledge. He is not bound to disclose the source or the nature of the information received: In the matter of the Petition of Mithu Khan (5). I am therefore of opinion that the information or report of the police in this case was not part of the record within the meaning of S. 548, Criminal P. C., and that the petitioner is not entitled to a copy of it. The petition must be dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 436 of 1930 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 403 of 1930. Decided on 18th July 1930, from judgment of Presy. Magistrate, George Town, in Criminal Case No. 12675 of 1930.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 256—Magistrate putting to accused, on same day he was charged, question whether he would further cross-examine prosecution witnesses after recording reasons—There is no illegality.

There is no illegality if a Magistrate puts to the accused on the same day as he was charged the question whether he wants to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, provided he records his reasons in writing for doing so. Whether the reasons given are sufficient or not entirely depends upon the circumstances of each case.

A Magistrate put the accused the question on the same day as he was charged and recorded as reason "the accused is undefended."

Held: that what the Magistrate meant by saying the accused was undefended was that he never engaged a pleader and did not appear to want to engage one, and this was sufficient reason for the Magistrate to put the question on the same day: A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 78, Expl. [P 1194 C 1]

K. Venkataraghavachariar—for Petitioner.

Order.—This is an application to revise the conviction of the petitioner by the Third Presidency Magistrate for an offence under S. 408, I. P. C., for which he was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. The ground alleged is that the trial before the Magistrate is vitiated by the illegality that after the charge was framed and the accused had pleaded "not guilty," the question whether he wished to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses was put to him on the same day and that because the petitioner was undefended this was an illegality which could not be cured.

The facts are that after the prosecution witnesses were examined on 5th

June 1930 the accused was charged and he pleaded "not guilty." The Magistrate's record then contains the following:

"He (the accused) wants to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. The accused is undefended. I therefore have not adjourned the case to another date to put this question."

The case was accordingly adjourned to a subsequent date on which date the prosecution witnesses were admittedly further cross-examined by the petitioner himself, he not having engaged any lawyer. He called no evidence, and on the evidence before the Court he was convicted and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The learned advocate for the petitioner relies upon a decision of Jackson, J., in Raju Athari, In re (1) for his argument that on the above facts the trial was illegal because the question was put to the petitioner whether he wished to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on the same day the charge was framed. The decision cited is not an authority for this case. In that case the original papers of which I have called for and examined, a Bench of Honorary Magistrates after framing a charge under Ss. 323 and 114 questioned the accused whether he wished to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, and he said "No." He had no vakil. The Bench recorded no reasons for putting the question the same day. Upon these facts the learned Judge held that the trial was vitiated by illegality and that it was one which could not be cured. In that case the Court recorded no reasons whatever for asking an undefended accused whether he wished to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on the same day that he was charged, whereas S. 256 explicitly lays down that where the Magistrate wishes to put that question the same day, he must record in writing the reasons for it. The omission to record reasons was thus clearly an illegality. In this case there is no such illegality because the Third Presidency Magistrate was clearly aware of what his duties were under S. 256, and he says that the accused was undefended and that he therefore did not adjourn the case to another date to put the question. But Mr. Venkataraghavachariar says that it is no reason at all. Whether that be a good reason or not, to which I will refer presently, there is no illegality in this case of failure to record reasons, and the decision of Jackson, J., is therefore not applicable. Whether the reason recorded is or is not sufficient, the decision cited does not say, nor could it possibly say, that in no circumstances can the question be put to an undefended accused on the same day as he is charged. On the contrary all that the decision says, and here it is merely carrying out the clear words of the section, is that where the question is put on the same day the Court must record the reason for so doing, and this is so whether the accused has a vakil or has no vakil. All that I understand Jackson, J., to say is that where the accused has a vakil there may usually be less likelihood of his being prejudiced if the question is put on the same day. But he has clearly recognized that even where the accused has no vakil all that is required is that the Magistrate must have a reason for putting the question the same day and also record it. Whether the reason given by the Magistrate in this case was itself sufficient or not, that was a matter entirely dependent upon the circumstances.

The Magistrate says that the accused was undefended and therefore it was that he put the question the same day. The meaning of that I consider to be that the man had never engaged a vakil and did not appear to want to do so and it would purely be a waste of time for him, that is the accused, to ask him to come again to answer a question which he was prepared to answer at once without consulting any vakil because he had no intention of engaging one. That this was the case is shown by the fact that the accused did not answer that he did not want to further cross-examine; on the contrary he said that he did want to further cross-examine, and by the fact that, when on the subsequent date the prosecution witnesses appeared again, they were re-cross-examined by the petitioner himself. In these circumstances, I think the Magistrate was perfectly justified in thinking that the petitioner not having a vakil, and not wanting to have one, was a perfectly good reason why the question might, without any prejudice to him, be put the same day. I therefore think that there has been no illegality in the case, and therefore it does not arise to decide whether, if there had been one, it would have been curable. Mr. Venkataraghavachariar urges that in the circumstances of the case the sentence imposed is too severe. The petitioner is a young man. The sum involved is small. He has already been in jail for six weeks. The sentence is reduced to the period already undergone.

Criminal Revn. No. 122 of 1930 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 114 of 1930, Decided on 12th August 1930.

* Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 222 (2) and 561-A—S. 222 allows large number of separate charges to be tried for purpose of convenience—But separate charges can be framed in respect of separate amounts misappropriated on specific dates.

Section 222 (2) is an enabling provision which permits what otherwise would be a large number of separate charges to be joined together for the purpose of convenience. Nowhere is it prescribed that separate charges in respect of separate amounts misappropriated shall not be resorted to and that if an accused has misappropriated several sums within a year they all should be added together and made into one gross sum and tried as one charge. [P 1196 C 1]

A who was B's clerk and sold rice for him was charged with having received Rs. 60 on 10th August 1928 and two other sums on 24th September 1928 and having misappropriated the same without properly bringing them to account and was convicted. A similar complaint was subsequently filed in respect of an amount collected on 14th August 1928. It was contended that A having been previously convicted for criminal breach of trust in respect of sums collected on 10th and 24th September 1928 could not again be tried in respect of an amount collected on an intermediate date 14th August 1928.

Held: that the trial was not illegal. The former case against A was not for a gross sum misappropriated within two dates but was, for misappropriation of specific sums of money received on specific dates and S. 222 (2) did not come into operation. The charge pending against A could therefore be heard. [P 1196 C 2]

Held also: that the trial could not be stopped under S. 561-A unless it was shown that there was an abuse of process of the Court: 32 I. C. 158, Dist. A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 457 and 5 I. C. 970, Ref. [P 1196 C 1, 2]

P. V. Rajamannar for P. Venkata-ramana Rao—for Petitioner.

N. S. Māni for Ag. Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The only point argued in this petition is that the petitioner against whom charges under Ss. 408 and 477-A have been framed in C. C. 82 of 1929 now pending against him cannot be tried or convicted for those offences because the petitioner was in a previous case filed by the same complainant namely C. C. 84 of 1928 tried and convicted for criminal breach of trust in respect of sums collected within the same period as that covered by the alleged offences in this case.

The facts are as follows: The petitioner was a clerk under the complainant who is a trader in paddy and rice. The duty of the accused was to sell rice, collect the price from his customer and pay the amounts collected to the complainant and keep correct accounts of all receipts. In C. C. 84 of 1928 the petitioner was charged with having received sums of money on two days namely Rs. 60 on 10th August 1928 and two sums of Rs. 16-12-0 and Rs. 54-4-9 on 24th September 1928 and misappropriated the same without properly bringing them into account. For this he was tried and convicted in that case. The present complaint which was subsequently filed and which is pending was in respect of three amounts namely Rs. 20 collected on 14th August 1928, Rs. 21 collected on 5th March 1928 and Rs. 5 collected on 22nd March 1928. Although the charge was framed originally in respect of the three above amounts, it appears that the charge in respect of amount collected on 5th March 1928 and 22nd March 1928 have been struck out, so that the only charge now pending against the petitioner is that in respect of money collected on 14th August 1928. The petitioner's argument is that he having been previously convicted for criminal breach of trust in respect of amounts collected on 10th August and 24th September 1928 cannot now be tried again for criminal breach of trust in respect of an amount collected on an intermediate date, namely 14th August 1928. This argument is sought to be based on S. 403, read with S. 222 (2), Criminal P. C. Reliance was also placed upon a decision of this Court reported in In re Appadurai Ayyar (1) and a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Sidh Nath Awasthi v. Emperor (2). The public Prosecutor on the contrary relies upon the case in Nagendra Nath Bose v. Emperor (3) following the decision in Emperor v. Kashinath Bagaji (4). If the decision of this Court in In re Appadurai Ayyar (1) is applicable I am bound by it. But it seems to me that it is not applicable to the facts of this case. From the report it seems that in that case there was a previous trial of the same accused for misappropriation of a gross sum between two dates. The accused was thereafter charged for misappropriation of another gross amount not included in the first amount but misappropriated on dates within the same period. In those circumstances the Court held that the intention of the legislature in enacting S. 222, Criminal P. C., is that where there is to be a trial for misappropriation of a gross sum there should be only one trial for all such offences committed within the period covered by the defalcation. The charge in the previous case in such circumstances should be taken to include all the items misappropriated by the accused during that period and therefore the accused cannot be put on trial in a subsequent case for other amounts alleged to have been misappropriated during the same period. That decision has no bearing on this case because the former case against this petitioner was not for misappropriation of a gross sum misappropriated within two dates but was for misappropriation of specific sums of money received on specific dates. Where that is the case S. 222 (2), Criminal P. C., does not come into play at all. All that the section in my opinion says is that instead of charging the accused under separate counts for defalcation of each particular amount separately received and misappropriated which is the general rule laid down in S. 234; an exception is made necessitated by convenience that all the defalcations within a year may be joined together and the total amount of defalcation and the dates within which the defalcations took place need alone be mentioned in the charge, and a charge so framed is to be deemed to be a charge for one offence within the meaning of S. 234. This does not mean that if that is more convenient separate counts should not be charged for separate amounts misappropriated on different dates. In other words, S. 222 (2) is an enabling provision which permits what otherwise would be a large number of separate charges to be joined together for the purpose of convenience. Nowhere is it prescribed that separate charges in respect of separate amounts misappropriated shall not be resorted to and that if an accused has misappropriated several sums within a year they all should be added together and made into one gross sum and tried as one charge. All that the decision in In re Appadurai Ayyar (1) means is that where a trial of misappropriation of a gross sum within an interval of time has already taken place the prosecution cannot be heard to say that certain items of misappropriation were left out from the gross sums first charged or to bring fresh cases on those omitted amounts. As the learned Judges say in such a case the charge in the previous case should be taken to include all the items misappropriated by him in the course of the same transaction during that period. As that decision has no application to this case I need not further consider it. The decision in Sidh Nath Awasthi v. Emperor (2) is really against the petitioner's contention. There the prosecution knowing well what was the gross sum in respect of which an accused had committed criminal breach of trust elected to proceed on three separate items and got the accused convicted. Then they picked up three other items and got the accused tried a second time and convicted. The Court said that though S. 403, Criminal P. C., may not strictly apply in terms to a case like this, still there is abundant authority for the view that a second trial in circumstances such as this ought not to have been allowed to be held by which I understand that the High Court would in an appropriate case stop the trial if it was shown to be oppressive or an abuse of the process of the Court. But so far as the legality of the conviction was concerned the Court held that there was nothing illegal in it and contented itself with reducing the sentence. This decision does not support the argument of the petitioner that the trial is illegal. It only says that in an appropriate case this Court has power to stop the trial as oppressive and an abuse of the process of the Court. The decision in Emperor v. Kashinath Baga'i (4) is a direct authority against the petitioner. There the accused was tried for the offence of criminal breach of trust as a public servant in respect of Rs. 12 odd and was acquitted. He was again tried for the same offence in respect of another sum, Rs. 19, misappropriated during the same period as that to which the Rs. 12 related and was convicted. The Sessions Judge acquitted the accused on the ground that his previous acquittal was a bar to the second trial. The High Court of Bombay reversed the order of acquittal holding that the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the accused's conviction at the second trial. This was followed by two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the decision reported in Nagendra Nath v. Emperor (3). On the authorities there is no ground for the petitioner's contention that having regard to the form of the charge in the former case the charge now pending against him cannot be heard.

Nothing has been urged at the hearing to show that there is a fit case in which the trial should be stopped to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court under S. 561-A. The complaint stated that the complainant did not, when he brought the former case, know that the accused had misappropriated the sum now charged. I have not been shown that this is untrue. I therefore see no reason to interfere and dismiss this petition.

Criminal Appeal No. 345 of 1930, and Criminal Revn. No. 560 of 1930, Decided on 20th August 1930.

Penal Code (1860), S. 366—Woman kidnapped having illicit intercourse with accused even before kidnapping—Seduction was committed.

Under S. 366 seduction does not mean surrender or loss of chastity for the first time. Seduction is committed even where the woman had illicit intercourse with the accused before she was kidnapped. [P 1197 C 1]

F. Z. Vaz—for Appellant.

Judgment.—It is contended that P. W. 3 had illicit intercourse with the petitioner even before she was kidnapped from P. W. 4's house and that therefore the taking was not in order to seduce her to illicit intercourse. For this the decision in Rex v. Frederick Moon, Rex v. Emily Moon (1), is relied on. That was a decision under the English Children Act 1908 under which it was held that seduction was surrender or loss of chastity for the first time. In my opinion that decision has no application to S. 366, I. P. C., where the substantial offence is kidnapping or abduction. The conviction was therefore right.

As to the sentence the fact that P. W. 3 was not merely a consenting party but perhaps pressed the petitioner to take her away is to be taken into account. The petitioner is young, and on the whole behaved well, except that he broke the law listening to a young woman. The sentence is reduced to one month's simple imprisonment.

The procedure to be followed in extradition proceedings between the British Government in India and the French Settlements in India is that which is provided in Art. 9 of the Treaty of 1815, the necessary legislative sanction for which is S. 18, Extradition Act. The Indian Dependencies of France were expressly excluded from the Extradition Treaty of 1876 and therefore they are not "Foreign State" as defined in the Extradition Act. They are therefore governed by Chap. 3 of the Act, to which S. 18 applies. Wallace, J.—The point raised in this criminal revision petition is of considerable importance, namely what is the procedure to be observed in extradition proceedings between the British Government in India and the French Settlements in India. The District Magistrate of South Arcot has on a demand from the Governor of the French Settlement of Pondicherry and on information from him that judicial proceedings are pending in Pondicherry against two British subjects, arrested these two men and proposes to hand them over without further inquiry to the French authorities. The two arrested men have put in this petition alleging that the action of the District Magistrate is illegal, inasmuch as he has under the Extradition Act of 1903 no authority to deliver them up in this summary fashion, but must first hold an inquiry and satisfy himself that there is a prima facie case against them, as provided for in Chap. 2 of that Act. The learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Government contends that Chap. 2 of the Act has no bearing on the case, and that the case is governed by the provisions of and procedure indicated in Art. 9 of the Treaty of 1815, the necessary legislative sanction for which has been provided by S. 18, Extradition Act. The petitioners rejoin that S. 18 has no application to cases where no procedure has been prescribed by the legislature, and that in any case its application is restricted to cases coming under Chap. 3 of the Act. They further urge that the extradition provision in the Treaty of 1815 had been abrogated by the Treaty of 1876 and by the English Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873. They argue further that any part or dependency of a Foreign State is for the purpose of the Indian Extradition Act a Foreign State to which Chap. 2 and not Chap. 3 will apply.

To take the last point first, a Foreign State is by definition in the Act a State to which the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 apply. Whether or not a part or dependency of a Foreign State is itself a Foreign State need not be decided here, since I am of opinion that in any case the East Indian Dependencies of France were expressly excluded from the Extradition Treaty of 1876, and therefore they are not States or parts of a State to which the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 apply. This is the view taken by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Rahmat Ali v. Emperor (1). In a subsequent case in Calcutta, In re Celeste Cullington (2), a single Judge, Buckland, J. differed, holding that Art. 16 of the Treaty of 1876 does not exclude the East Indian Dependencies of France, but was intended to preserve the provisions of the Treaty of 1815, and that the effect of the order in Council of 16th May 1878 was to put into operation as regards these Dependencies S. 25, English Extradition Act of 1870. The learned Judge admitted that he had not then before him the exact terms of the order in Council. That is a matter of regret since, if he had had these terms before him, I doubt, speaking with respect, if he would have differed from Rahmat Ali v. Emperor (1). The concluding terms of the order in Council are that the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 shall after 31st May 1878 "apply in the case of the said Treaty," that is, the Treaty of 1876, "with the President of the French Republic." So that it is only in respect of that Treaty and not in respect of all Treaties then in force that these Extradition Acts apply; and unless that Treaty abrogated the Treaty of 1815 in respect of French Dependencies in East India the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 do not apply to them and they would therefore not be Foreign States within the meaning of the Indian Extradition Act of 1908.

Article 16 of the Treaty of 1876 sets out

(1) [1930] 47 Cal. 37=20 Or. L.J. 739=5 I. C. 147.

(2) A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 273=63 I. C. 819=22 Or. L.J. 691=43 Cal. 323.

"the manner of proceeding in the colonies and foreign possessions of the two High Contracting Parties."

and ends up:

"The foregoing stipulations shall not in any way affect the arrangements established in the East Indian Possessions of the two countries by Art. 9 of the Treaty of 7th March 1815."

Now, as petitioners themselves argue, this Art. 9 contains no procedure strictly so called. Therefore what the saving clause at the end preserves and intended to preserve, is the 'Extradition arrangements' provided by that article. In other words that Article is in no way affected by Art. 16 of the Treaty of 1876, and extradition in the East Indian possessions of the two countries remains governed by the Treaty of 1815. This is the view which has been taken of this clause both in Rahmat Ali v. Emperor (1) and In re Celeste Cullington (2).

The petitioners urge that, as Art. 9 of the Treaty of 1815 provides no procedure it is in effect unenforceable. This argument I do not follow. If that Treaty provided no procedure such as was provided by the prior Treaty of 1802 or by the subsequent Treaty of 1876; that is clear indication that the High Contracting Parties did not agree upon or intend that there should be any formal procedure for extradition. I do not follow the argument that the Treaty cannot be brought into operation until the legislature has provided and sanctioned a procedure. That would obviously be exceeding its province. The legislature can only sanction a procedure if the Treaty provides for one. The procedure must be found or provided for in the Treaty itself before any legislature of either party can legislate about it. The legislature cannot alter either by addition or subtraction the essentials of a Treaty which is the contract between the High Contracting Parties, or impose upon one party conditions which do not form part of that contract. That would be tantamount to the subjects of one High Contracting Party forcing on its own Government a breach of the Treaty, or making it impossible for its own Government to keep its pledged word with the other party: see The Queen v. Wilson (3). S. 18, Extradition Act, lays down that nothing in this Chapter, that is Chap. 3, shall derogate from the provisions of any Treaty. That is, it incorporates in effect the provisions of such Treaty in the Municipal Courts of India. When therefore, the treaty says that offenders shall be extradited on demand, it is not open to a Municipal Court to say that they shall not be delivered up until some form of procedure initiated, prescribed and sanctioned by itself alone and not agreed upon by the High Contracting Parties is satisfied. There is, on this finding, no point here in emphasizing that S. 18, Extradition Act, refers to Chap. 3 alone, since, as already pointed out, the French possessions in India are not a Foreign State, and therefore, Chap. 3 is the only one which would apply to the present case.

Article 9 of the Treaty of 1815 which is therefore, in my view, the provision to be followed, contemplates summary delivery at the request of any authority of either High Contracting Party. That is the view which the Local Government itself has taken of its obligations as set out in the Extradition Manual, Chap. 3, S. 2 (a), and I think we may assume that that is the view authorized by the High Contracting Parties from whom this Government derives this authority. The procedure in the Manual, however, seems to be regarded as applicable to the case of "grave" offences, and neither side has been able to point us to any orders of Government under which the general provision of Art. 9 of the Treaty of 1815 has been so restricted. This question, however, does not arise here as theft is a "grave" offence. I find therefore that there is no substance in this petition and it is dismissed. The collateral petition (Criminal M.P. No. 133 of 1930) put in under S. 491, Criminal P. C., must also fail since the detention of the petitioners is not illegal or improper; and it is also dismissed.

Jackson, J.—I agree. Under the Indian Act 15 of 1903, a Foreign State means, a State to which the English Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 apply. The main Act is that of 1870 (Vol. 1, p. 443, Coll. Stat.). As provided in S. 2 of that Act the application of that Act to any Foreign State shall be by order in council. If the order in council has not applied the Act to French Possessions in India, the Act does not apply and these possessions are not a Foreign State as defined in the Indian Act 15 of 1903.

The order in council applied the Act not generally to France, but in a restricted sense "in the case of the Treaty with the President of the French Republic." This is the Treaty of 1876 which in terms does not affect the arrangements in the East Indian possessions of the two countries (Art. 16). Therefore the Extradition Act of 1870 has not been applied to that part of France which is Pondicherry, and Pondicherry is not a Foreign State.

Therefore, Chap. 3, Act 15 of 1903, "Surrender in case of States other than Foreign States," applies to Pondicherry. S. 18, falling within Chap. 3, expressly preserves the provisions of any Treaty for the extradition of offenders and its procedure. This makes the provision of the Treaty of 1815 applicable to the present case, and gives statutory sanction to its procedure. There is therefore no room for an argument that the Treaty cannot affect individual rights in the absence of statutory sanction.

Buckland, J., in In re, Celeste Cullington (2), (at p. 335 of 48 Cal.) says:

"By an order in council, dated 16th May 1878, the Extradition Acts were made applicable to France."

It is here that with all respect I differ from him. I should have agreed, if the order in council stated "in the case of France "instead of" in the case of the said Treaty." I agree that as the Treaty of 1815 practically provides for surrender on demand, a more elaborate procedure cannot be superimposed by the unilateral act of one of the parties, Criminal Revn. No. 33 of 1930 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 31 of 1930, Decided on 29th July 1930.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 350 (1)—Sessions Judge sitting in revision directing further inquiry on same evidence and by same Magistrate—Eventually District Magistrate transferring case to another Magistrate who proceeded to summon witnesses afresh—

Sessions Judge's order is not quite in consonance with S. 436—Magistrate to whom case was transferred could take fresh evidence under S. 350 (1)—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 436.

The Sessions Judge sitting in revision against an order of discharge directed further inquiry for finding out whether the offence was committed on the evidence already adduced and further directed that the inquiry should be made by the same Magistrate who originally tried the case. Eventually, however, the District Magistrate had to transfer the case to another Magistrate, who proceeded to examine the witnesses afresh.

Held (Obiter) that the order of the Sessions Judge directing inquiry by the same Magistrate was not quite in consonance with S. 436: 10 Cal. 207, Rel. on. [P 1200 C 1]

Held further: that the Magistrate to whom the case was transferred, could summon the witnesses afresh in the exercise of the discretion vested in him under S. 350 (1). [P 1200 C 2]

Order.—This Criminal Revision Petition has been filed by the complainant against the order of the Sessions Judge of Tinnevely in Crl. Revn. Petn. 46 of 1929: Against an order of discharge passed by the Special Third Class Magistrate of Tinnevely, in C. C. 286 of 1929 the Complainant filed Cr. Revn. Petn. 27 of 1929 to the Sessions Judge, who directed a further inquiry into the case, for the purpose of finding out on the evidence already adduced, whether an offence under S. 424, I. P. C., can be brought home to the accused. In ordering a further inquiry for that purpose the learned Sessions Judge specifically directed that it should be made by the Sub-Magistrate of Nanguneri, as he was the person who tried the case originally, when he was the Special Third Class Magistrate, Tinnevely. Such an order is not quite in consonance with S. 436, of the Code, which does not authorize a Sessions Judge to direct further inquiry by a particular Magistrate subordinate to the District Magistrate. What the Sessions Judge can do is to direct the District Magistrate by himself, or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him, to make the further inquiry, thus leaving the District Magistrate to exercise a discretion as to the selection of any Magistrate subordinate to him: vide Chundishurn Bhuttacharjea v. Hem Chundar Bannerjea (1).

Be this as it may, a situation not probably contemplated by the Sessions Judge when ordering further inquiry in that manner, seems to have arisen. This case has since been transferred by the District Magistrate to Second Class Magistrate, Tinnevely, for disposal. That Magistrate decided to proceed with the examination of the witnesses afresh, for some reasons. That order has been set aside in revision by the learned Sessions Judge, who says, that, in view of his former order, it is not open to the Sub-Magistrate to take evidence afresh, because the evidence already on record was taken by another Magistrate, who ceased to have jurisdiction over the case. Against this order the present revision petition has been filed in the High Court.

The main point for consideration is, whether the Second Class Magistrate of Tinnevely can now resumption the witnesses and re-commence the inquiry, in the exercise of the discretion vested in him under S. 350 (1) Criminal P. C. By virtue of Cl. (3) of this section, when a case is transferred under the provisions of this Code, from one Magistrate to another, the latter can exercise the powers mentioned in Cl. (1). That being so, the order of the Second Class Magistrate, Tinnevely, in exercise of the statutory power vested in him, cannot be interfered with by the learned Sessions Judge. Moreover, when further inquiry was ordered to be made in the case, on the evidence already taken the Sessions Judge directed the same to be made, by the very Magistrate who had recorded the evidence. In that case, S. 350 would have no application. Now that another Magistrate has come to have jurisdiction over this case, (which was not contemplated in the original order of the Sessions Judge, directing further inquiry) the restriction placed in that order can no longer hold good nor can the operation of S. 350 (1) of the Code be checked. The order of the learned Sessions Judge is set aside, and the order of the Second Class Magistrate, Tinnevely is confirmed though not for the reasons mentioned in his order.

Radha Raman Mittra—Accused.

Criminal Reference No. 336 of 1930. Decided on 17th May 1930, made by Addl. Sess. Judge, Meerut, on 14th May 1930.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 540-A—No discretion is given to Judge to dispense with attendance of accused except for incapability of remaining before the Court.

Under S. 540-A the Court can dispense with the attendance of an accused person who is represented by a pleader and proceed with the trial in his absence only if the Court is satisfied that the accused is incapable of remaining before the Court. No discretion is given to dispense with the attendance of an accused upon any other ground. [P 1202 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 540-A and 537—Wrongly dispensing with presence of accused—Accused represented by counsel and dispensation at request of accused—Irregularity can be cured.

Where the Judge wrongly dispenses with the presence of the accused at his own request, and the accused is represented by a counsel at his own request throughout the trial, the error is not such an illegality as to vitiate the proceedings or sentence against the accused and can be cured under S. 537: A.I.R. 1923 All. 81, Rel. on. [P 1202 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 438—Scope.

Although it is unusual for a Judge to make a reference regarding the legality of his own order, yet there is nothing in S. 438 to preclude him from doing so. The words "or otherwise" are wide enough to cover such a reference. [P 1201 C 2]

Order.—This is a reference by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Meerut, arising out of the following facts: The trial of P. Spratt and others under S. 121-A, I.P.C., commonly known as the Meerut Conspiracy Case, is proceeding in the Additional Judge's Court. One of the accused in that case, namely R. R. Mittra, applied to the Judge for permission to visit his widowed sister who was lying seriously ill at Calcutta. The Judge forwarded the application to the District Magistrate with the remark that if and when the Local Government or the Government of India should decide to send the applicant, or allow him to go to his house, then it would be for the Court to consider the question of dispensing with his attendance under S. 540-A, Criminal P. C.

On the afternoon of 26th April 1930 the Judge received, through the usual official channels, an order from the Government of India stating:

"The Government of India agree that Radha Raman Mittra, an undertrial in the Meerut Conspiracy Case, may subject to the orders of the Court be permitted to visit Calcutta to see his sister who is ill, provided the Judge is satisfied that the absence of the accused during trial will not cause any delay or invalidate any part of the proceedings, that the accused is represented by counsel during the whole period of his absence, and he gives an undertaking that he will not attempt to engage in any kind of propaganda during his absence from Meerut."

R. R. Mittra thereupon petitioned the Judge to dispense with his attendance in Court for 15 days, so as to enable him to visit his sister, at Calcutta, and gave an undertaking that he would be represented during his absence by two advocates whom he named, and that he would not engage in any kind of propaganda during his absence. The Judge then passed an order on the same date, 26th April 1930, dispensing with the applicant's attendance under S. 540-A, Criminal P. C., for a period of 15 days subject to the conditions above mentioned. Subsequently the Judge had to reconsider the provisions of S. 540-A in connexion with a similar application for leave of absence made by another accused in respect of whom the Government of India had passed a similar order. R. R. Mittra's application had not been opposed by counsel for the Crown, and the Judge by his order of 26th April had allowed the application somewhat hastily. Upon further consideration he felt grave doubt whether that order was strictly justifiable under S. 540-A. If the order were held to be incorrect, then the question arose whether the error or irregularity was curable under S. 537, or whether he should recall the witnesses whose evidence had been recorded in Mittra's absence.

He has therefore made this reference under S. 438 asking for orders on two points:

(1) Whether the order of 26th April is correct; (2) if not, whether it is merely an irregularity curable by S. 537, or whether the witnesses examined in Mittra's absence should be re-examined in his presence.

Although it is unusual for a Judge to make a reference regarding the legality of his own order I see nothing in S. 438 to preclude him from doing so. The words "or otherwise" are wide enough to cover the present reference. In the peculiar circumstances of this case I think the Judge was fully justified in stating his doubts and making the reference. In any case the High Court is clearly empowered under S. 439 to pass orders on this reference.

On the first point I think it is clear that the order of 26th April was not strictly justifiable under S. 540-A. Under that section the Court can dispense with the attendance of an accused person who is represented by a pleader, and proceed with the trial in his absence, only if the Court is satisfied that the accused "is incapable of remaining before the Court." No discretion is given to dispense with the attendance of an accused upon any other ground. The Judge took the view (in his order of 26th April) that:

"if an accused is sent to Calcutta under the order of Government . . . he is incapable of remaining before the Court."

I think this reasoning is fallacious. The Government of India granted permission for the visit to Calcutta "subject to the orders of the Court." i.e., subject to the Court's dispensing with the attendance of the accused under S. 540-A. The Court could only dispense with the attendance of the accused on being satisfied that he was "incapable of remaining before the Court." It is clear that Mittra was not "incapable of remaining before the Court" if the words are construed in their plain and ordinary meaning. I hold therefore that the order of 26th April was not correct.

The next question is whether the error or irregularity in procedure is curable under S. 537. I think the answer is clearly in the affirmative. The Judge was wrong in dispensing with the attendance of the accused, but the error is of minor importance. The accused was represented by counsel, at his own request, throughout his absence. There is no suspicion of any unfairness and it seems hardly possible that the accused could have been prejudiced in any way. The Court has been too indulgent in granting his request, but that is not a matter of which he can justly complain. The error obviously does not go to the whole root of the trial. No vital rule of procedure has been broken. On the principles laid down in Emperor v.

Bachu Chaube (1) the error is not such an illegality as to vitiate the proceedings against Mittra during his absence. I hold that S. 537 is applicable and that the error or irregularity in the proceedings will not vitiate any sentence or order that may be passed against Mittra unless it can be shown that such error or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

It follows that it is unnecessary to recall the witnesses examined in Mittra's absence, and to record their evidence over again in his presence, merely for the purpose of remedying a possible technical defect. The only question is whether the procedure adopted can be shown to have in fact occasioned a failure of justice. It seems prima facie unlikely that such an argument could be seriously advanced, but it is impossible for me to anticipate what points might be raised in support of such an argument. In my opinion it would be advisable for the Judge to question Mittra and his counsel on this point and if they can show that Mittra has in fact been prejudiced in any way by the evidence of any witness being recorded in his absence then that witness should be recalled and examined or cross-examined in his presence.

As Mittra must have availed himself of the concession granted by the order of 26th April it is unnecessary for me formally to set it aside. For the same reason I consider it unnecessary to issue notice to him under S. 439 (2) as my order cannot be held to be made "to the prejudice of the accused." My order regarding the legality of the order of 26th April, passed in his favour is purely of academic interest so far as he is concerned. He has already enjoyed the benefit of that order. The reference is accepted in the terms set forth above.

Gaya Teli—Accused—Opposite Party.
Criminal Ref. No. 342 of 1930, Decided on 11th August 1930, made by Sess. Judge, Gorakhpur, D/- 15th May 1930.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 195 (1) (b) — Information to police about murder found false—No proceedings on this information—Order of commitment of informant to Sessions Court by Magistrate — Such commitment should be quashed and Magistrate should be asked to try case under S. 211 (part 1), I. P. C.—Penal Code, S. 211.

The accused had given false information about murder to the police and hence no proceedings were taken on this information. The Magistrate made an order of commitment to the Sessions, as the report related to a capital offence.

Held: that such commitment should be quashed as the case did not go further than a police inquiry on the information. The Magistrate is in such cases competent to try the case of the accused under S. 211 (part 1), Penal Code: 4 I. C. 812, Foll. [P 1203 C 2]

M. Waiullah—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Gorakhpur against the order of commitment by a Magistrate, committing Gaya Teli for trial under S. 211, I.P.C. The accused Gaya Teli made a report in the thana against Gopal Singh and other persons of having murdered his father Krishna. The police found that that report was false, and no proceedings in Court were instituted on it. The commitment order states that as the report relates to a capital offence so the case is exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions and the Magistrate accordingly commits the accused to the Court of Sessions. It has been held by this Court in Emperor v. Jagmohan (1) that :

"where the offence under S. 211, I. P. C., consists in giving false information to the police and the case does not go further than a police inquiry the offence falls within para. 1, S. 211, I. P. C., and not within para. 2 even though the charge made in the report is one of murder. An offence under para. 2, S. 211, is triable by the Magistrate and the maximum penalty is two years' rigorous imprisonment, and that is a penalty which can be imposed by the Magistrate."

Accordingly following the ruling quoted I quash the commitment to the Sessions Court.

The next matter contained in the letter of reference, is that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence, because the offence had been committed in relation to a proceeding in Court within the meaning of S. 195 (b), and there was no complaint of such Court before the Magistrate, as contemplated by that clause. The Sessions Judge considered therefore that without such a complaint the proceedings of the Magistrate were void. Now the offence charged under S. 211, I. P. C., relates to the making of a false report in the police station on 26th May 1929 against one Gopal Singh. No proceedings in Court took place against Gopal Singh. Accordingly it appears to me that it cannot be said that the offence was committed in relation to a proceeding in Court. Further without an application to the Magistrate it does not appear to me that the Magistrate would have been correct in acting under S. 476, Criminal P. C., and in sending for Gaya Teli for making an inquiry from him in regard to the report which Gaya Teli had made in the thana. It does not appear to me that the language of S. 476 contemplates such action on the part of a Magistrate. But even if the view of the learned Sessions Judge were correct and the case did come under S. 195 (b), then the Magistrate would have been acting correctly under S. 478 (1), because he is apparently the Magistrate who is now in charge of the Sub-Division in succession to the Magistrate before whom the case for murder was the subject of an inquiry, and he has made a commitment to the Sessions Court. But I do not consider that the case does come under S. 195 (1) (b), and accordingly it was correct for the Magistrate to proceed on the report of the prosecuting inspector, bringing to his notice the complaint which Gaya Teli had made to the police. I may note that the ruling Emperor v. Jagmohan (1) to which the learned Sessions Judge has made a reference was a precisely similar case in which Jagmohan was prosecuted for giving false information to the police, and there was no complaint mentioned under S. 195 (1) (b), but it is stated that the persons accused were charged before the Magistrate with the offence under S. 211, I. P. C.

Accordingly I pass the order in the present case that the commitment is quashed, and I direct that the Magistrate do proceed with the trial of this case under S. 211, I.P.C., part 1, against Gaya Teli according to law.

B.V./R.K. Order accordingly.

Criminal Revn. No. 355 of 1930, Decided on 4th August 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Allahabad, D/- 9th July 1929.

* (a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 4 (h)—Complaint and information differentiated.

The essential difference between a complaint and information is that a Magistrate acts on a complaint because the complainant has asked him to act, but a Magistrate acts on information on his own initiative. In the case of a complaint the Magistrate is asked to prosecute the person named as accused and he has then to decide whether he will accede to the request or not. If he does not, then he must record his reasons under S. 202 (1), and may either make an enquiry himself or direct an enquiry or investigation or dismiss the complaint under S. 203 after recording his reasons. But in the case of receiving information, the Magistrate is not asked by anyone to issue process and if he does not choose to act on the information, he need not record any reason or pass any order. In the case of information there is no complainant to examine on oath. On a complaint the complainant is first examined on oath unless it has been made by a public servant acting in the discharge of his official duty: 1 C.W.N. 105; (1899) A.W.N. 201; 3 C.W.N. 65 and 43 Mad. 709, Ref. [P 1204 C 2; P 1205 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 4 (h)—Complaint defined.

There is nothing in the definition of "complaint" which requires it to be made by the person aggrieved or only in a non-cognizable case: 18 All. 465, Foll. [P 1203 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 190 (1) (a)—Complaint, meaning illustrated—Criminal P. C., S. 4 (h).

A Tahsildar alleged in writing to a Magistrate that three persons named in the document have committed an offence and had made a definite request that they should be tried under the Penal Code.

Held; that such a document sent by the Tahsildar to the Magistrate was a complaint: 12 C.W.N. 438; A.I.R. 1924 All. 190; 26 I.C. 148 and 11 Mad. 443, Ref. [P 1206 C 1]

Mahmudullah, A. M. Khwaja and Shyam Kishore—for Applicants.

M. Walliullah—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application in revision filed on behalf of three persons, Sheo Pratap Singh, Gaja and Baram Din Singh, who have been convicted by a Magistrate under S. 353, I.P.C., and sentenced to one day's simple imprisonment each and fines of Rs. 100, Rs. 20 and Rs. 25 respectively. An appeal was made to the learned Sessions Judge and dismissed by him, and the application in revision is directed against that appeal. In revision grounds 1 and 3 have been argued. Ground 1 alleges that "the conviction of the applicants is wholly void and illegal inasmuch as the learned Magistrate omitted to inform the applicants under S. 191, Criminal P. C., of their right to have the case tried by another Court."

This argument assumes that the Magistrate acted under S. 190 (1) (c). The record shows that the Magistrate issued process on receiving a writing from the Tahsildar forwarding a writing from the amin, who stated "that the accused had assaulted him in discharge of his duty. The question is whether the Magistrate acted on information under S. 190 (1) (c), or on a complaint under S. 190 (1) (a). If he acted on a complaint, S. 191, Criminal P. C., does not apply. A complaint is defined in S. 4 (h), Criminal P. C., which says:

"Complaint means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action under this Code, that some person, whether known or unknown, has committed an offence, but it does not include the report of a police officer."

"Information" is not defined, but has been held to cover statements of witnesses: Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (1), communications by post: Karim Bakhsh v. Adil Khan (2), anonymous communications by post: In the matter of Hari Narayan Biswas (3), and may be received in another capacity than that of Magistrate: Sundaresam, In re (4). The essential difference between a complaint and information is that a Magistrate acts on a complaint because the complainant has asked him to act, but a Magistrate acts on information on his own initiative. In the case of a complaint the Magistrate is asked to prosecute the persons named as accused, and he has then to decide whether he will accede to the request, or not. If he does not, then he must record his reasons under S. 202 (1), Criminal P. C., and may either make an enquiry himself, or direct an enquiry or investigation, or dismiss the complaint under S. 203, Criminal P. C., after recording his reasons. But in the case of receiving information, the Magistrate is not asked by anyone to issue process, and if he does not choose to act on the information, he need not record any reasons or pass any order.

A Magistrate acting under S. 190 (1) (c) upon information or upon his own knowledge or suspicion, acts in each of these cases of his own accord and initiative. It is for this reason that S. 191 provides that he must inform the accused, that the accused may be tried by another Court. In the case of information there is no complainant to examine on oath. On a complaint the complainant is first examined on oath unless, as in the present case, the complaint has been made by a public servant acting in the discharge of his official duty: S. 200 (aa), Criminal P. C. Now the Tahsildar wrote a document in English on 12th March 1929 addressed to the S. D. M., that is, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. In that document he states after setting forth certain facts:

"Sheo Pratap Singh and his servants have committed an offence described in S. 353, I.P.C. It is therefore requested that the three persons named overleaf be tried under the said section."

We have here in this document of the Tahsildar the allegation in writing to the Magistrate that the three persons named had committed an offence, and a definite request that they should be tried under S. 353, I.P.C. Accordingly all the ingredients of a complaint, as defined under S. 4 (h), Criminal P. C., are present. The document therefore is clearly a complaint. Some argument was made by the learned counsel for the applicants on the distinction between a complaint and information. He alleged, firstly, that a complaint can only be made in a non-cognizable case. There is no authority in the Criminal Procedure Code for this proposition. Secondly, he alleged that a complaint must be made by the person who is aggrieved. The contrary has been held in Farzan Ali v. Hanuman Prasad (5). There is nothing in the definition of "complaint" which requires it to be made by the person aggrieved. The third point was that a complaint must bear a court-fee stamp. It is not shown that a complaint by an official in an official capacity, requires a court-fee stamp. The learned counsel then referred to a ruling of the Punjab Chief Court in 1913, reported in Makhan Singh v. Gunner Jepson (6). In that case the Cantonment Magistrate wrote a letter to an Assistant Commissioner suggesting that a person should be proceeded against for using abusive language to a gunner. It was held that the Magistrate addressed, in taking action, took cognizance under S. 191 (1) (c). But that case is distinguishable from the present case, because the Cantonment Magistrate had no official connexion with the gunner. Consequently in writing to the Assistant Commissioner the Cantonment Magistrate must have been acting in his private capacity and not in his official capacity.

The next case to which reference is made is reported in Bansi Lal v. Emperor (7). In that case an amin reported to the Collector, Mr. Foley, that he had erected eight boundary pillars on the western side of the village, and when he had gone to take his dinner the accused with 20 or 25 men went to the spot, destroyed the pillar and took away the materials with them. On this Mr. Foley passed the following order:

"See under what section Bansi Lal, Dasrathi Lal and their servants can be prosecuted, and prosecute them accordingly. Put up before Mr. Deb for the issue of necessary orders."

The case coming up before Mr. Deb he made the following order: "Summon Bansi Lal under S. 434." The accused was then put on trial before a Deputy Magistrate and convicted under Ss. 379 and 434, I.P.C., and Mr. Deb dealt with the appeal as District Magistrate. The Calcutta High Court held:

"It is now argued by the District Magistrate, Mr. Foley, in his letter showing cause that the amin filed a written complaint to him. This is contrary to the view taken by the Deputy Magistrate in his judgment, and it would not seem to us that the written report of the amin was a complaint, nor was it treated by Mr. Foley as a complaint but rather dealt with by him as Collector, as the Deputy Magistrate says it was, and hence Mr. Deb must be regarded as taking cognizance of the case under S. 190 (1) (c). So before hearing the appeal when he became District Magistrate he should have followed the procedure laid down by S. 191, because an appeal is part of the trial of an offence."

This passage shows that the Court considered that it would have been open to Mr. Foley to deal with the complaint as District Magistrate, but that Mr. Foley in fact did deal with the complaint as Collector. Their Lordships commenting on the order of Mr. Foley observed:

(5) [1896] 18 All. 465=(1895) A.W.N. 149.

(6) [1914] 15 Cr.L.J. 231=28 I.O. 439.

(7) [1903] 12 C.W.N. 433=7 Cr.L.J. 221.

"This is not the order which would be passed on a written complaint under S. 202 made to a Magistrate."

Therefore, so far as the ruling goes, it is authority for the proposition that a report by an amin to the head of the district might be treated by him as a criminal complaint, but that in the particular case before the Court the head of the district treated it in his capacity of Collector and not in his capacity of District Magistrate.

I may also refer to Sarju Prasad v. Emperor (8), in which there was the report of a Magistrate to the District Magistrate that an offence under S. 477, I.P.C., had been committed. This report was made after the Magistrate had ceased to exercise jurisdiction in the case, which had terminated. It was held that this was a complaint. In Raja Ram v. Emperor (9), a report by a District Judge was held to be a complaint. In Queen-Empress v. Monu (10) a report by a revenue officer to a Magistrate was held to be a complaint. I consider there is ample authority from the definition in the Code and from the rulings to which I have referred for the proposition that the document sent by the Tahsildar to the Magistrate in the present case was a complaint. Accordingly it was not necessary for the Magistrate to ask the accused under S. 191, Criminal P. C., whether they desired their case to be tried by another Magistrate. This disposes of the first ground of revision. The third ground of revision was that S. 353, I.P.C., has no direct application to the facts of the present case. In support of this the learned counsel referred only to the report of the amin. That report states that certain cattle were attached by the amin and that they were rescued by force (ba zor chhin lia). Evidence was given on the point and the finding of the Magistrate is:

"Baram Din Singh gave the peon, Mehdi Husain, a push and snatched away the string of the attached buffalo which he (Mehdi Husain) was holding. Gaja stopped the cattle from in front."

In the third definition of S. 349 force is said to be used "by inducing any animal to move, to change its motion, or to cease to move."

In the present case therefore, when the accused caused the animals to cease to move, they were using force as in the definition of S. 349, I.P.C. I consider therefore that S. 353, I.P.C., does apply to the facts found.

(b) Penal Code, S. 500—Person, not committing act—Still excommunicated by its imputation—Imputation is defamatory.

An imputation which leads to the excommunication of a person from his caste is defamatory to him if he had not been guilty of committing the act. [P 1207 C 1]

(c) Penal Code, S. 499, Exception 10—Exception 10 does not refer to case where one man says of another that he married a woman who was married before.

Exception 10, S. 499, deals with cases, for instance, where one man warns another against employing a third person in his service saying that he is a dishonest person and does not refer to the case where one man says of another that he married a woman who had been married before. [P 1207 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Findings of facts are not generally interfered with.

Judgment.—In the case out of which this rule has arisen the complainant brought a case against the three petitioners of having defamed him. The facts alleged were that at a certain meeting of the caste the petitioners were alleged to have stated that one Kamini, the complainant's wife had been married before to one Jogendra. The defence apparently was that the statement was true. Both the Courts found that the three petitioners had made the statement alleged and it was not true and found them guilty under S. 500, I. P. C., and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 100 each and in default each to suffer rigorous imprisonment for four months.

The petitioners moved this Court and obtained what is described an open rule. The grounds that have been urged are grounds 3, 4 and 8 of the petition to this Court. Ground 3 is that the learned trial Magistrate's order was bad in law in so far as he relied solely on the evidence of interested persons unsupported by the testimony of independent witnesses. Certainly it was open to the Magistrate to rely on the evidence of any particular person, be he interested or disinterested.

The next point urged is that the order of conviction is bad in law in so far as the allegations do not disclose any offence under S. 500, I. P. C. It is quite clear to my mind that the allegations certainly do disclose an offence under S. 500, I. P. C. To say that the complainant married a woman who had been married before would obviously be to defame him, for it is admitted that one of the results of having done so would be the excommunication of the complainant from his caste. An imputation which leads to the excommunication of a person from his caste is certainly defamatory to him if he had not been guilty of committing the act. It has been suggested that the case comes within exception 10, S. 499, I. P. C. Exception 10 is as follows:

"It is not defamation to convey a caution, in good faith, to one person against another provided that such caution is intended for the good of the person to whom it is conveyed or of some person in whom that person is interested, or for the public good."

I admit I entirely fail to see how the present case comes within that exception. Now could Mr. Talukdar satisfactorily show how it comes within the exception? That exception I think deals with cases, for instance, where one man warns another against employing a third person in his service saying that he is a dishonest person. That is the class of cases which this exception might cover. I entirely fail to see how it covers the present case.

Mr. Talukdar then really argued on evidence and evidence only. The case has been considered by two Courts on the questions of fact and both of these Courts have come to the conclusion that the girl Kamini had not been married to Jogendra before. It cannot be said that the Courts did not deal with the evidence before them. The learned Additional Sessions Judge who heard the appeal went so far as to order further evidence to be taken. Therefore it is quite clear that both the Courts had their mind directed to this particular point, and I see no reason to differ from them on the findings of fact. Neither does this Court as a rule interfere in revision with the findings of fact unless it can be said that these findings are based on no evidence or are obviously incorrect. But that is not the case here.

The rule must therefore be discharged.

The petitioners must now pay the fines imposed upon them.

P.N./R.K. Rule discharged.

COURTNEY-TERRELL, C. J., AND MACPHERSON, J.

Emperor

v.

Fazlur Rahman—Accused—Respondent.

Government Appeal No. 6 of 1929, Decided on 20th December 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Patna, D/- 5th August 1928.

Penal Code, Ss. 43 and 385—"Illegal" has the same meaning as "unlawful"—Threatening to ask complainant in criminal trial scandalous and indecent questions amounts to offence under S. 385.

The word illegal has been given by S. 43 a very wide meaning and it has the same meaning as unlawful. To constitute an offence under S. 385 the threat need not only be of some conduct which might either constitute an offence in criminal law or which might be made the basis of a civil action. [P 1210 C 1]

F, a mukhtar who appeared on behalf of an accused S who was being tried for theft, threatened the prosecutor H to put questions to H and the ladies of his household in cross-examination which were entirely irrelevant to the matters at issue, which were scandalous and indecent and intended to insult and annoy H, unless H paid him some money, in which case the case would be withdrawn.

Held: that F was guilty under S. 385.

[P 1210 C 1]

Govt. Advocate and S. A. Sami— for the Crown.

Courtney-Terrell, C.J.—This is an appeal by the Local Government under S. 417, Criminal P. C., from a decision of the Sessions Judge of Patna setting aside a conviction by a First Class Magistrate of one Fazlur Rahman under S. 385, I. P. C. and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for three months and a fine of Rs. 500. The facts are simple and are established by the evidence beyond all possibility of doubt.

On 8th March 1928, Mr. H who is a zamindar and a well-known barrister in this province lodged a first information charging one of his servants S under S. 379, I. P. C., with the theft of an article of jewellery, and a key. On 17th April the trial was begun before the Deputy Magistrate. The respondent in this appeal, Fazlur Rahman, who is a mukhtar practising in the Court of the Magistrate came into Court and stated that he had been instructed to appear on behalf of S. The Magistrate asked S if he desired to be represented by the respondent and the reply was in the affirmative. At the moment Mr. H, the prosecutor, was in the witness-box and he was subsequently cross-examined by the respondent. The Court Inspector who was conducting the prosecution requested that two witnesses, that is to say, Mrs. H and Madame L, a lady employed by Mrs. H as a governess for her child whom he intended to call, might be examined at Mr. H's house. The respondent objected saying that he did not wish to cross-examine the ladies at Mr. H's house because he feared that Mr. H would commit a breach of the peace. Mr. H protested against this suggestion which was both impudent and unfounded and thereupon the mukhtar said that he would put questions that would damage the high reputation of Mr. H in the province. He also said that he would put questions to the ladies that would damage Mr. H's reputation and it was for this reason that he feared that Mr. H might use violence towards him if the examination of the ladies were conducted at Mr. H's house. The Magistrate however directed that the examination of the ladies would be taken up on the afternoon of the 23rd at Mr. H's house and that Mr. H would be further cross-examined at the same sitting.

On the 21st however before this examination could take place the accused was brought into Court in order that the charge might be amended from one under S. 379, I. P. C., to one under S. 381 and the charge was in fact so amended and the case was postponed to the 28th for the examination of the prosecution witnesses. On the same day the respondent on behalf of S filed a complaint against Mr. H under S. 336 charging him with having beaten him (S) to extort from him a confession. The complaint does no more than set forth the allegation of such beating. It is important to observe that the mukhtar on the 17th as he has admitted to us, had not received instructions directly from his client who had been in jail but from some relative or friend and the announcement by the respondent to the Magistrate on the 17th that he would put questions to Mr. H and the ladies which would damage Mr. H's reputation cannot have been made upon any instructions from his client and it is significant in view of subsequent events.

Now on the 24th April the respondent went to the house of a witness Leakat Hussain. This gentleman is a zamindar and an old friend of Mr. H. The respondent asked Mr. Leakat Hussain to tell Mr. H to give to him (the respondent) Rs. 500 to withdraw the case of S and further that if he did not pay, he (the respondent) intended to insult him grievously (bahut zalil karenge). Mr. Leakat Hussain went to Mr. H the next day and conveyed this message to him and he promptly refused to pay a pice. Mr. Leakat Hussain met the respondent the same day in Court and the respondent asked him if he had taken the message to Mr. H. The witness told him that he had done so and that Mr. H said that he would not pay a single pice whereupon Fazlur Rahman repeated the threat that he would greatly insult him (bahut zalil karenge). A little later on in the month a gentleman named Muhammad Mujtaba who is a pleader at Muzaffarpur and has known the respondent since 1915, and whose father had known the father and uncle of the respondent, met the respondent at the latter's house at Muradpur. The witness mentioned the case against S and the counter-case by this man against Mr. H. He enquired of the respondent how he had come to take part in it and wanted him to withdraw from the case whereupon the respondent told him that if he was at all anxious for the reputation of Mr. H he should ask him to pay some money when the case would be withdrawn. The witness however had no opportunity of meeting Mr. H until the 15th December and so the threat was never conveyed by this witness to Mr. H.

On the 27th April, that is to say, on the day before the resumption of the proceedings, against S a gentleman named Saiyad Shaukat Ali, who is an engineer and contractor and has been employed by Mr. H as a consulting engineer met the respondent in the street at Muradpur. It was evening time and the witness who was acquainted with the respondent, got down from his phaeton and spoke to him. The respondent asked him whether he knew what was happening. The witness replied "I know what you are doing" by which I understand him to mean: "I know what you are up to." Then the respondent said that he was defending a poor mehtar (S) and after that he said that if Mr. H had any consideration for his reputation and if Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1,500 were paid the whole matter (mamla) would drop. Next morning the witness went to Mr. H and told him of his conversation with the respondent. Mr. H said that he was already informed. The witness met the respondent subsequently but there was no conversation of any sort.

There was thus thrice repeated to independent and irreproachable witnesses, all of them friends of Mr. H, a very definite threat that the respondent intended to conduct his defence of S and his case for the prosecution of Mr. H by S in such a way as greatly to insult Mr. H and to damage his reputation and his meaning is quite clear from his attitude when resisting the application of the Court Inspector for the examination of the ladies at Mr. H's house.

On 28th April the cross-examination of Mr. H was resumed as it appears that the Magistrate had acceded to the objection by the respondent to the examination of witnesses at Mr. H's house which was to have been held on the 23rd. The very first question put to Mr. H in the renewed cross-examination by the respondent involved a suggestion of the grossest character against Mr. H and against Mrs. H and it was promptly disallowed by the Magistrate. Nevertheless the respondent continued to cross-examine Mr. H for two whole days. Why the Magistrate did not exercise his discretion to stop this gross abuse is difficult to understand. It is much to be regretted, as I have often pointed out, that the Subordinate Courts do not properly control the proceedings before them. The conduct of the respondent in this cross-examination was outrageous. Before us the respondent has had the effrontery to attempt to justify questions of the kind that he asked as reasonable and proper in the circumstances.

On 2nd May Madame L was examined in Court and S was convicted. It may be noted that the Sessions Judge subsequently acquitted S on appeal, but still later the High Court set aside the acquittal and re-convicted the accused who was sent to jail.

The respondent has endeavoured, without the slightest success, to attack the credibility of the three witnesses who independently proved his attempt to obtain money from Mr. H. The learned Sessions Judge has however found that the threats were in fact made, and that they were made with the object of extorting money. He has however acquitted the accused of the offence charged against him holding that the facts established before him did not constitute an offence in law. The mistake made by the learned Judge, and it is a very clear and definite mistake, is due to the fact that he has not read with sufficient care the section of the Penal Code relevant to the case. S. 385 is as follows:

"whoever in order to the committing of extortion, puts any person in fear, or attempts to put any person in fear, of any injury, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both."

The word "injury" is defined by S. 44 of the same Code and is as follows:

"The word 'injury' denotes any harm whatever illegally caused to any person, in body, mind, reputation or property."

And the word "illegal" is defined in S. 43 as follows:

"The word 'illegal' is applicable to everything which is an offence or which is prohibited by law or which furnishes ground for a civil action"

The learned Judge appears to have been under the impression that in order to constitute an offence under S. 385 the threat must be of some conduct which might either constitute an offence in criminal law or which might be made the basis of a civil action for damages; but he has failed to observe that this does not exhaust the definition of the word "illegal" contained in S. 43 and has omitted to read the words therein "or which is prohibited by law." The word "illegal" has been given by the section a very wide meaning and it has the same meaning as "unlawful." Now as the learned Judge holds quite properly (and for this purpose I quote his words):

"He intended no doubt to convey to Mr. H that he would keep him as long as he could in the witness-box and would hector and badger and ask him as many insulting questions as he could until the Court stopped him" and again :

"There are indications that Fazlur Rahman meant Mr. H to understand that he would set up some false defence on S's behalf which would reflect on the private life of Mr. H or some member of his family."

The learned Judge has apparently not reflected that such a course of conduct on behalf of an advocate is forbidden by law. A reference to the Evidence Act and to S. 138 would have shown him that the examination and cross-examination of a witness must relate to relevant facts only. Further, had he looked at Ss. 151 and 152 he would have seen that the Court may forbid any questions or inquiries which it regards as indecent or scandalous unless they relate to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed; and furthermore, that the Court is bound to forbid any question which appears to it to be intended to insult or annoy or which though proper in itself appears to the Court needlessly offensive in form. The respondent very clearly threatened, in order to extort money, to do an act prohibited by law. He threatened, and the meaning of his threats is beyond question, to put questions to Mr. H and the ladies of his household which were entirely irrelevant to the matters at issue, which were scandalous and indecent and which were intended to insult and annoy and such a threat with intent to extort is an offence under S. 385.

At the hearing before us we gave to the respondent the widest latitude in conducting his argument having regard to the fact that he is an accused appearing in person. He repeated himself at inordinate length and we found it necessary to order him after he had addressed us for several hours to conclude his address. Using my best endeavours to discover what points he did or might have urged I have been able to find three only. The first was a contention that no appeal by the Government against an acquittal could be entertained by this Court unless the offence charged was a cognizable offence. This point is entirely concluded by the wording of S. 417, Criminal P. C., which places no such limit upon the Government's right of appeal.

Next he endeavoured to attack the credibility of the witnesses who proved the threats uttered by him. This attempt completely failed and was entirely unjustified. Their evidence was very properly accepted by the two lower Courts.

Lastly he urged the legal point upon which the case was decided in his favour by the learned Sessions Judge and this point I have already dealt with.

I now come to the question of sentence. The offence of blackmail, as this is commonly called, is one of the most despicable offences known to the law and it is particularly dangerous in India. A mere threat to expose some alleged fact in the private family life of a witness, however unfounded that allegation may be, is sufficient to deter a witness from going into the witness-box or make him part with money, and the prosecution of a person making such a threat requires the greatest moral courage on the part of the victim. The community has good cause to be grateful to the prosecutor in this case for having exposed and rendered powerless for the future a dangerous ruffian. The offence is the more grave in this particular case because it has been committed by a member of a hardworking and respectable profession in the course of professional activities. The profession itself needs to be protected from such activities. The sentence originally inflicted by the Magistrate was thoroughly inadequate. We have carefully considered the advisability of inflicting the maximum sentence but in view of the fact that the respondent will never again be allowed to practise in the profession and in view of the fact that the eyes of the public have now been opened to the risks to which they are exposed by the existence of such a man, we are of opinion that the proper sentence should be one of rigorous imprisonment for 12 months and the fine inflicted by the Magistrate of Rs. 500 will be re-imposed: in default, the respondent will be sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a further three months.

A Sub-Inspector conducting an investigation is within the law when he sends for a person to the police station who can in his opinion give information about a crime; and a constable and a chowkidar who did no more than bring such a person to the Sub-Inspector and tell him to sit down until the Sub-Inspector sees him are committing no offence whatever.

Copies of the statements recorded by a Circle Inspector of Police were not allowed to be given to the accused as no statement was reduced to writing.

Held: that the accused could not be held to be prejudiced by not being given copies of the statements made before the Circle Inspector, but his report should certainly have been placed on the record if the accused so desired.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision of an order of the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad passed in appeal from an order of a Magistrate of the First Class of the same district. The case set for trial was despite the inordinate mass of irrelevant evidence recorded and the extremely lengthy judgments of the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge a very simple one. Sub-Inspector Abdul Karim is said to have called a man called Babu Ram first to the Zila of a leading zamindar and secondly to the police station and released him only on receipt of Rs. 40 which was paid to him by Mahadeo, Babu Ram's uncle. Two constables and a chowkidar are alleged to have assisted the Sub-Inspector in the matter and they also were charged with the offence of wrongful confinement. The Sub-Inspector himself was charged under Ss. 161 and 165, I. P. C., with accepting an illegal gratification. He was also charged with an offence under S. 347, I. P. C., namely wrongful confinement to extort property. The Magistrate found that the story told by Babu Ram and his witnesses was true and he convicted the Sub-Inspector of offences under Ss. 161, 165 and also under S. 347, I. P. C. He acquitted one of the constables but convicted Muneshar constable and Thakur Din chowkidar of offences under S. 342, I. P. C., namely, wrongful confinement. The learned Sessions Judge accepted the findings of the lower Court as to the offences committed by Thakur Din and Muneshar but as to the Sub-Inspector Abdul Karim he recorded the following finding:

"He is certainly not guilty of an offence under S. 165, I. P. C., as he did not take any valuable thing without consideration. I think the offence committed by him falls under Ss. 347 and 114 rather than under S. 161, I. P. C."

He accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence passed under Ss. 161 and 165 altered the conviction under S. 347/114 and upheld the sentence passed under that section. In revision one of the grounds stated is that "the conviction under Ss. 161 and 165, I. P. C., having been set aside by the learned Sessions Judge the conviction under S. 347/114, I. P. C., cannot be maintained in law."

This is a sufficient ground for the admission of the application in revision but it raises something more than a mere technical question. The learned Sessions Judge by committing himself to the statement that Sub-Inspector Abdul Karim did not take any valuable thing, must be held to disbelieve the story told by the witness Mahadeo that he gave the Sub-Inspector Rs. 40. If no money passed I can find no evidence that extortion was the object with which Babu Ram was confined if it can be held that he was confined, and the elements of an offence under S. 347 are wanting. Furthermore by importing S. 114 into the case the learned Judge implies that some other person, not Sub-Inspector Abdul Karim, committed the substantive offence under S. 347, for S. 114 applies only to the case of one who stands by while another commits an offence on his instigation. Had it been found that either the constable or the chaukidar had committed an offence under S. 347 I could have understood the conviction of the Sub-Inspector under S. 347 read with S. 114 but as there is no such finding I am of opinion that a conviction under S. 347 read with S. 114 is illegal. If no one committed the offence of wrongful confinement with a view to extortion, nobody else could abet that offence and on this simple question of law I would be prepared to set aside the conviction of Abdul Karim. But the matter must be taken further, because I have still to consider the question of the conviction of Thakur Din and Muneshar. These persons were convicted under S. 342, I. P. C., of the offence of wrongful confinement. Wrongful confinement is defined in S. 340, I. P. C., in the following terms:

"Whoever wrongfully restrains any person in such a manner as to prevent that person from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits, is said wrongfully to confine that person," and there are two illustrations given:

(a) A causes Z to go within a walled space and locks Z in: Z is thus prevented from proceeding in any direction beyond the circumscribing line of the wall. A wrongfully confines Z. (b) A places men with firearms at the outlets of a building and tells Z that they will fire at Z if Z attempts to leave the building. A wrongfully confines Z. Now in this case the first act alleged against Thakur Din, chaukidar, is that he called Babu Ram to see the Sub-Inspector and told him to sit under a tree outside the zamindar's Zila. So far no circumscribing limits are mentioned and as far as I understand the evidence there is not even that element of voluntary obstruction which would amount to restraint within the meaning of the code. Secondly it is alleged that the chaukidar and the constable Muneshar took Babu Ram on the orders of the Sub-Inspector to the police station and told him to sit there until the Sub-Inspector interviewed him. Again there is not the slightest suggestion that any restraint was placed upon Babu Ram's movements. He was not placed in the havalat, and although he himself said that he was assaulted by Muneshar on the order of the Sub-Inspector this evidence "does not appear to have been believed by the lower Courts and does not form part of the charge. Apart from the fact that no offence under S. 342 was committed by Thakur Din or Muneshar I would point out that if a constable and a chaukidar are to be sent to jail for six months for taking a man to the police station in order that a Sub-Inspector conducting an investigation into a burglary might ask him some questions, it would be impossible for the police administration of the country to be carried on."

It is perfectly certain that Babu Ram was taken to the police station and that he was there questioned as to the whereabouts of one Ram Sewak who was suspected in a burglary case. Not only is this fact noted in the police diary but Babu Ram himself admits that he was asked these questions. Babu Ram may have supposed that he was himself under suspicion, but there is no evidence that this is the case; and it appears that both the Magistrate and the Judge believed that the Sub-Inspector had heard of the association between Babu Ram and Ram Sewak and wished to make inquiries from Babu Ram which might help him in the investigation of the burglary case. A Sub-Inspector conducting an investigation is within the law when he sends for a person to the police station, who can in his opinion give information about a crime, and a constable and a chaukidar who did no more than bring such a person to the Sub-Inspector and tell him to sit down until the Sub-Inspector sees him are committing no offence whatever; they are merely obeying the lawful order of their superior officer. Possibly, if the Court held that there was a conspiracy between the Sub-Inspector and his underlings to extort money as the price of the release of such a person, a conviction of all those concerned in the affair would be legal. But the Magistrate himself finds specifically that there is no evidence that the constable or the chaukidar had any intention of extorting money or that they were in league with the Sub-Inspector or that they had knowledge of the intention of the Sub-Inspector. Thus the conviction of Muneshar and Thakur Din of the offence under S. 342, I. P. C., is as erroneous as the conviction of Sub-Inspector Abdul Karim under S. 347 read with S. 114, I. P. C.

It is not necessary for me to consider whether the evidence in the case would have justified the conviction of any of these persons under some other section of the Penal Code, but as the point has been raised by the learned Government Advocate I think it proper to observe that in my opinion the whole of the evidence adduced for the prosecution was defective. Babu Ram said that he had been taken to the Zila, that Thakur Din remained with him the whole time, that the Sub-Inspector came out at 1 o'clock, that they then went to the thana, and that he was first questioned by the Sub-Inspector at 3 o'clock and subsequently at 8 o'clock in the thana. He also said that the Rs. 40 given to the Sub-Inspector was part of a sum of Rs. 50 which he had recently received from his father in Rangoon for the purchase of bullocks. Now the station diary of the police station shows that Thakur Din, chaukidar, came and made a report of the burglary at 2 o'clock in the afternoon in question, that the Sub-Inspector arrived at 5 o'clock and that he questioned Babu Ram later.

The lower Courts think it proper to doubt the genuineness of the police diary and the Magistrate in particular refers to what he calls interpolations and suggests pesh bandi. The Magistrate's own judgment is full of interpolations, but they do not arouse in my mind any suspicion that they were made subsequently with some sinister motive. The same applies to the interpolations in these diaries. It cannot be supposed that Abdul Karim set about making interpolations in his diary on the very day on which he had exactd Rs. 40 from Mahadeo as believed by the Magistrate, but not by the Judge, for he could not foresee that proceedings were subsequently going to be instituted on an anonymous petition some weeks later. In my opinion the entries in the diary disprove part at least of the statement made by Babu Ram and they give full support to Abdul Karim's explanation of Babu Ram's visit to the police station. Both the Courts below agree that Babu Ram's statement that Rs. 40 was part of a sum of Rs. 50 which he had received from his father, is false because the sum of Rs. 50 was not received until some days after Babu Ram's visit to the police station. Thus wherever the statement of Babu Ram could be disproved by other evidence it has been disproved, and it is worthy of remark that the Circle Inspector of Police, who first inquired into the matter found the charges untrue, and a Deputy Magistrate who visited the village also discovered nothing against the Sub-Inspector.

One other point was raised in the grounds for revision, namely that the Magistrate did not allow copies of the statements recorded by the Circle Inspector to be given to the accused. Prima facie this was an inquiry made by a police officer into a criminal offence and if he recorded any evidence in writing copies of such statements should have been allowed to the accused under S. 162, Criminal P. C. The view taken by the Magistrate that this was merely a private inquiry, cannot be supported for a moment; but I find that in his order dated 2nd April 1930 he gave the best of all possible reasons for not giving copies of the statements and that was that no statement was reduced to writing. I cannot therefore hold that the accused were prejudiced by not being given copies of the statements made before the Circle Inspector, but his report should certainly have been placed on the record if the accused so desired.

In my opinion this is one of those cases in which the Courts have been too ready to believe allegations made against a police officer, which are not supported by reliable evidence and apart from the illegality of the convictions under the sections employed by the learned Sessions Judge, I am of opinion that these persons deserve an acquittal, and this is emphatically not a case in which this Court should be deterred from proceeding by the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C. I allow this application, set aside the convictions and sentences of all the three applicants. Thakur Din and Muneshar will be released forthwith and Abdul Karim, who is on bail, will not be required to surrender. All fines if paid will be returned.

The practice that a complainant or first informant should not be prosecuted under S. 211 until his complaint or police case has been disposed of is not based on any statute and is merely a precautionary rule of safety in respect of a special class of criminal cases. While a prosecution under S. 211 might in certain circumstances be delayed or even set aside in accordance with this practice, the practice could per se be no ground for setting aside a conviction under S. 211 before disposal of the main case. (b) Penal Code (1860), S. 420—Offence coming both under S. 420, Penal Code and S. 64, Post Office Act — Assuming latter to be minor offence, it is not illegal to try accused under major offence under S. 420, I. P. C., alone.

The proposition that where a particular set of acts or omissions constitute an offence under the general law and also under a special law the prosecution should be under the special law, is confined to cases where the offences are coincident or practically so.

Where an accused was charged both under S. 420, Penal Code and S. 64, Post Office Act, held that, assuming that S. 64, Post Office Act, is a minor offence as compared to an offence under S. 420, Penal Code, it would not be illegal to try the accused under the major offence under S. 420, Penal Code, only: 11 C. S. P. Varma—for Petitioner.

O. M. Agarwala—for the Crown.

Macpherson, J.—This rule has been issued to consider the conviction of and sentence upon Suchit Raut alias Bikramajitya who has been convicted by a Deputy Magistrate of Chapra under S. 420 read with S. 511, I. P. C., and sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment which term was reduced on appeal to one year.

The facts alleged were that on 23rd July last the petitioner made over to the Chapra Post Office a letter marked: "Insured for rupees nine hundred, Rs. 900," and addressed to Bikramajitya at Naihati, giving the sender's name as Ramlagan Raut, who is his father and insuring the letter for Rs. 900. According to the Post Office rule it was enclosed in another cover which two days later reached Naihati intact and on the 27th the petitioner went to the post office to take delivery. There he made difficulties in respect of signing a receipt until he should see the contents, and when eventually he opened the cover he pointed out that it contained nothing except three pieces of blank paper, accused the clerk and others of having stolen his money, despatched a telegram to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barrackpore complaining that his remittance of Rs. 900 had been tampered with and only blank papers were found inside the cover and demanding an inquiry, lodged at the police station a case against two persons unknown of theft of Rs. 900 from this insured letter giving the details as three Government currency notes of Rs. 100 and 60 such notes of Rs. 10 and in addition made a long statement of claim to the Inspector of Post Offices. The Postmaster of Naihati meantime wired to Chapra and after communication among themselves the postal authorities eventually made over the matter to the police of Saran. It was alleged that the petitioner had not enclosed the notes for Rs. 900 in his letter and that his claim against the post office was entirely false. The Court framed charges under S. 420 read with Ss. 511 and 419, I. P. C., and S. 64, Post Office Act. The case against him of attempt to cheat is found by the lower Court to have been conclusively established. A particularly strong point against the petitioner was that three notes of Rs. 100 and 60 notes of Rs. 10 would have weighed at least 60 rattis whereas the original which he presented weighed only 17 rattis and was sent at a postal charge of Rs. 1-2-0 whereas the postal charge for a cover containing 63 notes would have been much more. Palpably the intention of the accused was fraudulently to secure compensation of or at least not exceeding Rs. 900 from the post office for his alleged loss. He was acquitted by the trial Court of the second and third charges.

The only points which Mr. S. P. Varma has advanced in support of the rule are: (1) that before this prosecution was entered upon his first information of theft should have been inquired into; (2) that he should have been prosecuted only under S. 64, Post Office Act 6 of 1898, and not under the Penal Code for an attempt to cheat, in which case he would only have been liable to a fine extending to Rs. 500; and (3) that the sentence is excessive. In my opinion there is no substance in any of these pleas.

As regards the first contention, the fact as to the case of theft is that it has been kept pending until the disposal of the present prosecution. The practice in respect of prosecutions under S. 211 is referred to in support of the contention that the petitioner ought not to have been prosecuted until his own case had been disposed of. But in the first place, the practice that a complainant or first informant should not be prosecuted under S. 211 until his complaint or police case had been disposed of is not based on any statute and is merely a precautionary rule of safety in respect of a special class of criminal cases. Then, while a prosecution under S. 211 might in certain circumstances be delayed or even set aside in accordance with this practice, the practice could per se be no ground for setting aside a conviction. For there is no illegality in the trial. The practice itself is also one which should be subjected to the strictest limitation. In the second place, there is no real analogy between a prosecution under S. 211 and the prosecution to which the petitioner was subjected; for instance, where there are counter cases in respect of a riot one of the cases must be taken up before the other and it is in the discretion of the Magistrate which is to be first inquired into. Similarly, whereas here the petitioner set out one version and the post office another it was in the discretion of the Magistrate to take up that case first which appeared to him to be true, from which it follows that the other may be kept pending. There is here no irregularity in any part of the trial and certainly there has been no resulting prejudice of failure of justice. The plea fails. As to the second point: it is based on the principle that where a particular set of facts or omissions constitute an offence under the general law and also under a special law, the prosecution should be under the special law and the decision in Kuloda, Prosad Majumdar v. Emperor (1) is quoted in support. But the proposition is confined to cases where the offences are coincident or practically so. The difficulty in the appellant's way is that S. 64, Post Office Act, merely makes punishable:

"a person who being required by the Act to make a declaration in respect of any postal article to be sent by post or the contents or value thereof makes in his declaration any statement which he knows, or has reason to believe to be false or does not believe to be true."

In the present case the charge of attempt to cheat contains additional ingredients supported by additional evidence beyond those required for a conviction under S. 64, Post Office Act. Assuming therefore that S. 64 is a minor offence to an attempt to cheat the post office it will not be illegal to try an accused for the major offence only. Furthermore, it is by no means clear that an offence under S. 64 has been committed. Reference has been made to the rules framed under S. 32, Post Office Act, with respect to the insurance of postal articles and in particular, to Rr. 118, 125, 130 and 132; but though an article, which it is proposed to insure, must be presented at the post office with the amount for which the sender wishes it to be insured clearly written on the cover, as was done by the petitioner, that writing cannot be held to constitute the sender a person who is required by the Post Office Act or even by the rules to make a declaration within the meaning of S. 64 in respect of the article. The facts that currency notes being sent by post are compulsorily insurable and that articles cannot be insured beyond the real value of their contents have no significance in this regard. In any case, under S. 72, Post Office Act, a Court cannot take cognizance of an offence punishable under S. 64 except on complaint by the postal authorities and no such complaint was filed. For these reasons the second contention also cannot prevail.

As to the third contention: it is based upon the difference between the punishment under S. 64 of fine which may extend to Rs. 500 and the punishment which has been awarded. But S. 64 is obviously no criterion for the punishment of the completed offence of attempt to cheat. When he insured his letter at Chapra for the purpose of defrauding the Government the petitioner had proceeded but a little way in the execution of his purpose. The sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment is by no means excessive, particularly having regard to the fact that it was reduced in the Sessions Court by reason of "an earnest appeal for leniency." The application is without merits and I would discharge the rule.

Criminal Revn. No. 26 of 1930 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 25 of 1930, Decided on 14th August 1930, from order of Panchayat Court, Hemavathi, D/- 5th December 1928, in Criminal Case No. 5 of 1928.

Madras Village Courts Act (1889)—Rules under R. 64—Conviction by panchayatdars in case instituted after they cease to be panchayatdars is invalid and not coverable by R. 64.

Where persons constituting Court of Panchayatdars cease to be panchayatdars, owing to efflux of the term of their office long before the case was instituted, they have no jurisdiction to try the case. Conviction by such panchayatdars is invalid and the defect cannot be covered by R. 64. [P 1216 O 2]

J. S. Narasimhachariar—for Petitioners.

K. Venkataraghavachariar for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a petition to revise the conviction under Ss. 160 and 352, I. P. C., of the petitioner by the Panchayat Court of Hemavathi dated 5th December 1928. The short ground is that the gentlemen who formed the Court and recorded the conviction, namely Messrs. Thimme Gowd, Kurnam Ramappa and Hanumantha Gowd, had ceased to be panchayatdars by efflux of time long before the case was instituted. Ex. A, a copy of the Anantapur District Gazette for June 1925, shows that the above-named three gentlemen were notified as having been duly elected as panchayatdars of the Hemavathi Court. According to R. 17 of the rules framed under the Village Courts Act the term of office of panchayatdars commences from the date of the publication in the District Gazette. By S. 9 (4) the term of office is, three years, and therefore the term of office of these three gentlemen expired in June 1928. The case against the petitioner was instituted on 18th September 1928, and therefore long after the above said gentlemen had ceased to be panchayatdars. They were therefore functus officio and had no power to try or convict anyone. The Public Prosecutor referred to R. 64 of the rules made under the Village Courts Act which says that no proceeding or act of a panchayat Court shall be deemed to be invalid by reason only of any defect in the constitution of such Court or that any member of such Court was disqualified or disentitled to act as such or to hold any office in relation to such Court or by reason of any such proceeding or act having taken place during any vacancy in the office of president or member of such Court. The defect disclosed in this case is not any of the ones mentioned in this rule. But the proceeding was by a set of persons purporting to act as a Court and not having any power so to do. There was entire want of jurisdiction and the proceeding was from the beginning invalid. The conviction is set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Appeal No. 702 of 1930, Decided on 13th October 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Karnal, D/- 14th June 1930.

* Evidence Act (1 of 1872), S. 33—Sessions Judge transferring the statement of witness in the Court of the committing Magistrate to his own record simply because Public Prosecutor made a statement before him that the witness could not be found—Procedure is illegal?

The Sessions Judge, before transferring the deposition of a witness in the Court of the committing Magistrate to his own record, ought to take evidence and record proceedings and if, as a result of the evidence thus taken, he arrives at the judicial decision that the witness could not be found or his presence could not be secured without an amount of delay or expense, which under the circumstances of the case the Court considers unreasonable, he can bring his former deposition on the record. But if the Sessions Judge transfers the statement of the witness to the record of the Sessions case simply because the Public Prosecutor makes a statement before him that the witness could not be found, the procedure is contrary to law and wholly irregular and the deposition of the witness thus brought on the record cannot be treated as evidence. Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Indar, a Sansi, of Bir Badalwa in the District of Karnal, has been convicted under S. 302, I.P.C., and sentenced to death. His appeal and the record of the case are before us. On 7th January 1930, Bansi (P. W. 2), Chaukidar of Mauza Haibatpur, reported at the Butana Police Station at about 7 p.m. that a dead body was lying in a well within the area of his village. The Sub-Inspector proceeded to the village and recovered the body on the morning of 8th January 1930. The body was found to be that of a woman and, at the instance of the Sub-Inspector, a photograph of the said body was taken. The post-mortem examination was held on 10th January 1930, by the Civil Surgeon, Karnal, and a number of incised wounds and other injuries, including fractures, were found. Death in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon was due to the fracture of the vertebral column and severance of the spinal cord. According to the medical witness, the body was in an identifiable condition and death had taken place at any time between four and seven days before the date of the post-mortem.

The photograph has been definitely identified by Kundan (P. W. 4) and several other witnesses as that of Mt. Mari, the deceased wife of Kundan. The case for the prosecution is that Mt. Mari, after the imprisonment of her husband, Kundan, in Saharanpur District, left the Reformatory where she had been living with her daughter Mt. Khazani, aged about two and a half years, and went with her husband's brother's wife Mt. Santi (P. W. 16) to a place called Kurak. Mt. Mari was accompanied by her infant daughter and, while Mt. Santi returned from Kurak with her child the following day, Mt. Mari and Mt. Khazani remained at the house of Mt. Hiran (P. W. 15) who was related to the accused. Some days afterwards Simal, the grandfather of the accused, took Mt. Mari and her daughter to Sirya (P. W. 8). Mt. Mari lived with Sirya for a week or so and thereafter Guga (P. W. 5), a cousin of the accused, and Mt. Chawli (P. W. 6), the wife of Nandu, the brother of the accused, brought Mt. Mari with her child to their house, their idea being to marry her to the accused. She lived in their house for a few days; but, when the family came to know that Mt. Mari was a married woman and her husband was alive, and further that she had run away from the Reformatory, they decided that Indar accused should not marry her. She was accordingly asked to leave their house. She accordingly left the house a day or so before the date of her murder and took her daughter with her. The accused accompanied her. When Nandu went to his fields the following morning he saw Mt. Mari in the company of Indar. Late at night the accused Indar came to his house and asked Nandu to light a fire for him as he was shivering with cold. Afterwards, within the hearing of Guga (P. W. 5) and Mt. Chawli (P. W. 6), the accused confessed to his brother Nandu that he had murdered Mt. Mari and Mt. Khazani and had thrown the corpse of the latter into the canal and the dead body of Mt. Mari was lying in the jungle. Nandu went with the accused to the spot where the dead body of Mt. Mari was lying near a well covered with some leaves, and in the presence of his brother the accused threw the dead body into the well where, as already stated, it was found by the Sub-Inspector.

There is no direct evidence of the murders and the dead body of Mt. Khazani has not been recovered. The case depends mainly upon the confession which the accused made in the presence of his brother Nandu, Mt. Chawli, the wife of Nandu and his cousin Guga and also upon the recovery of certain ornaments which the deceased Mt. Mari and her daughter were wearing, in the manner detailed below. There is further the important circumstance that Mt. Mari was last seen alive in the company of the accused.

Nandu, who would have been a very important witness for the prosecution, was examined before the committing Magistrate, but the Sessions Judge, purporting to act under the provisions of S. 33, Evidence Act, has transferred his statement to the record of the Sessions case simply because the Public Prosecutor made a statement before him that Nandu could not be found, according to the report of the Superintendent in charge of the Criminal Settlement in Sheikhupura District and the telegram received from the Deputy Commissioner, Criminal Tribes, Lahore. This procedure is contrary to law and should never have been followed. The Sessions Judge, before transferring the deposition of Nandu in the Court of the committing Magistrate to his own record, ought to have taken evidence and recorded proceedings and if, as a result of the evidence thus taken, he had arrived at the judicial decision that Nandu could not be found or his presence could not be secured without an amount of delay or expense which, under the circumstances of the case, the Court considered unreasonable, he could have brought his former deposition on the record. In the absence of such evidence and a judicial finding in compliance with the requirements of S. 33, Evidence Act, the procedure adopted by the Sessions Judge was wholly irregular and we are not prepared to treat the deposition of Nandu thus brought on the record of this case as evidence.

But leaving this piece of evidence out of consideration, there is ample evidence on the record which shows that the guilt of the accused is fully established.

As already stated, we have the statements of Mt. Chawli (P. W. 6) and Guga (P. W. 5) within whose earshot the accused made a confession that he had killed Mt. Mari and her daughter. Again it is fully established that the accused disposed of the ornaments which had been removed from the person of Mt. Mari soon after the occurrence. Some of these ornaments he gave to Mt. Bishni (P. W. 13), who is related to him as his aunt, and others were traced at the instance of the accused, and as a result of his pointing out the spot where they lay concealed. It may also be mentioned here that shortly before the occurrence the accused had taken away a gandasa from his house, and, according to the medical evidence, the injuries were found to have been inflicted with some such weapon.

Furthermore, Mt. Bakhtawari (P. W. 12) says that the accused had given to her in the presence of Mt. Chawli and Guga a dulai, Ex. P. 16, somewhere about the time when Mt. Mari had been murdered. This dulai was found to be stained with human blood and was recovered from the possession of Mt. Bakhtawari by the police, accompanied by the accused. Guga (P. W. 5) and Mt. Chawli (P. W. 6) corroborate the statement of Mt. Bakhtawari (P. W. 12).

The defence set up by the accused in his statement before the Sessions Judge is not supported by any evidence and is worthless. Though the accused was charged both with the murder of Mt. Mari and of Mt. Khazani, yet as the dead body of Mt. Khazani could not be found the accused has been acquitted of the charge of Mt. Khazani's murder and we are not concerned with it any more. The guilt, however of the accused, so far as the murder of Mt. Mari is concerned, is fully established by the strong circumstantial evidence on the record, and having regard to the brutality of the murder, we do not see any extenuating circumstances for reducing the sentence. We accordingly confirm the sentence of death passed on Indar and order that the same be carried out according to law.

Mt. Zauhra Bi—Petitioner.

Muhammad Yusaf—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 794 of 1930, Decided on 13th October 1930, reported by Sess. Judge, Delhi, D/- 22nd May 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), S. 488—Order made granting maintenance to Mahomedan minor son at instance of his mother living separate from husband—Mother going with boy to husband and again leaving him with the boy—Order is not cancelled.

Where an order is made granting maintenance allowance to a Mahomedan son aged 3 on the application of the mother who was living separately from her husband, the mere fact that the mother, since the date of the order, has taken the boy to live with his father and has again taken him away from his father, cannot lead to an automatic cancellation of the order but it must be taken to subsist.

(b) Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), S. 488—Minor living with legal guardian—Condition imposed by father that he would maintain it if child resided with him, amounts to refusal to maintain (Obiter).

In the case of a minor who is living with its legal guardian, e. g. a Mahomedan boy aged 3 with his mother, the condition imposed by the father that he would maintain it only if the child went to reside with him is tantamount to a refusal to maintain the child: A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 543, Foll. [P 1221 C 2]

Madan Lal—for Respondent.

Facts.—Muhammad Yusaf and Mt. Zauhra Bi are man and wife and have a son Muhammad Salihon who is said to be about three years of age. The father and mother have been living separately and the mother applied under S. 488, Criminal P. C., for maintenance for her child. Maintenance at Rs. 7 p. m., was granted by order of Mian Jagdish Singh Magistrate, First Class, Delhi, upon 5th January 1929. Muhammad Yusuf's application for revision against this order was rejected by my order dated 24th January 1929. It appears that after this there was a reconciliation between the parents and Mt. Zauhra Bi went with the child to the father's house. She remained there some six months and she admits that the child was well-treated during those six months. Some further disputes arose between the father and mother and the latter again left with the child. She has again applied for maintenance; her application has again been heard by Mian Jagdish Singh who by order dated 16th April 1930, has dismissed it holding that Muhammad Yusaf never refused or neglected to maintain the child and never ill-treated his wife.

Grounds.—Having heard counsel for the parties I agree with the Magistrate's view of facts but revision is urged on the ground that a Mahomedan mother has the right of custody of her sons until they have completed their seventh year and that therefore if the mother elects to live away from the father she is entitled to keep the sons with her in which case an offer to maintain on condition that the child comes to the father's house is a conditional offer amounting to a refusal. The point involved is purely a legal one and divergent views have been expressed by various High Courts in India. As regards the Punjab and Lahore rulings I have been referred to Man Singh v. Dharman (1), A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 536 and A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 430, on behalf of the father. The first and last of these deal with Hindus and are, therefore, distinguishable but A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 536 very distinctly negatives the only principle upon which maintenance could be allowed in this case. On the other hand a latter ruling A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 543 affirms that principle and it is to be noted that whilst the 1926 ruling is based upon 18 P. R. 1894 and 22 P. R. 1917, the 1928 ruling refers to and dissents from those two rulings. I consider that an important legal point is in issue and that in accordance with the latest Lahore ruling, to which my attention has been drawn, the order of the Magistrate should be revised.

Another matter which has not been referred to by either counsel is that the order dated 5th January 1929, granting maintenance at Rs. 7 per mensem to Muhammad Salihon has never been cancelled. The mere fact that his mother, since the date of that order, had taken him to live with his father and has again taken him away from his father cannot in my opinion lead to any automatic cancellation of the order. For this reason also I am of opinion that maintenance at Rs. 7 per mensem should be continued to Muhammad Salihon through his mother Mt. Zauhra Bi. On these grounds I report the case to the High Court of Lahore under S. 438, Criminal P. C. with a recommendation that maintenance at the rate of Rs. 7 per mensem be awarded to the minor son Muhammad Salihon.

Order.—This reference has been made by the Sessions Judge of Delhi under S. 438, Criminal P. C. The facts are stated in detail in his order of reference and briefly are that Muhammad Yusuf and Mt. Zohra Bi are husband and wife and have a male child Muhammad Salihon aged about three years. An application was made by the mother as guardian of her minor child against Muhammad Yusuf for maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C. at a time when she was living separately from her husband and an order was made on 5th January 1929, that Muhammad Yusuf should pay Rs. 7 per month for the maintenance of his minor son. It appears that after this order was made the husband and wife made up their differences and the wife went to live with Muhammad Yusuf with the child and both were maintained by him. Later, however, they quarrelled again and separated. Consequently a fresh application under S. 488 was made by Mt. Zauhra Bi for maintenance for her minor son. This application has been refused by the same Magistrate on the ground that no maintenance could be granted to the minor so long as the mother and the child were living separate from Muhammad Yusuf who was prepared to maintain the child if he went to live with him. The learned Sessions Judge is of opinion that the previous order of maintenance made against Muhammad Yusuf is still in force not having been cancelled by the Court and that the position taken up by the Magistrate on the merits of the case needs scrutiny.

In my opinion the view of the learned Judge is quite correct and the previous order still subsists and the present reference must succeed on that ground alone. The learned counsel for Muhammad Yusuf has however contended that according to a judgment of the learned Chief Justice in Jagan Nath v. Koshalia Devi, A. I. R. 1927 Lah. p. 430, an order under S. 488 for a maintenance of a child cannot be passed against the father unless it is proved that he has neglected or refused to maintain it and that in this case the father has not refused to maintain the child. The learned counsel concedes that the view taken by me in Sarfaraz Begam v. Miran Bakhsh, A. I. R. 1929 Lah. p. 543, is correct. In that case I held that in the case of a minor who is living with its legal guardian the condition imposed by the father that he would maintain it only if the child went to reside with him is tantamount to a refusal to maintain the child. Admittedly in this case the mother is the guardian of the child till he has attained the age of 7. My observations in that case fully apply to the circumstances of this case and therefore if it were necessary I would hold that there had been a refusal or neglect by the father to maintain his minor son in the present case but I have already held that the original order granting Rs. 7 per month as maintenance to the minor through its mother still subsists and is, therefore, enforceable at the instance of the mother. The Magistrate will on being moved enforce that order except for the period during which the maintenance has been paid by Muhammad Yusuf and also for the period during which the minor has been living with him and has been maintained by him. With these remarks I return the reference to the Sessions Judge.

Abdul Qadir Kasuri and others—Accused.

Criminal Revn. No. 719 of 1930, Decided on 19th September 1930, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Lahore, on 29th May 1930.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 71 — Sentence where accused is charged under Ss. 143 and 341/149.

Where an accused is charged under both Ss. 143 and 341/149, there should not be two sentences but one. [P 1221 C 2]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 143—Number of persons charged more than five; some found to be absent from spot—Rest if less than five cannot be convicted under S. 143.

Where the number of persons charged is more than five, but some of them are found not to have been present on the spot, remaining persons if less than five cannot be said to have constituted an unlawful assembly. [P 1221 C 2]

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Facts.—The eight accused were charged, under Ss. 341 and 143, I. P. C., in the Court of Mr. E. S. Lewis, Additional District Magistrate.

Chint Ram, accused, was acquitted, but the others were convicted as follows:

Maulana Abdul Qadir Kasuri, Pandit K. Santanam, Thakar Dass Kapur, and Muhammad Hayat were ordered, under S. 143 to undergo four months' simple imprisonment, and, under Ss. 341/149, I.P. C., to pay fines of Rs. 100 each, or, in lieu, to undergo a month's simple imprisonment.

The remaining accused, viz., Satyagraha volunteers Nos. 17, 45 and 97 were under S. 143, ordered to undergo a month's simple imprisonment, and under S. 341-I.P. C. they were ordered to pay fines of Rs. 20 each, or in lieu to undergo a week's simple imprisonment.

In both cases, if fines were not paid, the periods of imprisonment were to be consecutive.

This judgment was pronounced on 21st May 1930, and was reproduced in certain local papers on the 22nd. This led the Additional District Magistrate to examine the file, and the result was that he discovered that unfortunately a clerical mistake had crept in. The maximum sentence under S. 341, is simple imprisonment for a term of one month or fine of Rs. 500 or both, and it was the intention of the Court to order that four of the accused if they did not pay the fine of Rs. 100 each, were to undergo a week's simple imprisonment. The period given in the judgment has erroneously been entered as a month, and this sentence transgresses the provisions of S. 65, I. P. C.

No fines have been paid, as all the accused declined to take part in the proceedings, but, in any case, I have suspended the sentence pending confirmation of my order by the High Court. It is for this purpose that I am sending the English record to the Honourable Judges, under the provisions of S. 438, Criminal P. C.

Order.—The District Magistrate has reported this case with a view that the sentences of one month's imprisonment passed in default of payment of fine under S. 341, I. P. C., be changed to sentences of one week's imprisonment the maximum sentence under the section.

The Crown is represented by Mr. Soni who has pointed out to me other defects in the judgment of the Magistrate. Eight men were sent up for trial under various sections. They consisted of three picketing volunteers and five men who were accused of having directed operations and having committed offences under those sections. The finding is that of the five one Chint Ram was not proved to have been present on the spot and unless the three picketing volunteers are included with the remaining four as having constituted an assembly they cannot be said to have formed an unlawful assembly. The judgment is far from clear on this point and it is possible to find passages in support of the two different views that there was an assembly of seven and that there was an assembly of four only, the three picketing volunteers not forming part of that assembly. The latter view I think finds more support than the former in the judgment of the Magistrate. I find therefore that there being only four men no offence has been committed under S. 143. Sentences have been passed under both Ss. 143 and 341/149 and although there is authority for this procedure the rulings of this Court are definitely opposed to it, and it is clear, there should not be two sentences but one.

I quash the conviction under S. 143, and acquit the accused of having committed offences under that section.

As regards conviction under S. 341, the offence was committed and sentences of Rs. 100 fine or one month's imprisonment in the alternative are not unsuitable. The accused have however been in jail for three and half months and the best course, I think, will be to alter the sentence of fine to one month's imprisonment, which has already been undergone. I direct that the accused be set at liberty at once.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party

Criminal Revn. No. 1760 of 1929, Decided on 2nd May 1930, from Order of Sess. Judge, Attock, D/- 8th November 1929.

Penal Code (1860), S. 409—President of Co-operative Society retaining money drawn by him from Bank with permission of fellow members—Such offence held to be of technical nature and even this was doubtful.

A President of a Co-operative Credit Society was authorized to draw a certain amount of money from a bank. After so doing, he himself retained the amount instead of crediting it to the society. It was proved that he did this with the permission of his fellow members of the managing committee, as he needed it for some work.

Held, that under the circumstances the offence committed may be said to be purely of a technical nature and even this was doubtful.

Nand Lal—for Petitioner.

Tapp, J.—The petitioner Azad Khan, President of the Co-operative Credit Society of Dhok Kabli in the Attock District, has been convicted of criminal breach of trust under S. 409, I. P. C., and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. The nature of imprisonment was altered to simple and his appeal was otherwise dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge. He has come up to this Court in revision chiefly on the ground that in retaining a sum of Rs. 600 out of Rs. 800 admittedly drawn by the petitioner for his society from the Central Co-operative Bank there was no dishonest intention on his part.

It appears from the evidence on the record that by a resolution dated 27th August 1927 the managing committee of the Co-operative Society mentioned above which consisted of the petitioner, Bahawal Din, P. W. 1, and one Mehr, Khan deceased it was decided to apply for a loan of Rs. 800 from the Central Co-operative Bank. A pro-note for this sum was duly executed and the petitioner was authorized or deputed to draw the amount from the Central Bank. This he did on 20th August and instead of crediting the amount to the society retained it for his own use. He repaid Rs. 200 to the Central Bank. On 9th November 1927, when the Sub-Inspector compared the account of the Central Bank with that of the society, he found that this amount of Rs. 800 had not been credited to the society whereupon he submitted a report on 11th January, with the result that the matter was taken up by Inspector Abdul Hamid Khan. The petitioner, on being questioned admitted the receipt of the money and promised to repay the rupees 600 by the middle of June but not doing so, he was prosecuted. During the investigation he paid the sum of Rupees 600, and I understand from his counsel that he has also paid interest on this amount for the period it remained with him.

The evidence in the case tends to show that the petitioner retained this money with the permission of his fellow members of the managing committee as he was in need of funds for certain purposes. It further appears that he is an old man of some 70 years of age and there has been no attempt on his part in any way to cover his act by making false entries in the books of the society. Having obtained the permission or agreement of his fellow members to retain and use the money drawn by him from the Central Bank he probably did not think that he was doing any dishonest act.

In view of all the above circumstances the offence, if any, committed by the petitioner seems to me to be purely of a technical nature and even this is doubtful. I would therefore, give him the benefit of the doubt and, accepting this petition for revision I set aside his conviction and sentence, acquit him and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Criminal P. C., (1898), Ss. 133 and 139-A—Respondent denying alleged right—Further proceedings without finding under S. 139-A are ultra vires.

In proceedings under S. 133 in respect of alleged public right of way, if the respondent denies the existence of the alleged right, subsequent proceedings under S. 137 are otherwise, ignoring the provisions of S. 139-A and without first coming to a finding under S. 139-A whether there is any reliable evidence in support of respondent's denial, are ultra vires: A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 199, Ref.

[P 1223 C 2, P 1224 C 1]

Ghulam Mohyuddin—for Petitioner.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Facts.—The Superintending Engineer, 2nd Circle, Punjab Public Works Department, Ambala, made a request to the Deputy Commissioner, Karnal, requesting him to take action under S. 13

Criminal P. C., in respect of an encroachment that constituted an obstruction to the public right of way. The Deputy Commissioner made over the case to Mian Mohammad Said, and he by order dated 26th August 1929 directed the petitioner to clear away the obstruction from the public way within one month, or appear before him on 2nd October and show cause as to why action should not be taken against him as provided for by law. On 2nd October, Hamid Ali appeared before the Magistrate and put in a written statement denying that the construction of the verandah by him had obstructed any public right of way. As no appearance was put in on behalf of the Public Works Department the case was adjourned to 14th October. On that day, the Magistrate recorded that he had visited the spot, heard the parties, and that they should produce their evidence on 5th November at Karnal. The case could not be proceeded with on 5th November and the Magistrate recorded an order that the case should come up before him at Panipat on 11th when he will fix some other day for evidence. On the 11th the petitioner Hamid Ali applied to the Magistrate for the appointment of the jury under S. 135, Criminal P. C. He nominated two jurors, and said that the jury should not go into the question of title, but should decide if the road to Panipat Railway Station had been so obstructed as to constitute a nuisance to the passers by. A jury was then appointed consisting of four jurors and one foreman and the order issued under S. 133 was made absolute on 18th December 1929, on the report of the foreman and the two jurors that had been nominated by the Court.

Order of Reference.—The Magistrate, as often happens in such cases, neglected entirely the provisions of the new S. 139-A, Criminal P. C., which enacts that, when an order is made under S. 133 for the purpose of preventing obstruction to the public in the use of a way, the Magistrate shall question the respondent as to whether he denies the existence of a public right in respect of the way. If the respondent does so, the Magistrate shall before proceeding under Ss. 137 or 138, enquire into the matter. It is further enacted that if in such enquiry the Magistrate finds that there is any reliable evidence in support of such denial he shall stay the proceedings until the matter of the existence of such right has been decided by a competent civil Court while if he finds that there is no such evidence he shall proceed as laid down in S. 137 or S. 138 as the case may require. In the present case nothing like this was done. When the petitioner appeared before him, the Magistrate did not put to him the relevant question under S. 139-A, and overlooked its provisions in spite of the fact that the petitioner had denied the existence of the alleged public right in his written statement. He did not take the trouble to consult the law and passed an order for the production of evidence presumably under S. 137. The petitioner thereafter presented an application for the appointment of a jury when as has been stated above, a jury was appointed but all this was done without taking any action under S. 139-A.

The case has thus been decided without first coming to a finding under S. 139-A, whether there was any reliable evidence in support of the petitioner's denial, and the proceedings were therefore entirely without jurisdiction. It has not been urged before me, but it may be argued that as the petitioner himself applied for a jury, he waived his rights under S. 139-A, but I do not think that there can be a waiver of a mandatory provision such as is contained in S. 139-A of the Code: vide A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 199. This is all the more so as the petitioner had clearly denied the alleged right in his very first written statement.

Apart from the above the petitioner has urged that he presented an application to the Magistrate under S. 526, Criminal P. C., on 18th December; that the Magistrate returned it to him after perusing it, directing him to make it over to his counsel to produce the same when the case was called; and that the Magistrate did not call up the case thereafter, and pronounced the orders hurriedly in order to deprive him of his right of applying to the High Court for transfer of the case. The petitioner as also the Crown have produced evidence on this point, but I am not quite satisfied that the case was not called up and it may be that the petitioner's counsel was busy somewhere else, and could not put in appearance when the case was called. I do not therefore make this an additional ground for forwarding the petition for revision to the High Court.

But as the provisions of S. 139-A were ignored, the proceedings that followed thereafter were ultra vires and I submit the record to the Honourable High Court with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate dated 18th December, 1929 be set aside and the case be remitted to the successors of Mian Mohammad Said who has since been transferred, with the direction that he should proceed with the case as laid down in S. 139-A, Criminal-P. C. and as explained above.

Order.—For reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge, I set aside the order of the the Magistrate, First Class, dated 18th December 1929, and remit the case to his successor for disposal in accordance with law.

Wazir Singh—Accused.

Sardar Khan—Petitioner.

Criminal Revn. No. 675 of 1930, Decided on 10th October 1930, reported by District Magistrate, Ferozepore, on 19th May 1930.

(a) Criminal Trial—Duty of Courts—Magistrate should not make remarks imputing perjury and incompetency to official except in clear cases—Official must be given opportunity to explain his conduct.

Magistrates should avoid making remarks imputing perjury and incompetency to an official in the discharge of his official duties which tend to affect his future prospects except in very clear cases and after giving the official concerned an opportunity during the trial of explaining his conduct. Such remarks should not ordinarily be made except after careful consideration of the entire material on record. [P 1226 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 561-A—Jurisdiction under S. 561-A should be exercised sparingly and in rare cases to prevent injustice.

Where the jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 561-A is invoked by a District Magistrate for the purpose of expunging certain remarks imputing perjury and incompetency to an official from the judgment of the trial Court, the jurisdiction of the High Court being in such case of an exceptional nature should be exercised sparingly and in very rare cases to prevent injustice. [P 1226 C 2]

Qabul Chand for Zafarullah Khan—for Petitioner.

Mohammad Amin—for Respondent.

Report.—I forward herewith under S. 438, Criminal P. C., for the orders of the High Court the file of a case, Crown v. Wazir Singh, under S. 9, Opium Act 1 of 1878, which has been brought to my notice by the District Excise Officer in his note dated 22nd April. On the advice of the Public Prosecutor I am not recommending an appeal against the acquittal of Wazir Singh, but venture to suggest that the High Court might exercise its inherent power under S. 561-A, Criminal P. C., to expunge certain remarks against Sardar Khan, Excise Sub-Inspector Murksar, and Mohammad Yakub, Head Constable, which occur in the judgment of the trial Court.

The remarks against the Excise Sub-Inspector to which objection can be taken are as follows :

I discuss them seriatim below :

(1) "And yet Sardar Khan has the audacity to say that he obtained a receipt from Dalip Singh at the time of giving the money. In face of the clear contradiction by Dalip Singh, Sardar Khan has spoken a palpable falsehood."

The statement of the Excise Sub-Inspector in evidence was that he made a farad, Ex. P G, of giving the marked and other rupees to Dalip Singh. The witness does not say when the farad was made and there is no suggestion that it was a receipt. It is a document necessary to complete a case. The alleged remark on which the Magistrate has based the charge of falsehood therefore has not been made by the witness at all.

(2) "I therefore hold that the statement of Sardar Khan, Ishar Singh and Hazara Singh, that they saw Dalip Singh paying the money to the accused, is an utter falsehood."

While there is a definite discrepancy here between the evidence of Dalip Singh and the other witnesses mentioned, this discrepancy does not justify the imputation of lying against Sardar Khan, etc. On the contrary if there is to be any such allegation, it should surely be against Dalip Singh, as the balance of evidence is the other way.

(3) "I cannot hold a man guilty on the evidence of Dalip Singh, an enemy of the accused and Sardar Khan, etc., who have uttered gross falsehood."

This is a general statement presumably based on the two specific instances quoted above, and if these are expunged this must follow them.

(4) "Before I close, I cannot help commenting on the conduct of Sardar Khan P. W. 1 which has appeared throughout to me as not altogether understandable. He behaved in a very perplexing way in the whole affair. The unsatisfactory manner in which the whole affair was executed from beginning to end, coupled with the inaccuracies and untruths uttered by the witness, leave an idea that he was out to get the accused somehow or other. It may be true that his suspicions regarding the accused were well founded. But I should have expected a prompt and a better thought out plan of work from him rather than the present one full of flaws and absurdities."

These words are against a very general allegation and do not appear to be wholly called for. In fact I would say that the Magistrate has gone out of his way here to make these allegations against the Excise Sub-Inspector. Much of this comment deals with the technical execution of a piece of work in a specialized branch of the administration, which is not quite a fit matter for comment by the Court. So far as the Magistrate is concerned with the legal aspect of the affair or its common sense implications, any comment is fully justified, but this remark will not apply to technical defects in the Excise Sub-Inspector's work, which are for the excise authorities to detect and remove.

So much for the comments on the conduct of the Excise Sub-Inspector. I turn now to the Magistrate's remarks against Mohammad Yaqub, Head Constable, which are as follows :

"He says that there are no houses between the house of Maghar Singh and the accused except unoccupied baras. I satisfied myself in local inspection on this point and found no less than eight or nine residential houses in the way."

It is possible, as the Excise Officer suggests, that the Magistrate was not conducted by the same way as the Excise party went. In fact the whole inspection of the spot is open to objection. The Magistrate's order of 27th March 1930 (a hearing at which the Crown was not represented) is that the accused should produce his defence at the spot on 29th March 1930. There is no mention of any formal inspection of the spot or any kind of notice to the parties, as required by S. 539-B, Criminal P. C. It is true that the Crown was represented on 29th March 1930, when the inspection of the spot took place but this does not cover the defect in law as the Prosecuting Sub-Inspector could expect only to cross-examine defence witnesses and not to make representations about the conditions at the spot. He was not the officer who investigated the case, nor was he present at the raid ; nor was he instructed for this inspection. On this day the Magistrate took no defence evidence although his order of 27th March 1930 specified that purpose only. Apart from the principle I think the Magistrate's inspection is defective in detail as in the last paragraph of his note which is relevant to the present question, he refers to a way (which is not shown on the sketch) from a house (which is also not shown on his sketch). I would submit therefore that the evidence on which the Magistrate has remarked about the perjury of the Head Constable is utterly insufficient and indeed technically inadmissible.

For the reasons given in detail above, I forward the file and connected papers for the orders of the High Court with the recommendation that the remarks referred to above should be expunged from the Magistrate's judgment.

Order.—This is a reference made by the District Magistrate of Ferozepore recommending that certain remarks made by S. Jaswant Singh Uppal, a Magistrate of the First Class, in the District of Ferozepore, in his order dated 31st March 1930, in the case Crown v. Wazir Singh under S. 9, Opium Act of 1878, be expunged by this Court in exercise of its inherent powers recognised by S. 561-A, Criminal P. C..

The remarks in question were made against Sardar Khan, Excise Sub-Inspector, and Mohammad Yakub, Head-Constable of Police, who both appeared as witnesses for the prosecution in the case against Wazir Singh. The remarks objected to are specified in the order of reference passed by the District Magistrate and except one, I do not consider it necessary to quote them here in extenso. The one remark which however must be noticed is as follows:

"And yet Sardar Khan has the audacity to say that he obtained a receipt from Dalip Singh at the time of giving the money. In face of the clear contradiction by Dalip Singh, Sardar Khan has spoken a palpable falsehood."

Now, this remark against Sardar Khan is based on the assumption that, in his testimony in Court, he stated that he had obtained a receipt from Dalip Singh, when he gave him money to be paid to Wazir Singh in order to purchase opium.

I have referred to the statement of Sardar Khan recorded by the Magistrate and am unable to find anywhere a statement by him that he obtained a receipt from Dalip Singh. All that he says is that he prepared a farad recording the fact of payment of Rs. 12 to Dalip Singh. This remark of the Magistrate therefore appears to have been made under a misapprehension as to the exact nature of the statement made by Sardar Khan and is not therefore justified by the record.

So far as the other remarks against Sardar Khan are concerned, they impute to him perjury and incompetence in the discharge of his official duties. The remarks, no doubt, are couched in strong language and, having regard to the fact that, if justified, they may seriously affect the future prospects of the official concerned, should not ordinarily be made except after careful consideration of the entire material on the record. It is desirable that Magistrates should avoid making such remarks, except in very clear cases and after giving the official concerned an opportunity of explaining his conduct. I do not of course suggest that the Magistrate should hold an independent enquiry but such an opportunity should be given when the statement of the official concerned is being recorded at the trial or when he is recalled after the charge has been framed.

The other remarks objected to in the present case are based on the fact that there was at least one definite discrepancy between the statement of Sardar Khan and other prosecution witnesses. The Magistrate has chosen to accept the version of the other witnesses disbelieving that of Sardar Khan. I am therefore unable to hold that, on his finding the Magistrate was not justified in imputing falsehood to Sardar Khan. Whether the Magistrate was justified in disbelieving Sardar Khan is a matter which I do not propose to discuss for reasons which I will give hereafter. Whether Sardar Khan should have acted "in a prompter and a better thought-out manner than the present one full of flaws and absurdities," remarked by the Magistrate, is a matter of opinion. I have already stated that ordinarily Magistrates should avoid expressing opinion on matters like these unless the ends of justice necessitate such a course, but I do not feel called upon to differ from the conclusions of the Magistrate in the present proceedings and on the material before me.

Regarding the remark against Muhammad Yakub, Head-Constable, the Magistrate has practically remarked that the statement of this witness that "there are no houses between the house of Maghar Singh and the accused, except unoccupied bars" is false.

This remark is based on a local inspection by the Magistrate. He found no less than eight or nine residential houses in the way. The learned District Magistrate says that this remark is based upon an inspection of the spot at which the investigating officer was not present as he had no notice of the proposed inspection. It is however conceded that the Prosecuting Inspector was present when the inspection took place and there seems to be no force in the suggestion of the District Magistrate that the Magistrate might have gone to the house of the accused by a different route. If that happened it was the business of the Prosecuting Sub-Inspector to correct him and to take him by the proper route. On the material before the Magistrate therefore he was justified in making the remark. Indeed the learned counsel for the Crown did not seriously urge that this remark was not, under the circumstances, justified.

Now, I turn to the nature of the inherent jurisdiction which vests in this Court and which is recognized by S. 561-A, Criminal P. C., to make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any Court, or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. It has been laid down by the learned Chief Justice of this Court, in a case decided a few years back, that the jurisdiction of this Court invoked by the learned District Magistrate in this case is of an exceptional nature and should be exercised sparingly and in very rare cases to prevent injustice. Applying this test to the facts of the present case, I am unable to hold that, with the exception of the first remark made by the Magistrate against the Sub-Inspector of Exoise, Sardar Khan, which is not supported by anything on the record, I would be acting in the spirit of the rule laid down for the exercise of this Court's inherent jurisdiction if on the present reference I were to revise the opinion of the Magistrate which opinion involves the question of appreciation of the weight of evidence and of inferences to be drawn from such evidence. It was within the province of the Magistrate to decide which of the two contradictory statements he would accept to be true, if at all, and, in the present case, I do not think I would be justified in examining the reasons given by him for disbelieving the statement made before him by Sardar Khan and Muhammad Yakub. It is for these reasons that I have decided not to expunge the remarks complained against, except the first remark which, for reasons already given, must be expunged from the record.

From what I have stated above however it must not be understood that I endorse the conclusions and opinions of the Magistrate contained in the remarks objected to. I have simply declined to express any opinion, whether they are justified or not, owing to the nature and scope of my jurisdiction in the matter.

Order accordingly.

AGHA HAIDAR, J.

Ahmad Ali—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 445 of 1930, Decided on 26th August 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439—Judgments of lower appellate Courts should be self-contained, giving full analysis of evidence with clear findings so that High Court accepting findings may consider questions of law and procedure only.

The High Court in criminal revisions, as a rule, depends mainly upon the findings arrived at by the lower appellate Courts on questions of evidence. It is therefore the duty of such Courts to see that their judgments are self-contained and give a full analysis of the evidence, and that their findings are clear, so that the High Court accepting those findings may be able to direct itself to the considerations of the questions of law and procedure only.

It is not proper for the Magistrate in the lower appellate Court to say that as the trial Magistrate has discussed the evidence under several heads, he need not repeat what has been said in the judgment of the lower Court. This method of dealing with evidence of a case in appeal is highly unsatisfactory.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110—Accused is entitled to expect that his case would be thoroughly considered and proper finding recorded on evidence produced by him.

The Magistrate in the lower appellate Court bound down the accused under S. 110, remarking that he agreed with the trial Court in its analysis of evidence produced in defence and that it was insufficient to rebut the strong and reliable prosecution evidence, in which some of the witnesses stated specific instances where the accused was suspected.

Held: that this was a very unsatisfactory way of dealing with the defence evidence in a case under S. 110. The accused was entitled to expect that his case would be thoroughly considered and proper findings would be recorded in evidence produced by him in defence.

(c) Practice—Precedents—Application of—In absence of ruling by local High Court on a point, rulings of at least other High Courts should be considered for coming to proper decision—Plea should not be rejected simply because there is no ruling on it by local High Court.

If there is a conflict of judicial opinions on a particular point, the Courts are bound to follow the decisions, if any, of the local High Court. In absence of any pronouncement by the said High Court, it is the duty of the Courts to study the law as laid down at least by two other High Courts for the purpose of coming to a proper decision. It is very undesirable to reject a plea simply because there is no ruling on it by the local High Court.

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110—Where evidence for defence is at least as good as that for prosecution order under S. 110 should not be passed.

Where the evidence for defence is at least as good as that for the prosecution, then the order under S. 110 should not be passed, more specially so when the evidence for defence coupled with evidence of several of the prosecution witnesses is decidedly superior to the rest of the evidence for prosecution.

(e) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110 (f)—Scope.

The mere fact that a man happens to be of a litigious disposition does not bring his case under Cl. (f), S. 110 : 46 I. C. 701, Rel. on.

[P 1230 C 1]

(f) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110—Scope.

The mere fact that the accused is caught committing a felony does not bring his case under S. 110 (f) : 33 Cal. 308, Foll. [P 1230 C 1]

Gokal Chand Narang—for Petitioner.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Ahmad Ali, Sufedposh, has been bound down under S. 110 read with S. 118, Criminal P. C. and ordered to execute a bond for Rs. 10,000 in default of which he is to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a period of two years. He appealed to the District Magistrate and I regret to say that the appellate judgment leaves much to be desired. The High Court in criminal revisions, as a rule, depends mainly upon the findings arrived at by the lower appellate Courts on questions of evidence. It is therefore the duty of such Courts to see that their judgments are self-contained and give a full analysis of the evidence and that their findings are clear so that this Court, accepting those findings may be able to direct itself to the considerations of the questions of law and procedure only. The assurance contained in the judgment of the District Magistrate that he has heard the counsel at length and had very carefully gone through the record of the case, can hardly be considered a substitute for the judicial determination of the questions of evidence involved in the case. Such a judgment is not likely to inspire confidence in the trial of the appeals in the Courts below. The District Magistrate also observes that the trial Magistrate has discussed the evidence under several heads and therefore he need not repeat what has been said in the judgment of the lower Court. This method of dealing with the evidence in the case in appeal is highly unsatisfactory.

As regards the fairly voluminous evidence recorded on behalf of the defence, the District Magistrate in appeal has disposed of it in the following way :

"I entirely agree with the lower Court in its analysis of the evidence produced in defence. It is not sufficient to rebut the strong and reliable prosecution evidence. Some of the defence witnesses are near relations of the appellant. The majority of them are money-lenders, and it is not difficult for the appellant to produce such witnesses. Some of them, no doubt, are lambardars, but their evidence is that the appellant is of good character whereas the prosecution witnesses state specific instances where he was suspected."

This is a very unsatisfactory way of dealing with the defence evidence in a case under S. 110. The accused was entitled to expect that his case would be thoroughly considered and proper findings would be recorded on the evidence on which he relied in his defence.

A certain legal plea was taken on behalf of the accused and the attention of the District Magistrate was invited to certain reported decisions of at least two High Courts in India in support of that plea. He disposed of the matter by observing that :

"No ruling of the Lahore High Court has been produced and in the absence of any such ruling from the High Court of this province I overrule this objection."

This means that if a question of law arises on which there is no authority of the Lahore High Court, then the authorities of the other Courts should simply be ignored. In other words the District Magistrate is of opinion that he need not look into the exposition of law to be found in the decided cases of the other High Courts when the point is not covered by any judgment of the Lahore High Court. This method of dealing with a question of law may be calculated to save trouble and may therefore be convenient ; but it is open to serious objection. Of course if there is a conflict of judicial opinion then the Courts below are bound to follow the decisions if any of the Lahore High Court. But in the absence of any pronouncement by the said High Court it was the duty of the Magistrate to study the law as laid down by at least two other High Courts for the purpose of coming to a proper decision. The method adopted by the District Magistrate of dealing with the whole case is deplorable to a degree. In view of what has been stated above I was at one time inclined to send the case back to the District Magistrate for writing out a proper judgment, but on further consideration I thought that this would only have the effect of prolonging the proceedings. I therefore decided to go through the whole record in order to satisfy myself on the evidence whether the order under S. 110 was well founded or not. This procedure, however, should not be considered as a precedent in such cases.

Now coming to the revision itself Mr. Gokal Chand Narang raised a point that no proper notice was served upon his client under S. 112, Criminal P. C. I have read the original notice and in my judgment it substantially complies with the requirements of S. 112 in that it sets forth fairly clearly the substance of the information received against the applicant as well as other particulars.

The second objection repeated in this Court by Mr. Gokal Chand Narang was that the accused was not given an opportunity of further cross-examining the prosecution witnesses at the close of the prosecution evidence. The District Magistrate observes that as no charge was framed there was no necessity of affording the accused a further opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses.

There is authority to the contrary in Tirlok v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1927 All. 660. It was this judgment which the learned Magistrate refused to look into. I need not however, express an opinion on this question of procedure one way or the other as I propose to dispose of the present application for revision on its merits and not on any technical legal objection.

As already stated Ahmad Ali occupies the somewhat important position of a Sufedposi. The prosecution produced 17 witnesses against him, two of whom are Sub-Inspectors, one is a zaildar, seven are lambarbards, two are contractors and five may be described as miscellaneous. Ahmad Ali is admittedly a well-connected man and himself owns considerable landed property. Out of the prosecution witnesses Sheikh Muhammad Din, Sub-Inspector, P. W. 15, says that while he was the Sub-Inspector of the locality he was investigating a case under S. 379, I. P. C. and during the course of the investigation he came to know that the accused was responsible for the theft of a certain mare. But he says, at the same time, that the accused was not challaned and it was a mere suspicion. He further says that during the time (from February to July 1928) when he was the Sub-Inspector the accused was never suspected except in the case of the mare. Now one Budha had lost his mare and according to this witness the accused was suspected of having stolen it. Budha appears as P. W. 9 and says that he did not know if the accused had got the theft committed and that he did not suspect him. Chaudhari Khuda Bakhsh, P. W. 17, is another Sub-Inspector. He was the officer in-charge of the place from 1924 to 1926. He states that he never made a written report against the accused, that he did not find any material to start proceedings against him and that he does not remember if he ever summoned him on suspicion. Some of the prosecution witnesses have stated that five bullocks belonging to Sheo Nand, P. W. 7, had been stolen and that the accused had been suspected. But Sheo Nand (P. W. 7) gives the accused a good character and in fact his whole evidence supplies a good refutation of the case set up by the prosecution against him. He clearly says that about a year ago he had suspected the accused when five of his bullocks had been stolen. He admits that he had suspected the accused because there was enmity between him and the accused at the time and that afterwards an oath was taken on behalf of the accused that he had not stolen them. He is quite emphatic that he had not seen the bad character of the accused. In cross-examination he says that he had been living in mauza Wahn for a period of 10 or 11 years and that during this period, with the exception of the case of the theft of the bullocks, he had never heard any complaint against the accused and that on the other hand the accused associated with respectable people and not with bad characters. He also says that he personally satisfied himself that the accused had not committed the theft of his bullocks. This evidence being of an important prosecution witness against whom no allegation of hostility has been put forward, goes a long way to demolish the case for the prosecution.

Khuda Bakhsh, P. W. 2, is a lambarbardar. He says that he did not know of any suspicion against the accused. It is true that several of the prosecution witnesses have stated that the accused has a bad reputation, but beyond these vague statements nothing definite has been brought out against him. Witnesses like Des Raj P. W. 3 and Baha-wal P. W. 14 are men of no position and their evidence is worthless.

On the side of the defence after eliminating the evidence of Nazir, Ahmed, D. W. 1, Ahmad Bakhsh, D. W. 7 Nur Ilahi, D. W. 8, and Raja Mahmud, D. W. 9, who are related to the accused and are big landed proprietors, there still remains the evidence of 29 witnesses. Six of these witnesses are lambarbards or sarbrah lambarbards, eight are sahlukars and the rest are fairly substantial zamindars. The learned Magistrate has, as already stated, brushed aside the evidence of these witnesses in a perfunctory manner. I cannot however imagine why all these witnesses, coming from the various sections of society and belonging to different communities, should come forward and falsely give a good character to the accused if he is really a man of bad character. I find a number of Hindu sahukars paying income-tax who say that the accused enjoys a good reputation. I have read the evidence of all these witnesses and need not reproduce it in this judgment in extenso. It is certainly both on account of its quality and quantity, sufficient to rebut the case for the prosecution. I have already noted that several of the prosecution witnesses also give the accused a good character and do not support the accusation against him. It has been laid down in many judgments that when the evidence for the defence is at least as good as that for the prosecution, then the order under S. 110 should not be passed. In this case in my judgment, the evidence for the defence coupled with the evidence of several of the witnesses for the prosecution already noted is decidedly superior to the rest of the evidence for the prosecution.

The District Magistrate observes that "the remaining suspicions against the accused do not relate to theft or receiving stolen property, or to other matters mentioned in Cls. (a) to (e), S. 110, Criminal P. C., but they clearly show that he is a man of desperate and dangerous nature."

He then refers to certain incidents, one of which was that the accused was caught while committing adultery with a Mussalli woman and got a beating. The District Magistrate refers to several alleged false cases brought against various persons by the accused in one of which he is said to have extorted a large sum of money. The District Magistrate on these materials was apparently of opinion that the case against the accused fell within the purview of Cl. (f), S. 110, Criminal P.C. The Public Prosecutor who appeared to support the Magistrate's order did not attempt to elucidate these general observations of the Magistrate by anything on the record. Besides, the mere fact that a man happens to be of a litigious disposition does not bring his case within Cl. (f), S. 110 and if any authority were needed it would be found in Ishwari Dutt v. Emperor (1). The same remark applies to the incident of the accused's misconduct: Arun Samanta v. Emperor (2). This case is a clear authority that such a behaviour, even if it is established, does not bring the case against the accused under Cl. (f), S. 110, Criminal P. C.

After a perusal of the entire evidence on the record I am satisfied that the order under S. 110, read with S. 118, Criminal P. C., against the accused cannot stand. I therefore allow the application for revision and set aside the order of the Courts below.

The accused is a Sufedposh and therefore occupies a position of some importance and responsibility. In view of the observations of the District Magistrate, that he was caught flagrante delicto while committing adultery with a Mussalli woman and received a beating, the desirability of his continuing to hold the position of a Sufedposh may be considered by the proper authorities. This however is a matter which does not directly arise out of the application and I am not concerned with it.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1123 of 1930, Decided on 20th September 1930, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Jhelum, D/- 18th August 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367—Judgment consisting of few notes on arguments and somewhat vague conclusions is no judgment.

A judgment which does not comply with the provisions of S. 367, but consists of a few notes on the arguments of counsels and a somewhat vague conclusion, is no judgment. [P 1231 C 1]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 325—Grievous hurt by stone thrown from unknown distance—Extra punishment is not called for.

Where two or more persons are tried for simple hurts, and a grievous hurt caused by a stone thrown from an unknown distance, even were it definitely held that a certain man was identified as the person who threw the stone, no extra punishment would be called for unless the stone is thrown, at very close quarters. For mere throwing of stone is not as serious an offence as the wielding of a lathi.

Judgment.—In this case ten men have been convicted under Ss. 147, 149 and 325, and in the cross case nine persons, with whom they are said to have fought, have also been convicted. These nine are said to have inflicted twenty-two injuries, whereas the accused in this case are said to have inflicted six. Five of these were simple; one was grievous and was caused by a stone thrown from an unknown distance, striking Ghulam Muhammad, an old man, in the eye and blinding him. The sentences passed were two months rigorous imprisonment and fines of Rs. 10 on eight of the accused, and on two four months' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 5 fine. On appeal to the District Magistrate the sentences on the seven were upheld and the sentences of three were reduced to the terms already undergone.

The judgment is most unsatisfactory, in fact it is no judgment at all in that it does not comply with the provisions of S. 367, Criminal P. C., and consists of a few notes on the arguments of counsel and a somewhat vague conclusion. I draw the special attention of the District Magistrate to S. 367 and the many rulings based thereon which are summarized at p. 314, Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure. Only three men have come up on revision. The two who have been found guilty by the trial Magistrate of causing grievous hurt to Ghulam Muhammad, and a third Khuda Bakhsh, who is undergoing imprisonment in default of payment of his fine. The finding as regards the two is that they caused the grievous hurt, but only one stone struck Ghulam Muhammad in the eye and two men cannot have thrown it. The finding is very unsatisfactory and even, were it definitely held that a certain man was identified as the person who threw the stone, the extra punishment would not I think be called for; for unless the stone is thrown at very close quarters mere throwing of a stone is not, in my opinion, as serious an offence as the wielding of a lathi. The sentences are also unsatisfactory in that they inflict fines in addition to sentences of imprisonment without there being any reason for them. In the case of the two principal accused, Mozam and Muhammad Bakhsh, I reduce the sentence to the amount of imprisonment already undergone, and taking up the case of all the accused, I remit all the fines. Those which have been paid will be refunded.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn No. 493 of 1930, Decided on 19th September 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 17th February 1930.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 403 — Charge under S. 291, Penal Code — S. 403 is no bar to subsequent proceedings under S. 188, Penal Code, as they cannot be taken without complaint under Criminal P. C., S. 195.

Where a person has been proceeded against under S. 291, Penal Code, for flagrant disobedience of an order of the Court, to discontinue a nuisance, and acquitted before anything can be done against such person under S. 188, Penal Code, a complaint is necessary under S. 195, Criminal P. C., and S. 403 is no bar to such proceedings. [P 1231 C 2]

Zafarullah Khan—for Petitioners.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Ten men have been convicted under S. 188 and their appeals have been dismissed by the Sessions Judge. The order which forms the subject-matter of the case was passed by Sardar Autar Singh and was to the effect that they were to discontinue slaughtering cattle within a certain area. They are all butchers. They are held to have continued to do so, a flagrant disobedience of the order, and action was taken against them and they were convicted under S. 291 of continuing the nuisance. Their appeal was dismissed, but their application for revision was accepted in this Court.

Proceedings were then taken against them under S. 188 and they were convicted under that section and their appeals were dismissed. They have now presented an application for revision and the first point made by counsel is that S. 403, Criminal P. C., is a bar to the present proceedings which would, I think, be quite true were it not for S. 195 to which my attention has been drawn by Mr. Soni. Under that section a complaint is necessary before anything can be done under S. 188 and in the absence of that complaint the charge could not have been framed to cover that section. This objection therefore fails.

On the merits counsel has taken various objections, such as that the Sessions Judge has apparently not relied upon the prosecution evidence in that he has not referred to it and has relied upon an admission, which was not made by the accused. This is correct in that the Sessions Judge did not refer in so many words, as he should have done, and however briefly, to the evidence for the prosecution. I have therefore examined the judgment of the trial Court and have read portions of the evidence. I find that on the merits the conviction is good although it is not proved when each butcher slaughtered an animal; but I am satisfied on the evidence, and especially on that of Mr. Pool, who went to the spot and actually saw what was happening, that each of the accused who has been convicted did disobey the order of Sardar Autar Singh and did slaughter animals within the prohibited area after that order had been passed. The sentences are not, in my opinion, excessive. I dismiss the application and confirm the sentences.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. 181 of 1930, Decided on 4th August 1930, made by Sess. Judge, Etah, D/- 20th March 1930.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 526 (8) and (1)—S. 526 (8), applicable only when party notifies his intention to apply for transfer—Onus is on applicant to prove it.

Section 526 (8) applies only where the complainant or the accused notifies to the Court, before which his case is pending, his intention to make an application for transfer to the High Court. The onus lies on the applicants to show that the information required by S. 526 was given to the Magistrate. [P 1232 C 2]

L. W. Roy—for Applicants.

M. Waliullah and Nanak Chand—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Etah recommending that the convictions of five persons under Ss: 147, 352 and 447, I. P. C., and sentences of one month's rigorous imprisonment and fines should be set aside. The ground of the recommendation is that the Honorary Third Class Magistrate before whom the accused were tried did not comply with the provisions of S. 526 (8), Criminal P. C., because he did not grant a sufficient adjournment for the accused to apply for a transfer. This subsection applies only where the complainant or the accused notifies to the Court before which the case is pending his intention to make an application under S. 526. S. 526, sub-S. (1) refers to the High Court, and the whole section deals only with applications for transfer made to the High Court. It has to be shown therefore by the applicant in revision that the Honorary Magistrate was informed that the accused intended to make an application to the High Court for transfer. Two applications are relied on by the learned counsel for the applicant in revision. The first application is dated 21st December 1929 and merely states that the accused want their case to be transferred to another Court and ask that the case should be postponed for 15 days. The second application of 23rd December merely refers to the first application. In neither of these applications is there any statement that the accused intended to apply to the High Court for a transfer under S. 526. The applicants in revision have not furnished any evidence by way of affidavit or otherwise to show that they had any such intention.

So far as the record goes it is apparent that their intention was merely to apply to the District Magistrate, and the learned Sessions Judge notes that an application to the District Magistrate by the accused dated 20th December 1929 was shown to him. He states that he is forwarding this application to this Court, but neither counsel nor the Peshkar could discover this application on the record. Its (contents) therefore are uncertain, for on the one hand the Sessions Judge states that it was not an application for transfer and on the other hand the Honorary Magistrate stated that it was an application for transfer. Be that as it may, the onus lies on the applicants in revision to show that the information required by S. 526, sub-S. (8) was given to the Honorary Magistrate. They have failed to show that such information was given. Accordingly, there is nothing illegal in the trial, and there is no ground on which this Court could interfere in revision. Therefore the reference is not accepted. Let the record be returned.

BROWN AND BAGULEY, JJ.

U Ko Ko Gyi—Applicant.

v.

U San Mya—Opposite Party.

Civil Misc. Appln. No. 5 of 1930, Decided on 24th June 1930, from order of Dist. Judge, Sagaing..

Legal Practitioners Act, S.13 — Duty of barrister allowing a client to give his version of case in full without warning him that he had not yet accepted the case and that other side had approached him to represent them in the matter, and that he had not declined their offer — Barrister subsequently engaged by other side — Though there is no misconduct Court is justified in refusing to allow barrister to appear for other side.

A, a barrister, allowed a client S to see him and to give his version of the case in full without warning him that he had not yet accepted the case and therefore could not regard himself as his advocate, and without warning him that the other side had approached him to represent them in the matter, and that he had not declined their offer. Subsequently A was engaged by the other side.

Held: that there could be no doubt that S reposed confidence in A by discussing the case in the way he did. [P 1236 C 1]

Held further: that the conduct of A could not be regarded as professional misconduct but the case came within the ambit. "Counsel ought not to accept a brief against a party even though the party refuse to retain him, in any case in which he would be embarrassed in the discharge of his duty by reason of confidence reposed in him by that party." And the Court is justified in holding that it would not be fair to S to allow A to appear for the other side. (1897-01) 2 U. B. R. 368; (1910-13) 1 U. B. R. 50; 26 Bom. 423 and A.I.R. 1917 P. Lutter—for Applicant.

Chatterjee—for Mandalay Advocates Association.

Baguley, J.—This is an application filed by U Ko Ko Gyi, Bar-at-Law, an advocate of this Court, asking that an order passed by the District Judge of Sagaing refusing to allow him to appear in a certain civil regular suit in his Court may be set aside. The facts of the case have to be sought in affidavits filed by U Ko Ko Gyi himself, by San Mya, the respondent and by one U Sein, a pleader who apparently is in the habit of acting as a junior with U Ko Ko Gyi. San Mya is the husband and authorized agent of one Ma Ma Gale, who is interested in the partition of the estate of Paw Shan, deceased. The partition of this estate has been referred to arbitration, and it would appear that some of the parties concerned took exception to the arbitrator's award and desired to file a suit to have the award set aside. Ma Ma Gale was one of the dissatisfied heirs, and San Mya was charged with the task of seeing to the filing of the suit. On 3rd May 1929 he saw U Sein and asked him to introduce him to U Ko Ko Gyi. U Sein took him to U Ko Ko Gyi's house and, leaving him in the sitting room, went into an inner room to see U Ko Ko Gyi. According to U Ko Ko Gyi's affidavit, U Sein came in to him and told him that San Mya was waiting outside to see him in connexion with Paw Shan's estate, and at the same time told him then that he had already been approached by one of the other heirs to retain U Ko Ko Gyi if litigation arose in connexion with the estate. U Ko Ko Gyi expressed an unwillingness to see San Mya if that were the case, but on U Sein saying that San Mya was a gentleman of some standing, out of courtesy he went to see him with the intention of speaking to him about fees only. He did not mention to San Mya that he had already been approached by the other side. Nevertheless he allowed San Mya to give him an outline of the case, and on U Sein intervening, saying that the fees should be settled first, he said that he would have to know the amount of labour that the case would involve. U Sein or San Mya said that the papers should be shown to U Ko Ko Gyi in order to enable him to settle the fees. The affidavits filed by both sides agree on this point. San Mya left the house in entire ignorance of the fact that U Ko Ko Gyi was considering appearing for the opposite party.

On 5th May San Mya returned again with all the connected papers. He says that when he saw U Ko Ko Gyi, he showed him the file of papers; U Ko Ko Gyi went through the award and some side notes of his and also the deed of submission to arbitration and other papers, and said that they had good grounds. He says that he told U Ko Ko Gyi that he had studied the facts of the whole case and showed him the notes taken by him in the course of his preparation for the B. L. Examination with regard to the law of arbitration. He discussed with U Ko Ko Gyi the terms of the deed of reference and some important aspects of the award and also told him the line of attack and the probable line of defence coupled with his reasons and arguments. After this U Sein suggested that they had better settle the question of fees as U Ko Ko Gyi had spent about an hour over the case already, and a discussion, with regard to fees took place.

Then U Sein advised him to consult the other plaintiffs; so he left the house. U Ko Ko Gyi's version of this interview is not exactly the same; he says that San Mya started the conversation by talking about the case without making any reference to fees. In the course of the conversation, he admits San Mya showed him the reference to arbitration and the award, which he glanced over and read in parts. He says he did not read the side notes, and in fact, he does not remember seeing any. He says that San Mya brought out four points against the award, which is obviously his way of referring to what San Mya speaks of as "the facts of the whole case the line of attack and the probable line of defence." U Ko Ko Gyi says that the discussion was with regard to the four points generally and not with reference to the particular facts of the case. It is difficult to understand exactly how this could be discussed without reference to the facts of the case, as two of the points, which U Ko Ko Gyi says San Mya brought out were the fact that the arbitrator took Rs. 10,000 as remuneration without the heirs agreeing to it, and further the fact that he misappropriated some valuable articles. U Ko Ko Gyi says that he did not stop San Mya in his expounding of the case, out of delicacy and because of his position, but he did not allow himself to be committed by any statement. He says that he told San Mya that he might have some good points, but that it was difficult to get an award set aside and he admits that he referred San Mya to a ruling in the Rangoon series of Law Reports. He then agrees with San Mya in saying that U Sein, who was present except for a short while, politely stopped San Mya and asked him to settle the fees first; whereupon he felt relieved. He says that he named certain amounts as the fees which he would accept, but San Mya made no offer, and finally went away. After this U Ko Ko Gyi accepted the brief of the other side, and it is because of this that the District Judge has refused him permission to appear.

It will be noted that right up to the time that San Mya left the house on the second occasion there is no suggestion that anyone had given him the least inkling of the fact that the other side had intimated their intention to engage U Ko Ko Gyi on their behalf and that he was considering accepting the brief for the other side.

An affidavit has been filed by U Sein, but it really does not throw much further light on what has happened, and as this affidavit was not filed by U Ko Ko Gyi before the District Judge; it is, to say the least, doubtful whether it ought to be accepted now. The affidavit however is really of little value.

It seems quite clear therefore that U Ko Ko Gyi allowed San Mya to see him and to give him his version of the case in full without warning him that he had not yet accepted the case and therefore could not regard himself as his advocate, and without warning him that the other side had approached him to represent them in this matter and that he had not declined their offer. There can be no doubt whatsoever that U Ko Ko Gyi's action in this matter was not correct; he should never have allowed San Mya to disclose his case in the way in which he did; he should have held him down to a discussion of the terms on which he would accept the brief, and after getting a rough outline of the facts of the case to enable him to see what figure he was prepared to accept for the brief, he should have named his terms and either accepted the brief or rejected it completely. Mr. Lutter who argued this application on behalf of U Ko Ko Gyi admitted that it was unfortunate that his client acted as he did. Mr. Chatterjee who appeared on behalf of the Advocates' Association, Mandalay, went further and said the whole blame lay on San Mya, and that if anything has happened to his detriment he had only himself to blame for disclosing the case before he had briefed U Ko Ko Gyi, paid him his fees and so made him his advocate. This view I am quite unable to accept. San Mya may be a Myook and may have studied for the degree of B. L. but in litigation he was acting as a private party; and in such a case an advocate has no right to attribute his own mistakes to his client and, as I have stated, his own counsel in this Court did not attempt to do so. I hope Mr. Chatterjee is using his own views in this argument and is not advancing the view as the considered opinion of the Mandalay Bar.

U Ko Ko Gyi's statement that he allowed San Mya to go on out of a feeling of delicacy and because of his position, I am unable to comprehend. San Mya is a Myook and a Township Officer. U Ko Ko Gyi is a Barrister-at-Law of many years standing and for some years occupied the position of a District Judge, and I am unable to understand such a hypersensitive sense of delicacy; it was his duty to prevent him from discussing the case until he had accepted the brief, more particularly when he had it fresh in his mind; for he was warned by U Sein only a minute or two before the first interview, that the other side had already intimated their desire to retain him for the same litigation.

The learned District Judge has refused U Ko Ko Gyi permission to appear following the dictum laid down in Maung Mya U v. Sun Singh (1), a case in which, it seems to me, the facts were considerably weaker than the facts disclosed by the affidavits in the present case. It is true there is a foot-note by the learned Judicial Commissioner who passed the order to the effect that it had been brought to his notice that the dictum was an obiter, but he states that he could not reconsider the matter till it came judicially before him, but that, as at present advised, the rule seemed to him to be an obvious one.

Mr. Lutter for U Ko Ko Gyi drew our attention to Mr. — v. Tin Byu U (2), in which an advocate who had appeared on behalf of a client in a certain litigation appeared against that client in another suit connected with the same facts seven years later. It is to be noted however that the head-note merely says that the circumstances did not warrant an order prohibiting the advocate from appearing, showing clearly that this is a ruling on the facts of the case.

Another ruling with regard to advo-

(1) [1897-1901] 2 U. B. R. 368.

(2) [1910-13] 1 U. B. R. 50 = 8 I. O. 1174 = 12 Cr. L. J. 57.

cates is to be found in Pallonji Merwanji v. Kallabhai Lallubhai (3), but in this case the facts are somewhat different: it was one in which an advocate appeared on behalf of two clients who had subsequently fallen out; and the question decided was whether he could subsequently appear for one of them. As an addendum to this ruling, there is a judgment passed by West, J., as a Judge of Sadar Court in Sind, which gives reference to a large number of English cases which I am unable to consult in original here.

The principle that emerges from all these cases appears to be that if an advocate had appeared on behalf of a client, and had in the course of his employment been made acquainted with any secrets of his client, he is not permitted to appear against that client after the termination of his employment if he might utilize those secrets to his former clients' prejudice.

The difficulty in the present case is that U Ko Ko Gyi was never actually retained on behalf of San Mya, but he did discuss the case to a certain extent when San Mya was under the impression that he might succeed in persuading him to accept the brief. There is authority for saying that a barrister consulted as a friend is not in the same position as a barrister consulted professionally: vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 2, p. 396; but it cannot be said in this case that San Mya was consulting U Ko Ko Gyi as a friend: he had never met him before the 3rd May and his interview with him was solely with a view to retain him in this case.

On p. 93 of the Bombay ruling before mentioned, it is stated in connexion with the question of whether a barrister may or may not accept a brief:

" the barrister must in this as in other matters often be left to the guidance of that sense of duty which Erle, C. J., thought would preserve its sensitiveness more unimpaired the less it was affected by any idea of legal obligation."

It seems to me that this case comes within the ambit of a statement to be found in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 2, para. 661.

"Counsel ought not to accept a brief against a party, even though the party refuse to retain him, in any case in which he would be embarrassed in the discharge of his duty by reason of confidence reposed in him by that party."

(3) [1888] 12 Bom. 85.

The same principle is laid down in para. 618, p. 407. The present case is not identical, it is rather the converse; but I think the converse of the principle will apply. There can be no doubt that San Mya did repose confidence in U Ko Ko Gyi by discussing the case in the way in which he did and in the way in which U Ko Ko Gyi allowed him to do, and although in para. 680, before quoted, it is further laid down:

"... there can be no duty towards a person who has not been the client of the counsel, unless the fact of confidence having been reposed is clearly made known to the counsel," in this case, it must be held that the fact that confidence had been placed in him was known to U Ko Ko Gyi despite his assertion that he allowed San Mya to go on talking without paying any attention to what he was saying. This he certainly had no right to do, and even though he may not now be aware of all that San Mya said to him. San Mya remembers what he said to U Ko Ko Gyi, and if, in the course of the case, U Ko Ko Gyi by a process of independent thought, did seize upon a point which San Mya had mentioned to him as one of his weak points, San Mya would never be able to get out of his mind the idea that U Ko Ko Gyi got that point from him, and the sense of grievance would certainly remain.

It is true that, judged by the standard laid down in Damodar Venkatesh v. Bhavanishankar Mangesh (4) U Ko Ko Gyi's conduct in this case does not come below what is described as "the extreme low-water mark of professional conduct" and therefore cannot be regarded as professional misconduct, but these are not disciplinary proceedings, and I think that even when an advocate has not overstepped the line, the Court can still refuse to allow him to appear in the case. The Full Bench in that case definitely laid down that they did not expect this extreme low-water mark of professional conduct to be the standard by which the pleaders of their presidency should regulate their professional behaviour, and with this expectation I am in entire agreement. For these reasons I would dismiss this application. No order as to costs as the respondent has appeared in person and filed a written argument.

Brown, J.—The District Judge during the pendency of a case before him refused to allow the appellant to appear as an advocate for some of the respondents. The present appeal or application against that order is made, not by any of the parties to the case, but by the advocate personally. It is not clear to me how we have power to issue any order to the District Judge on such an application. Possibly the power is exercisable under the provisions of S. 107, Government of India Act. But however that may be, I do not think it is necessary to decide on this point as I am not satisfied that any case for interference has been made out.

As to the exact details of what happened the parties are at variance, but on certain of the main facts there is no dispute. On 3rd May 1929 the respondent approached the appellant and had an interview with him with regard to the case now pending before the District Court. At that time the appellant knew that there was a probability of his being approached by the other side to represent them in the litigation. He did not however inform the respondent of this fact and heard from him a general outline of the case. The question of fees arose and the appellant said he could not name any amount unless he knew the amount of labour the case might require and he then suggested that he should see some of the papers and settle the fees. Two days later U San Mya came back with certain papers and had another conversation with the appellant over the case. The question in issue between the parties was whether a certain award by arbitrators should be set aside. The respondent's case was that it should be set aside. At this second interview with the appellant he produced the reference and the award. The appellant read the reference and also some part of the award. There was obviously a somewhat lengthy interview and the appellant admits that U San Mya brought out four points which he said would vitiate the award. Firstly that the arbitrator took Rs. 10,000 as his remuneration without the heirs agreeing to it; secondly, that he had misappropriated some valuable articles; thirdly, that he refused to examine witnesses; and fourthly, that his award was not in accordance with the Buddhist law. U San Mya says that he told the appellant the probable line of attack and the probable line of defence coupled with his reasons and arguments. The appellant does not admit this but he does admit that U San Mya had some discussion with him on the four points generally that he mentioned. He admits that he told him that there might be some good points but that it was rather difficult to get an award set aside and that he referred him to a ruling in the Rangoon series. Finally the question of fees was discussed and the consultation ended. Subsequently, the appellant was engaged by the other side. I do not wish to suggest that the appellant has not to the best of his ability described what took place at the two interviews; but, it is clear that the second interview, at any rate, was of some duration and that various points in connexion with the case were discussed at some length. It is impossible for either side to have an exact recollection of all that passed. But after such consultation it seems to me impossible to hold that the appellant was in a position to take up the case for the other side without making use of what he had heard from the respondent.

The learned District Judge relied on the Upper Burma case of Maung Mya U v. Sun Singh (1) in which it was held that "it is misconduct from a professional point of view for an advocate after being consulted in his capacity of advocate about a case and after learning particulars of the case as stated by one side, to undertake the case in the interest of the opposite party. The fact that there was no definite engagement by the first party makes no difference."

I do not consider that it can be held that the action of the applicant in this case amounts to professional misconduct, but I think that in the circumstances of the case the trial Judge was justified in holding that it would not be fair to the respondent to allow the appellant to appear. It is laid down in para. 661, Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 2, that:

"Counsel ought not to accept a brief against a party even though the party refuse to retain him, in any case in which he would be embarrassed in the discharge of his duty by reason of confidence reposed in him by that party."

In the case of Mary Lilian Hira Devi v. Kunwar Digbijai Singh (5) (at p. 1442 of 21 C. W. N.), their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked:

"Before concluding, their Lordships must express their complete assent to the observations of the learned Judges of the High Court on the impropriety of a legal practitioner who has acted for one party in a dispute, such as there was in this case, acting for the other party in subsequent litigation between them relating to or arising out of that dispute. Such conduct is, to say the least of it, open to misconception, and is likely to raise suspicion in the mind of the original client and to embitter the subsequent litigation."

It is true that it has been held that a strong case must be made out before a Court could grant an injunction restraining a pleader from appearing on behalf of a party in a particular case. That was the view taken in the case of Pallonji Merwanji v. Kallabhai Lallubhai (3). But that was a case for an injunction. The question we have to consider here is not whether we should issue an injunction but whether we should interfere with the action of the District Court in refusing to allow the appellant to appear in that Court. The real test appears to be whether confidential information was acquired by the appellant as the result of the interviews with the respondent which might be of use to him in conducting the case for the other side. The appellant says that there was no such confidential information acquired by him, and I do not wish in any way to question the bona fides of his belief to that effect.

As I have said the interviews between the parties must have been a fairly prolonged one and various points in connexion with the case were clearly discussed at some length. The respondent has not perhaps proved any particular item of confidential information that was imparted, but that would be a difficult matter for him to prove. In the first place, if he did attempt to prove it the confidential information would cease to be confidential; and, in the second place, it would be difficult for him to remember the exact details of all that occurred.

It has been suggested by Mr. Chatterjee who appeared on behalf of the Advocates Association, Mandalay, that the position of advocates will be a difficult one if they are not allowed to hear anything from their respective clients about their cases before accepting a brief on the penalty of being debarred from appearing for the other side. I do not think it is necessary to lay down any such rule for the purposes of this case, nor would I wish to lay down such a rule. But in the present case the appellant at the time he was consulted by the respondent knew that he was likely to be approached by the other side. It would have been an easy matter for him, to warn the respondent that this was the case and that the respondent should be careful not to disclose anything confidential to him. He did not give this information but he interviewed the respondent twice and on the second occasion heard the respondent at considerable length. In fact he does not really himself say that it was necessary for him to hear so much about the case in order to decide whether he should accept the brief. What he says in his affidavit is that:

"Out of delicacy and for his position I did not stop him, but I did not allow myself to commit to any statement or answer."

In all the circumstances of the case, although there is no direct proof of any confidential information having passed, I think it is a fair presumption that some such communication did pass from the respondent to the appellant. The respondent's action in objecting to the appellant's appearance was taken very promptly. The appellant appeared on 12th September 1929 and the respondent filed this application on 14th September. I am not satisfied that the action taken by the District Judge in the matter was wrong and I therefore agree that this application must be dismissed.

Chit Hlaing Maung—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 407-B of 1930, Decided on 24th September 1930, from order of First Addl. Magistrate, Thaton, in Criminal Trial No. 97 of 1930.

* Criminal P. C. (5 of 1828), S. 403—Person acquitted of charge of abduction—His subsequent prosecution for alleged rape of same female during the abduction is barred.

Where a person has been acquitted of the charge of abduction, he cannot be subsequently prosecuted for the alleged rape of the female involved in the abduction prosecution during the abduction in question. On the grounds of public policy too, non-success in a prosecution for abduction, ought not to entitle the prosecutrix to bring further evidence to support a rape alleged to have been committed during the pendency of the abduction, even when further evidence is relied upon: A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 252, Appl. [P 1288 C-2]

K. N. Damgali—for Applicant.

Sutherland—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application to quash a prosecution. The circumstances are as follows. The petitioner together with others was originally put on his trial for abduction. He was acquitted. The present prosecution relates to the alleged rape of the female involved in the abduction prosecution, during the abduction in question. In effect, the argument in the petitioner's behalf is based on the plea of "autrefois acquit." I have already expressed my opinion in the case of Yeek Kuk v. Emperor (1) that as far as the Criminal Procedure Code is concerned the test of the success of the plea of "autrefois acquit" lies in the similarity of the offences under consideration. I went so far as to say that only distinct offences could be considered to defeat the plea.

Applying the test I do not consider that the offences of the abduction and rape of the same woman are so distinct that an acquittal on the first charge will not bar subsequent proceedings on the second. On the grounds of public policy too, I cannot see that non-success in a prosecution for abduction, ought to entitle the prosecutrix to bring further evidence to support a rape alleged to have been committed during the pendency of the abduction in question, even when further evidence is relied upon. It seems to me that such a proceeding is contrary both to good law and good sense. I therefore accede to the application and order the rape proceedings to be quashed.

(Allahabad)

BOYS AND KISCH, JJ.

In the matter of A Vakil of Beawar.

Misc. Case No. 168 of 1930, Decided on 29th April 1930.

(A) High Court.— Courts at Ajmere are not subordinate to Allahabad High Court except in two comparatively rarer matters.

Broadly speaking the Courts at Ajmere are not subordinate to the High Court of Allahabad except in two comparatively rare matters. [P 1240 C 2]

(b) Legal Practitioner— Allahabad High Court can take action against vakil or advocate on its roll but practising at Ajmere even though Ajmere Court does not choose to deal with him— Regulation 9 of 1926— (Obiter.)

Obiter.— The mere fact that the Ajmere Court might have power to deal with a legal practitioner practising there and did not choose to exercise that power would in no way whatever prevent Allahabad High Court, if it thought fit taking action against that legal practitioner if he was on the rolls of Allahabad High Court as a vakil or an advocate. [P 1240 C 1, 2]

(c) Bar Councils Act (38 of 1926), S. 9, R. 1, Proviso (a)—Scope.

The clause "practised in one or more of the Courts of the Court subordinate to the Allahabad High Court" as used in the rules framed under S. 9 means "practised in one of the Courts in this province." [P 1240 C 2]

Pearl Lal Banerji—for Bar Council.

Shabd Saran and Binod Behari Lal—for Applicant.

Judgment.—This is a case in which the Bench has been constituted to hear an objection by the Bar Council, to enrolling a gentleman as an advocate of this Court who is already enrolled as a vakil of the Court. The applicant for enrolment, Mr. Raj Narain, took his degree of Bachelor of Laws at Lucknow University in 1928. On 24th July 1928, he was enrolled as a vakil of this Court. He subsequently went to Ajmere. His counsel, Mr. Shabd Saran, cannot inform us in virtue of what authority Mr. Raj Narain began to practise in Ajmere, but we have little doubt that we are right in assuming that he applied to be enrolled as a pleader entitled to practise in Ajmere, under Regn. 9 of 1926. He now has applied for the entry of his name as an advocate on the rolls of this Court by virtue of the rules made under S. 9, Bar Councils Act (38 of 1926), and in particular, of R. 1, Proviso (a) which reads as follows :

" Provided, firstly, that a person who is a graduate in law of any such scheduled University and has been enrolled as a vakil prior to 31st March 1929, may be admitted to the roll of advocates on presenting a certificate that he has bona fide practised in one or more of the Courts subordinate to the Allahabad High Court for a period of not less than one year."

The only contention that has arisen in this matter is as to whether the Courts at Ajmere can be regarded for the purposes of enrolment as an advocate here as Courts subordinate to the Allahabad High Court. It is clear that generally speaking the Ajmere Courts are not subordinate to this Court in the matter of civil jurisdiction: see S. 3 (2), Regn. 9 of 1926 (published in the Government of India Gazette on 2nd October 1926 and which came into force on 23rd December 1926). For the applicant it has been urged that in certain special matters the Ajmere Courts are subordinate to this Court. In respect of two of these matters we do not think that the contention is well-founded. We have been referred to the fact that in certain cases of disputes as to income-tax, the income-tax officer can or must refer the matter under S. 66 (a) to this Court. But the fact that an income-tax officer must refer a matter to this Court can have no bearing on the question whether the Courts of Ajmere are subordinate to this Court or not. Similarly reference has been made to the fact that the repealed Press Act, 1 of 1910 (which it is suggested has been embodied in a recent Ordinance) provided in certain cases for this Court considering the propriety of an order of Government forfeiting a press in Ajmere. This again can manifestly have no bearing on the relations between the Courts in Ajmere and this Court. There is, however, greater force in the argument for the applicant in reference to two other cases where this Court does exercise jurisdiction in matters arising in or dealt with by the Courts in Ajmere.

Regulation 9 of 1926, S. 27, expressly saves jurisdiction over European British subjects from the provision which declares the Judicial Commissioner to be the High Court in matters on the criminal side, and another notification declares this Court to be the High Court in such matters. Similarly in certain matters this Court is the High Court for purposes of matrimonial jurisdiction. Further on behalf of the applicant we have been referred to three cases in which a man practising in Ajmere has been admitted to the rolls of this Court as an advocate on the strength of his having practised in Ajmere. But those three cases are irrelevant to the one before us for in all three of them the one year's practice which was relied upon was prior in date to the coming in force of Regn. 9 of 1926, and therefore such practice was at the time of the practice capable of constituting a good qualification, the Courts in Ajmere being at that time subordinate to this Court.

There is only one of the contentions before us on behalf of the Bar Council with which we think it necessary to deal. It has been urged that the present rules framed under Regn. 9 of 1926 make full provisions for dealing with offences of the nature of professional misconduct committed by a vakil practising in the Ajmere Courts; and it is suggested that it would be undesirable to admit anybody to the rolls of the advocate here if he could not be dealt with by this Court. If there were any force in that argument it would be a good reason for striking anybody off the rolls of vakil of this Court on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to deal with him. But in fact we think it is desirable to put plainly on record our opinion that the mere fact that the Ajmere Court might have power to deal with a legal practitioner and did not choose to exercise that power, would in no way, whatever prevent this Court, if it thought fit, taking action against that legal practitioner if he was on the rolls of this Court as a vakil or as an advocate.

The only consideration, then, which are really material to the decision of this application are, in our opinion, firstly, that broadly speaking the Courts at Ajmere are not subordinate to this Court; and, secondly, that in two comparatively rare matters those Courts are subordinate. It remains for us to interpret the word "subordinate" as used in the rules framed under S. 9 in the spirit in which we think there can be no doubt that it was used. There is no reason whatever for supposing that in using the word "subordinate" the framers of the rules had in mind the very exceptional cases in which the Ajmere Courts are subordinate to this Court. We think therefore that the right way of interpretation of the proviso with which we are dealing is that "practised in one or more of the Courts subordinate to the Allahabad High Court" means "practised in one of the Courts in this province." We think, therefore, that the application for enrolment as an advocate was rightly refused. The applicant will be informed that his application is refused.
